For the World's Crisis.

HOW LONG, O LORD!

How long this night of weeping, Lord?
How long shall grief prevail?
How long shall evil, all-abhorred,
With fearful strength assail?

How long shall these frail hearts betray
The trusts thy grace bestowed?
How long in weakness shall we stray
From thee, our Shepherd God?

How long in deepest grief be laid
Our heads, for grieving thee?
How long defiled by e'en sin's shade,
Our blood-washed garments be?

How long shall these sad hearts be torn,
By anguish deep be riven,
For loved ones wand'ring all forlorn,
From God, and life, and heaven?

How long the foes of God and man
With subtlest skill and care,
By deep Satanic thought and plan,
The unwary soul ensnare?

How long shall nature weep her woes,
And earth bow down in pain?
All eloquent, creation's throes
Beseech thy grace again.

How long shall sickness bow the soul,
The spirit deep distress?
Shall dire diseases hold control,
And demons dark oppress?

How long our great arch-foe malign,
World-wide his terrors spread,
[illegible]
Our life joys to the dead?

Life-giver gracious! who wert dead,
Who lives hence evermore,
Who art our only hope, our Head,
When shall Death's reign be o'er?

To bring with joy, to clothe with life,
Thy jewels, Lord, how long,
Ere thou shalt close the mortal strife,
And give the victor's song?

This night of weeping, Lord, how long?
How long shall grief prevail?
How long shall each unhallowed wrong
With fearful power assail?

THE NEW DOCTRINE.

It would seem remarkably strange, if it were true that the Bible for eighteen centuries had deceived the whole christian church with regard to the resurrection of the unjust. So clearly and explicitly does it declare their coming again to life, and their destiny is so often and in such a variety of ways referred to, in language that involves their resurrection, that during all this period of time it has been the uniform faith of the church. Of course there has always been, and is now, a multitude who, setting aside the christian system, have rejected the doctrine of the resurrection altogether; but among those who have believed in the resurrection of the just, hardly one has doubted that of the unjust.

Since the time of the apostles, according to Abbott's catalogue, some two hundred authors have written upon the resurrection, and two or three thousand have variously presented the subject of man's nature and destiny, but it does not appear (if we except a pamphlet published in 1704, against some who denied the resurrection of the impious; who or what they were I do not know,—not written in English) that the coming forth of the wicked to meet their destiny, whatever it might be, has ever been controverted. But it is now ascertained beyond doubt, it is claimed, that they are not to be raised; that the church have all been wrong in their belief, having been led into a delusion, we must conclude, by receiving the plain and literal declarations of the Scriptures as true.

But why, since this is a subject that is purely doctrinal and not prophetical, may it not have been as correctly understood in the past centuries as in our time? Would not a claim to the contrary appear doubtful and suspicious? And is there any evidence that the Bible in presenting its doctrines makes this an exception to its usual method, so that the real truth is exactly contrary to what its plain language imports? Would not the Bible seem to be at fault if it had by its plain and literal statements always misled the church? Would it have sustained its reputation for "making wise the simple," and guiding the meek into all truth? And who now from reading it, would not surely understand it to teach just what the church in the past have, that all men would be raised from the dead? [illegible] covered that the unjust are not to be raised? For this "new light," which some think shines with such brilliancy, it appears we are altogether indebted to those brethren who, by their faithful and persevering efforts to "advance in knowledge, and by the exercise of their skill and ingenuity in "making every thing clear," have (in a manner which is to them on the whole satisfactory, though not without its difficulties, they say) "brought out this great truth;"—though I marvel that the one who was chiefly instrumental in bringing it out so soon abandoned it, and now teaches the immortality of the soul.

But the methods by which they have obtained such "light," or reached such a conclusion, are very surprising, and if I thought they were correct, I should be greatly perplexed. I could have very little respect for or faith in the Bible. And if it is allowable to take such liberties in the disposition of the sacred oracles that refer to the wicked, why not the same when they refer to the righteous? And then what becomes of our hope? As Bro. Storrs upon this same subject once said, "The method of interpreting Scripture on which this theory depends, unsettles all faith in the Bible, and saps the foundation of christianity." And according to this method, I am certain that the Bible would be of very little use to me. For in that case, we have all been grossly deceived. And what can with certainty be relied upon? For I understand that the foundation on which our hope of future life rests, is God's faithfulness in carrying out or perfecting his whole revealed purpose, and if the resurrection of the entire race is not involved in that, I do not know of any thing that is; and if there should be a failure here, of course I could have no assurance of the rest being accomplished.

But I am well persuaded that our well meaning brethren have not obtained a correct view of the subject, and that the truth, after all, is just what the Bible in plain language affirms, and what all christians have ever believed, and that no part of God's doctrinal truth has been revealed in such a way as to have led every body into error.

THE DEGENERACY OF THE RACE SINCE THE FLOOD.

In Genesis 8: 13, we read of Noah that he removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and behold the face of the ground was dry; when God commanded him to go forth of the ark, with his wife, and sons, and sons' wives, and every living thing, that they might breed abundantly in the earth, and be fruitful and multiply therein. Noah did as God commanded, and He blessed him, as we read—"And God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth." The sons of Noah were Shem, Ham, and Japheth. We read that unto them sons were born there; names we shall not attempt to present in this article, except Nimrod, who became the first monarch. See Gen. 10: 8–10. "He was a mighty hunter before the Lord, and the beginning of his kingdom was Babel." Babel was the beginning of Babylon. Tytler says that Nimrod built Babylon about one hundred and fifty years after the deluge. See his History, p. 17. Beside building Babylon, we notice in Gen. 10: 10, that he founded Erech, Accad, and Calneh. Out of that land, we read, went forth Asshur, or Assur, who built Nineveh, which became the capital of the Assyrian empire. It will also be noticed, from Gen. 10: 10–12, that other cities were founded by Asshur. And we have here also brought to view the generations of Noah and the names of his sons. "These are the sons of Shem, after their families, after their tongue, in their lands, after their nations, . . . after their generation in their nations, and by these were the nations divided in the earth after the flood." "And the whole earth was of one language and of one speech; and it came to pass as they journeyed from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar, and they dwelt there."

In reading from the first and second verses, it will be seen that they concluded to build a city, and a tower whose top should reach unto heaven; the enterprise being for the purpose of saving themselves from being scattered abroad in the earth. But God in his wisdom thought best to confound their language. In the ninth verse we read—"Therefore is the name of it called Babel, because the Lord did there confound the language of all the earth; and from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth." Their scattering resulted, says Weber, in the colonization of the three oldest divisions of the Globe—Asia, Africa, and Europe, forming themselves into different peoples and nations according to the varieties of their language. As men thus scattered, they ceased to worship the only true God, and substituted for their worship the sun and moon. As men dispersed themselves over the earth, the original belief in the one true God (monotheism) was lost, and fell into the worship of many deities (polytheism), adoring the visible works of creation (more particularly the sun and the stars of heaven), instead of their Creator; or else reverencing the operative powers of nature as divine beings.—Weber.

The heathen religion became that of the nations. Ps. 96: 5—"For all the gods of the nations are idols." [illegible] phenomena of nature. p. 159. The priests were often called upon by the kings for information which they could not otherwise obtain. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, called upon the Chaldeans to explain to him a dream that he had forgotten. Dan. 2. Philip, king of Macedon, desired to know of the gods of his future success, and the priest replied. Philip did not lose sight of the conquest of Asia. Full of the mighty project he revolved, he consults the gods to know what would be the event of it. The priest replied, "The victim is already crowned, his end draws nigh, and he will soon be sacrificed." Philip, hearing this, did not hesitate a moment, but interpreted the oracle in his own favor.—Rollin, vol. 4, pp. 594–5.

Alexander the Great wished to know of the priests as to whether Jupiter had allotted to him the empire of the world. He being come into the temple, the senior priest declared him to be the son of Jupiter, and assured him that the god himself bestowed this name upon him. Alexander accepted it with joy, and acknowledged Jupiter as his father. He afterward asked the priest whether his father Jupiter had not allotted him the empire of the whole world. The priest replied that he should be monarch of the universe.—Rollin, vol. 5, p. 159.

The above extracts prove David correct in his statement—"For all the gods of the nations are idols."

Having shown from history how the race for a time degenerated from the worship of the true God, I wish to present the cause. Paul says in his letter to the Romans (1: 21), "Because that when they knew God they glorified him not as God, neither were they thankful, but became vain in their imagination, and their foolish hearts were darkened."

Who are the authors of idol-worshiping? "It was the universal sentiment, both of the church and of heretics, that the demons were the authors, the patrons, and the objects of idolatry. Those rebellious spirits who had been degraded from the rank of angels, and cast down into the infernal pit, were still permitted to roam upon earth, to torment the bodies and to seduce the minds of sinful men. The demons soon discovered and abused the natural propensity of the human heart towards devotion, and, artfully withdrawing the adoration of mankind from their Creator, they usurped the place and honors of the Supreme Deity. By the success of their malicious contrivances, they at once gratified their own vanity and revenge, and obtained the only comfort of which they were yet susceptible,—the hope of involving the human species in the participation of their guilt and misery. It was confessed, or at least it was imagined, that they had distributed among themselves the most important characters of polytheism, one demon assuming the name and attributes of Jupiter, another of Esculapius, a third of Venus, and a fourth of Apollo; and that, by the advantage of their long experience and aerial nature, they were enabled to execute, with sufficient skill and dignity, the parts which they had undertaken. They lurked in the temples, instituted festivals and sacrifices, invented fables, pronounced oracles, and were frequently allowed to perform miracles. The Christians, who, by the interposition of evil spirits, could so readily explain every preternatural appearance, were disposed and even desirous to admit the most extravagant fictions of the Pagan mythology. But the belief of the Christian was accompanied with horror. The most trifling mark of respect to the national worship he considered as a direct homage yielded to the demon, and as an act of rebellion against the majesty of God."—Gibbon, vol. 1, p. 523.

Besides the sentiments of the primitives and heretics, let us notice what Paul has to say of the Gentiles who worship idols—"But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils." 1 Cor. 10: 20, 21.

What effect had the first advent of the Savior upon devil-worshiping? Let us notice the extent of it. The historian says, "An evil one was supposed naturally to reside in every person, who was the author and source of all the corrupt dispositions and unrighteous actions of that person. The driving out of this demon was therefore an essential property of baptism." If every one, then, possessed a demon, and that demon must of necessity be cast out before being baptized, we must conclude, then, that in one day three thousand were cast out; for we read (Acts 2: 4) that "they that gladly received the word were baptized," and the same day three thousand were added to them. The revival did not end there. It continued; and "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." How many embraced the Christian religion from the day of Pentecost and onward through the apostolic age? Many must have embraced it, as the gospel was propagated into every part of the then known world. See Col. 1: 23—"If ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven, whereof I Paul am made a minister." Thus Paul says that he was made a minister of that gospel which was preached to every creature which is under heaven. Those who believed the gospel, abolished their idols. Read 1 Thess. 1: 9—"For themselves show of us what manner of entering in we [illegible] and preach my gospel, and that all would believe it; but, that those who believe and are baptized shall be saved. Paul never looked for a better condition of things prior to the setting up of the kingdom of God in the earth, than existed in his day. Looking down the stream of time to about when Jesus might be looked for to return from heaven, he wrote the following testimony:—"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some should depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." 1 Tim. 4: 1. Here he predicted a revival of the same demonism which existed in his day. This prediction does not allude to heathendom, but to Christendom; as he says they shall fall away from the faith. Who can fall away from the faith? Certainly those who are in the faith. Has this revival begun yet? Yes, in Spiritualism. It began in 1847, in the following way:

The spirits commenced their manifestations in this country by knocking on the door of a house occupied by Mr. Michael Weekman, in Hydesville, Acadia, Wayne county, N. Y., in 1847. Mr. Weekman says that one evening, about the time of retiring, he heard a rapping on the outside door. On opening it he found no one there. He went in for the purpose of retiring, and just before getting into bed heard the rapping repeated. He quickly opened the door, went out and looked around, but found no one. It being frequently repeated, he took hold of the door-latch, and as soon as the knocking was repeated, he sprang out, went round the house, but no one could be found.

One night, a little girl about eight years old was heard to scream; the family ran to her, and as soon as she was able to relate facts, she said she felt something like a hand on the bed and all over her, but was not alarmed till it touched her face. It felt cold. It was some days before she recovered her equanimity. The next family who resided in the house was that of Mr. J. D. Fox. Both Mr. and Mrs. Fox were members of the M. E. church, well known, and of unimpeachable character. They moved into the house where Mr. Weekman had lived, in Dec., 1847, and in March, 1848, first heard the noise. The knocking was so strong as to jar the floor. It was first heard one night, just after the family (except Mr. Fox) were in bed. It continued till they went to sleep, and they were unable to detect the cause. From that time it was continued each night. The 31st of March, the family retired early, and soon heard the knocking. A little girl, twelve years old, endeavored to imitate it, by snapping her fingers, and a response was given by knocking as many times as she snapped. When she stopped the sound ceased. Another girl said, "Now do as I do," and began to strike one hand with the other; the knocks were repeated as before.

When intelligence was thus manifested, Mrs. Fox requested it to count ten. It did so, by rapping ten times. It also, by request, counted the ages of the children correctly. Mrs. Fox questioned it as to its identity. When asked if it was a human being, it was silent.

"Are you a spirit?"

Two raps were given.

"Are you an injured spirit?"

Two raps as before were given. It was finally ascertained that it purported to be the spirit of a pedlar, who had been murdered in that house for money—five hundred dollars—at the age of thirty-one; and that he had left a wife and five children, and his wife had been dead about two years. The neighbors were then, by consent of the spirit, called in, and the questions continued. From this family the manifestations have spread all over the United States and Canadas.—Daniels' Spiritualism, pp. 13–15.

The rapid growth of spiritualism is without a parallel. The following statistics show the number of its adherents, and their books, periodicals, etc., prior to 1863:

There are now in America five hundred public mediums who receive visitors; more than fifty thousand mediums who are reliable in select circles, but are not before the public; about one hundred periodicals; more than five hundred books and pamphlets; five hundred speakers who are considered special public advocates; more than one thousand are regarded as only occasional; nearly two thousand places are opened for public circles, conferences, or lectures, and in many places there are flourishing Sunday Schools. The decisive believers number about two millions; the nominal, five millions; on the eastern continent their number may be reckoned as one million. See Plain Guide to Spiritualism.

But the numbers thus given are but a handful compared with their numbers at present. Many even good persons are falling in with the great satanic delusion.

Spiritualism is again brought to view in Rev. 16: 13, 14—"And I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." This accords with Paul's statement—"Giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." These spirits are said to work miracles. Does spiritualism work miracles? Yes. I might cite the reader to many extracts, if necessary, but one will suffice, taken from an English work, entitled "Spiritualism and Signs of the Times."

"A lady living a few miles out of Bridgeton is asserting not only her power with the spirits in common with all spiritualists, but asserts that she can and does pass out of the body [illegible] grapes and placing on the table around which they are sitting, they all partake of the grapes together."

Spiritualism, or devilism fully developed, is brought to view in Rev. 13: 11–15. It is symbolized by a two-horned beast. "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by the sword, and did live. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed."

In the fifteenth verse we notice that it had power to give life unto the image of the beast. The beast here spoken was before the two-horned beast, and the image should speak and cause that as many as would not worship the image should be killed. The two-horned beast thus symbolizes the development of spiritism, or devilism.

Paul in his epistle to Timothy informs him that spiritism, or devilism, should arise in the last days. Has it arisen? If so, then we can say emphatically that we are living in the last days. THOMAS J. WHITECAR.

HIS SECOND COMING.

"Could christians watch ten thousand years,
Before their Lord himself appears,
Yet as he then shall come at last,
'T were wise, through all the ages past,
To have watched, and waited, and have borne
The scoffer's jest, the worldling's scorn;
But those who watch not in the day,
Will surely sleep the night away.
Lord, make me at all times awake,
And, self-denied, thy cross to take,
Robed for thy nuptial feast in white,
With lamp in hand, and burning bright,
Nor lack of precious oil be mine,
When the loud cry, 'Arise and shine,'
Proclaims thee come in bridal state,
And when preparing is too late."

For the World's Crisis.

MENE, TEKEL.

The angel promised to tell John the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carried her, which had the seven heads and the ten horns. The seventeenth chapter of Revelation is divided thus: 1. The introduction. 2. The version. 3. The interpretation as given by the angel.

In the interpretation the angel informs John that the woman here brought to view is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth. The woman then in this case represents an apostate church, and is said to be the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth, and she is said to be drunken with the blood of the saints, and of the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, her golden cup full, etc. I think there is no doubt as to what this woman represents—the "Roman Catholic church," a corrupt ecclesiastical body, "with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication." In the first verse of this chapter the woman is said to sit upon many waters. But in the third verse we are told she sits upon the beast. How is this apparent discrepancy to be reconciled?

I view, that during her judgment period, she sits upon the many waters, which are said by the angel to represent peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues, and this period of judgment is the same as brought to view in Daniel 7: 26, "To consume and to destroy it unto the end." I view this judgment commenced at the time the woman lost her civil power, between A. D. 1792 and 1809. And from that time onward her position has been that of sitting upon the many waters.

This corrupt woman has been weighed in the balances and found wanting. The handwriting has been distinctly written. The kingdom has been numbered and finished, and the intoxicated mass of this vile institution await the hour of execution, when she shall be utterly destroyed in a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

This woman, then, represents an apostate church. The centre of her operations is at Rome, a city in Italy; about her (on the old Roman earth) are located the kingdoms that have aided and supported her during her days of cruel persecution. It is upon this same territory we may look for the visitations of God's last judgments upon these cruel despotic powers, and also upon the apostate church. This is the place where the beast and the kings of the earth (old Roman earth) are said to gather themselves together for battle against the Lamb.

In connection with the woman, there is brought to view a scarlet-colored beast, with seven heads and ten horns, upon which the woman is said to be seated. What beast is this? Though this beast has some points of resemblance with the seven-headed beast of Rev. 13, yet it is sufficiently distinct. The leopard beast has crowns on his horns. The scarlet-colored beast has no crowns at all, and is therefore a distinct beast; and it occupies in its main features an entirely distinct period in prophetic time, though found on the [illegible] a certain line, and yet "is of the seven" that constitutes the whole line of government. It is said of the ten horns upon this beast, that they had received no kingdom as yet, but received power as kings one hour (same hour) with the beast. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them.

This locates the chronology of this event we have brought to view in Rev. 19: 19, 20. The beast and the kings of the earth (Roman earth) and their armies gathered together to make war against him (the Lamb) that sat on the horse, and against his army. And while they are thus arrayed, the beast is taken, together with the false prophet. These both are cast alive into a lake of fire (destroyed.) There will be at the end a live beast, a beast in existence.

The beast, and the two kings brought to view in Rev. 17, I view to be the same as spoken of in Rev. 19: 19. Their works are the same, and the end of the beast is perdition in both places. The several different beasts brought to view in Rev., represent a civil government. In relation to this, one writer says—"There was one great, formidable power, having essentially the same origin, though manifested under somewhat different modifications; to one and all of which might in their different manifestations be given the name beast. I understand by the term earth, "kings of the earth," the old Roman empire, otherwise, "Catholic Europe," those powers which have committed fornication with the harlot woman. These will be destroyed, but they will be the means, first, of her destruction. Rev. 17: 16. Burn her with fire.

The same that was once written upon the wall of the king's palace, just before the destruction, or fall, of old Babylon, is now written concerning Babylon the great; otherwise, mystical Babylon—Mene—"God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it." Tekel—"Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting" (and thy kingdom is to be given to another).

Time will develope some things that we do not now fully understand. But if we watch, and have on pure garments, we shall know all in due time. We may look for a wonderful manifestation shortly; but if we watch, we shall not be terrified, our names being written in the book of life from the foundation of the world.

There is more we would like to say about the beast of Rev. 17, but we think it best to wait till things are more fully developed in "Catholic Europe." I view there is but one more development, and this is at hand, in the midst of which the Lord will personally and visibly appear to gather his elect. I view this is a most solemn time in which we live. Who is there that will be found awake when the Savior appears in his glory, and loving his appearing? J. E. CLARK.

REDEMPTION.

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—LUKE 21: 28.

We have reason to rejoice that we are not left to grope our way in darkness amid the perils of these last days, while cold-hearted, worldly-minded professors of religion are joining hand in hand with the world, eating and drinking with the drunken, and denying the coming of the Lord. But when we turn our attention to the word of God, we see that these things must needs be, that every jot and tittle of his word may be fulfilled. We may well lift up our heads and rejoice, for we are living in the last moments of time. Jesus says (Luke 21: 28)—"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." To what things did Jesus have reference? To the signs in the sun, moon and stars; to the distress of nations, and roaring of sea and waves. Have any of these signs transpired? Yes, every one, as every candid person knows. We are therefore compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses, proving the coming of Jesus is close at hand.

The sun, moon and stars are witnesses of his coming. The distress of nations with perplexity, and the sea and the waves roaring, witness to that event. The clarion of war, the waking up of mighty men, and the deadly carnage and strife, all witness to the near approach of the Son of God. All who are scoffing and saying "where is the promise of his coming?" are witnesses against their own souls that this world will soon be wrapped in flames, and the enemies of the Lord be consumed.

But there are other witnesses, unlike these, who have filled and trimmed their lamps, and with loins girt with truth have gone forth to meet the Bridegroom. These are "not in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief;" they love their Lord's appearing, and are rejoicing in the blessed hope.

God speed you on your journey. I hope to be gathered with you in the kingdom when Jesus comes. I love his appearing; I am tired of earth's wickedness; but, blessed be God, he is not slack concerning his promises, and although wicked men put far away the evil day, yet we will trust in God's word. Yes, Jesus is coming, robed in glory, with all his angels, in kingly majesty, to bring redemption to his people. Then the graves will be robbed, the dead live and the "children" be free.

Then come, O Mighty One! Sweep away the refuge of lies. Restore earth to its Eden beauty. Let the earth be filled with thy glory. Then shall the children rejoice and praise thee eternally. [illegible] grave! Press forward in the name of Jesus, and be saved when he comes.

Soon the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall awake,
For the Bridegroom is coming again;
Then the saints of the kingdom possession shall take,
And with Jesus eternally reign.

TEST QUESTIONS,

FOR THOSE WHO BELIEVE IN THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

1. Where is the chapter and verse in the Bible that speaks of an immortal soul, spirit, or entity in man?

2. Where is the chapter and verse that gives us the plain record of the creation or organization of an immortal soul, spirit, or entity?

3. Where is there any proof that God created an immortal soul, spirit, or entity, and when created, created it in his now immortal and incorruptible image?

4. If such a creation exists, and in God's own image, can such an immortal creation die a moral or literal death? Can God, Christ, angels, and saints made immortal at Christ's coming, die either of these deaths?

5. When God created the man Adam of the dust of the ground, did he breathe an immortal soul, spirit, or entity, possessed of consciousness and all the attributes of reason and intelligence, into his nostrils?

6. Must the creature man, or the human organization, have an immortal soul, spirit, or entity, in order to run this human, earthly machinery, causing it to develop thought, reason, judgment, and intelligence?

7. If such an immortal soul or spirit exists, where is the proof that it is ever called a being, man, person, or creature?

8. If such an immortal soul, spirit, or entity exists, as some suppose, did it commence its history with the new-born infant body, without knowledge?

9. If such an immortal, immaterial soul or spirit exists, does it grow and magnify itself, as the infant body grows; or is it perfectly compos mentis when created?

10. Can such an immaterial, spiritual existence ever forget any event, circumstance, or knowledge, which it has gained by strict application to the study of the various sciences extant?

11. Can immortal souls or immaterial entities, as are supposed to exist, ever become insane, or raving maniacs?

12. Can these souls, spirits, or entities, be seen or perceived by any of the five senses with which God has endowed man? If so, which? or, in other words, are they material, or immaterial? and do they occupy space?

13. How many millions of such souls must be congregated into one compact body, in order to be seen by the most powerful microscope ever invented by man?

14. How many varieties of immaterial entities are there? There seems to be almost an endless variety of imperfect minds in the world; a gradation from the king on the throne to men of small minds, or no minds at all.

15. Where is the proof that God placed such entities on probation for the development of character and for reward and punishment?

16. Why do the Scriptures of truth talk so freely and so much about mortal man, corruptible man, earthly or fleshly man, dying man, man born of a woman, and yet in no instance mentions an immortal soul or superadded entity?

17. Where does God by sending his Son into the world to redeem a race of mortals, ever make any arrangement or atonement to redeem immortal or immaterial souls, or spirits, said to be contaminated by sin?

18. Can immortal souls or spirits be diseased, contaminated, destroyed, die, or suffer pain? If so, what safeguard have we, when all of God's saints at the resurrection of the just are made immortal, against suffering the same misfortunes?

19. While the terms soul and spirit occur hundreds of times in the Scriptures, where do you ever find the word "immortal" connected with either of these?

20. If the soul is immortal and deathless, why do the Scriptures invariably represent the soul of man as being subject to death and destruction?

21. If the soul or spirit of man is an immortal thing and a part of God, as many claim, does that govern or control the human organism? If so, is the man formed of the dust guilty of any crime under heaven? Does not this view make God the originator and propelling force of all the errors, sins, and blasphemy in the world?

22. If the doctrine of endless misery be true, and the question which precedes this one be orthodox theology, will God torture millions of parts of himself in a furnace of fire, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth?

23. Does not the doctrine of immortal-soulism produce more skepticism, errors, and delusions, and multiply more infidels, than all other doctrines combined?

24. Is not the preaching of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, by its adherents, doing more in this our day to overthrow the Bible and christianity, than all the Tom Paines, Voltaires, and Bolinbrokes on the face of the earth? I heard Warren Chase of [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

LIBERAL OFFERS FOR 1871.

VALUABLE PRESENTS!

The Best Sewing Machine,
The Best Illustrated Dictionary,
The Best Books, and the Best S. S. Paper.

GIVEN AWAY!
FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS,
TILL THE FIRST OF JUNE.

The World's Crisis, a copy of which, dear reader, you hold in your hand, and which, for so many years, has been the leading and most widely circulated herald of the Coming King, is to-day, we trust, a welcome visitor in more than nine thousand homes, and is doubtless read every week by not less than forty thousand readers.

But do you not, dear reader, loving as you do the precious truths for which this paper has so long and so successfully fought, do you not think that this number is far below what it ought to be, and very much less than it might be, if but a little effort were faithfully and earnestly made by every one who now takes it? Do you not feel, in these last moments of time, when the Judgment of the Great Day is so near, and thousands are perishing for lack of knowledge, that it ought to be more than doubled; and that, if it were only in your power, you would, at once, and to-day, multiply its circulation and usefulness a hundred-fold? No doubt this is your feeling, and you would gladly do it, if you could. But suppose that you, and every one else of its nine thousand subscribers, or of its forty thousand readers, should take hold at once, faithfully and in earnest, and do all that you can towards that end, during the next four months, and as much longer as you may; what do you think would be the result? Would not its circulation, and the good it might do, be more than doubled in that time by your faithful efforts and the help of God? Is there any doubt of it?

The skies are full of omens of coming judgment, and men are looking fearfully for the things that are coming on the earth. They are waiting for you to speak to them. Will you? Hundreds of your brethren, too, who are waiting, as you are, for "the Hope of Israel," are without the strengthening, cheering visits of this many-tongued messenger of the Coming King. You will do them, and others through them, good, by introducing it to their hearts and homes.

We know that you will gladly do this, and all that you can, for the love that you bear to Christ and his cause, as you have, many of you, so nobly and so well, in time past; and if, again, you will give your time and labor to this work, the Lord will surely reward you when he comes. But, in advance of that, as a token of our appreciation of your kind efforts, we trust you will be pleased to receive from us YOUR CHOICE OF ANY ONE OF THE FOLLOWING PRESENTS for the new subscribers which you shall have obtained for The World's Crisis and Second Advent Messenger before the 1st of June.

A Grover and Baker Sewing Machine, first class in every respect, with hemmer and attachments; one of the best, if not the very best, in the market. These machines make "the Grover and Baker stitch," which is considered the best for family use, and "the shuttle-stitch." Please state which is wanted.

Things to be Remembered.

In raising your list—the names may be obtained from as many different places as you please, and the papers will be mailed by us to each separate address.

Subscriptions may be taken for the year, with $2.50 each; or double the number for six months, with $1.25 each; or any number for both periods, which, with $1.25 and $2.50 each, shall make up the requisite amount.

Keep a list yourself of all names and monies obtained by you and forwarded to us, with the date when sent.

In sending to us—put the list always on a sheet by itself. If, at the same time, you write on other matters, or remit for old subscribers, put that on a separate sheet.

Write each name plainly, with its post-office, county, and state, and amount paid, all on one line by itself, in that order; and, at the bottom, give the whole amount of premium monies sent, with your own name and full address.

Names sent "for a premium," should, in all cases, be so marked when sent. No name should be sent without the money.

All names and monies can be forwarded at once, or from week to week, as fast as you get them, until the 1st of June.

Any one aiming for a higher premium, and failing to get the full number of names and amount, can pay the balance in cash, and so get the premium; or he can order some other premium on the list corresponding to the amount obtained.

When you have got all the names you can, and want your premium, send us a full list of all the names, addresses, and monies you have sent, so that we may compare them with our books; then we will send you whatever premium you may select from the catalogue,—the Sewing Machines and Webster's Dictionaries by express, at the expense of the receiver, and the other books by mail, postpaid.

Monies, if under $5.00, may be sent by letter at our risk. If a larger sum, and under $25, send a Post-Office Money Order, or Registered Letter. If $25 or more, send a Bank Draft, or Money Order, payable to the order of GEO. T ADAMS, Boston, Mass. All sums of $5.00 and over, sent in any other way than above directed, will be at the sender's risk.

All letters and remittances for premiums should be addressed to the Business Agent, undersigned, or, if more convenient, they may be enclosed in letters to the Editor, Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

And now, dear brethren and sisters everywhere, from Maine to California, and from the Lakes to the Gulf, put your hearts and hands to the good work, and a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together! and the blessing of the Lord be with you!

GEO. T. ADAMS, Business Agent,
Advent Chris. Publication Society.

MATERIAL AND IMMATERIAL.

Every thing that has a name is either material or immaterial; either an entity, or a property of an entity; a personality, or an attribute of a personality. By entity, we mean a "real being or existence." By property, we mean some peculiar quality of the entity, which exists because of the existence of the entity. By attribute, we mean the same thing, though perhaps more properly applied to living, intelligent beings. Property and attribute are used as synonymous terms. When we speak of an apple as being sweet or sour; of a body as soft or hard, heavy or light, dense or porus, tough or brittle; these are properties of the bodies named. Love, mercy and justice, are attributes which can exist only in living, intelligent agents, entities, or personalities. These properties, or attributes, do not exist after the entity, or personality, is destroyed.

Pain, sorrow, hatred, thought, life, desire, sympathy, etc., are properties of certain living entities; but when the personality is destroyed, these peculiar properties perish at the same time. No property can exist any longer than the material organism of which it is an attribute. Attraction, caloric, weight, elasticity, density, etc., are properties of bodies; but they never exist independently of material organisms. In other words, all properties, or attributes, of entities are immaterial, and never exist any longer than the bodies to which they belong. For instance, if a being feels pain, sorrow, or joy; love or hatred; all those attributes cease when that personality is no more. No attribute, or property, ever can exist by itself; any more than we can have a shadow without a substance, or a hole in a body after the body is entirely destroyed.

No amount of immaterial properties, or attributes, can make a material, personal entity. Hence, love, thought, desire, life, patience, meekness, mercy, justice, etc., have no existence, but in name, without a real, personal entity. In the case of our Creator, mind and personality are co-eternal; as in man mind and personality are co-extensive. They begin together, and the mental properties never extend, or exist, beyond the life of the physical constitution.

All personalities are organized bodies. All immaterial things are but properties of material bodies, and cease with them. The mind of man is not an entity, but a collection of attributes, or properties, peculiar to that wonderful organ called the brain; hence when that is deranged or destroyed, the mind is also deranged or destroyed. It is as impossible for man to think without an active brain, as to live without breathing.

No attribute of an object is an entity; neither is it a component part of that with which it is connected. The weight of water is not water; the motion of a watch is not a watch; the soul of a man is not a man. In these cases, "weight," "motion," and "soul," are only attributes of the bodies. When we speak of the soul of a man, we mean either his life, or a state of feeling; and either of these are immaterial properties, which exist no longer than his personal organism. When we say man is a soul, then the word soul stands for man as a personal entity. This is a common use of the word in the Scriptures.

No property, or attribute, is organized, and, therefore, cannot be an entity. No entity can ever become a property. No collection of properties can make a personal entity; hence the mind, which is a collection of mental properties, such as memory, love, hatred, reason, desire, etc., resulting from the action of a material organ, can never make an entity; or a personal, intellectual, moral agent. No attribute has an independent, conscious existence.

☞ The promises in the Bible are not made to one act, but to the continued habit of prayer. It evinces more depravity not to repent of a sin, than it does to commit it at first. A good man may be hurried away by temptation to commit a sin, but he will invariably repent of it afterward. To deny, as Peter did, is bad; but not to weep bitterly, as he did, when we have denied, is worse.

CALIFORNIA MEETINGS.

Our meetings in San Francisco are now (Jan. 10th) most deeply interesting. A very great interest is awakened, and new ones are starting every day. We have meetings every afternoon and evening. The people are astonished at what the Lord is doing.

The following are the reports in the Alta California of the meetings for the last two evenings. The Alta occupies a very high standing in California. When speaking of the meeting Sabbath evening, the reporter of the Alta says:

Every foot of sitting and standing room, both on the floor and in the gallery of the Minna-street church, was occupied last night, and hundreds of persons who came to hear the preacher were unable to obtain admission. The channel railing and the pulpit steps were appropriated by the audience, and even the platform itself was so far occupied that the speaker had barely sufficient space in which to move from the centre of the desk to the wall on which the prophetic chart was suspended. An acquaintance and reliable gentleman remarked to our reporter that he remembered when Elder Grant commenced preaching in Montreal, Canada, to an audience of less than fifty persons. At the close of his mission he held discussions and revival meetings in the largest hall in the city, capable of holding nearly four thousand persons, which was densely crowded.

The Elder delivered the last of his first series of discourses on Bible prophecy. He briefly recapitulated the interpretations more fully presented in preceding lectures; declaring that the golden head of the image seen in the dream of the King of Babylon, which Daniel explained, symbolized the Babylonish Kingdom: that the breast and arms of silver represented the Medo-Persian Kingdom; that the belly and thighs of brass represented the Kingdom of Grecia; and that the legs of iron and clay, represented to demonstrate that the four beasts described in the seventh chapter of Daniel also represented the four great Kingdoms or Powers symbolized by the image of gold and silver and brass and iron and clay. He then proceeded to connect John's Revelation and prophecies of Daniel. This he did by showing the identity of description respecting the little horn that grew upon the head of the fourth beast, and the seven-headed dragon and the seven-headed beast seen and spoken of by John. The main topic of the lecture was the Scarlet Woman whom John saw sitting upon a beast having seven heads and ten horns. This woman, the Elder contended, represented the ecclesiastical power of Rome. He declared and argued that the bloody dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, represented the Roman power in Pagan times. He stated that Pagan Rome put to death over three millions of Christians. He argued that, according to the 9th and 18th verses of the 17th chapter of the Revelation, the woman represented the ecclesiastical power in the seven-hilled city of Rome. Referring to the intervening verses, he argued a literal fulfillment in the division of Italy into ten kingdoms. In the symbolic imagery of the Bible, a beast always signified a civil power, while a church was frequently represented by a woman. To prove this, the Elder quoted several passages of Scripture. The churches of Samaria and Jerusalem were both represented by two women—in the prophecy of Ezeckiel. A pure church was represented by a virgin. Paul's declaration of espousal was quoted. Christ declared himself the Bridegroom; the church, the bride. Italy was divided into exactly ten kingdoms or provinces after Austria was driven out of Italy by Napoleon III. These were represented, the Elder contended, by the ten horns spoken of in the sixteenth verse of the book and chapter above named. They were to hate the woman clothed in scarlet, and were to make her desolate and naked. The Elder then recited and dwelt upon recent events in history, which he believed corresponded with prophecy in Rev. 52. Daniel said that the horn that grew up in place of the three horns plucked from the head of the beast representing the fourth Kingdom spake "great things." The Elder referred to the decree of Papal Infallibility as in his view supporting the assertion that the ecclesiastical power of Rome was meant by that horn. And, quoting the latter part of the seventh verse of the 18th chapter of John's Revelation, he referred to the exultation at Rome on the announcement of the dogma. He spoke of and gave some details concerning the riches of the Church of Rome up to the time when her temporal power was taken away altogether by Victor Emmanuel. Her great wealth, he argued, made her correspondence to prophecy still more plain and indisputable. His conclusion was that after the temporal power of the Roman Church was absolutely and entirely taken away, the prophesy in regard to the ten Kingdoms signified in Revelation. Chap. 22: 12, being first fulfilled, the "Marriage Supper of the Lamb" was near at hand. He quoted: "For true and just are his judgments, who hath judged the great harlot. . . . Let us be glad, and rejoice, and give glory to Him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come. . . . Blessed are they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." The woman in scarlet is to be made desolate and naked and her flesh is to be eaten by the ten Kingdoms of her homestead that hate her. Then, according to Daniel shall come "the end of the world;" then, according to John, shall come the first resurrection. We are now in the very last days of the world. So reasoned the Elder. He said that there was nothing in prophecy now remaining for fulfillment before the Kingdom of Christ should be set up on earth, except what further of "desolation" God purposed should be wrought in time against the woman described in the 17th chapter of the book of the Revelation.

The Elder announced that he should preach at the same place to-morrow evening; the subject being, "The signs of the times—as foretold in Scripture; indicative of the nearness of the Second Advent." Friday evening next he will deliver a discourse on the scarlet colored beast on which the woman is described as sitting; showing its prophetical significance. He also announced that he would this evening and next Wednesday and Thursday evenings, engage in discussion at Dashaway Hall on the nature of man;—whether he is by nature possessed of immortality, and whether the dead are conscious. Mr. H. J. Loveland will assume the affirmative. The discussion will commence precisely at seven o'clock and close at nine, and the speakers will occupy, alternately, twenty minutes. The admission will be free, but a collection will be taken up to defray the expense consequent upon the holding of the debate in a public hall.

At the close of the preaching and announcements, members of the congregation were invited to remain after the benediction, and join in a conference and prayer meeting. The pastor of the church, Rev. Mr. Bailey, stated that a revival had begun during the week; that many had risen for prayers, at the social meetings that had been held, and of these some had found peace in believing. He had invited Elder Grant to preach in the church at two o'clock Monday (this) afternoon, and had obtained his agreement to do so.

Last evening, we were obliged to move to Dashaway Hall, to accommodate the crowd. The Alta California reporter says this morning, Jan. 10th:—

Dashaway Hall was densely crowded last evening, to hear the announced discussion between Elder Miles Grant, of Boston, and J. S. Loveland, of this city, on the subject named above. In the absence of Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, who had agreed to act as Chairman, Mr. A. L. Fitzgerald was called upon and consented to preside. It was announced that the speakers would occupy twenty minutes alternately, and the audience were requested to refrain from demonstrations of applause. Elder Grant offered a prayer.

The discussion was opened in the affirmative by Mr. Loveland. He congratulated himself on occupying the affirmative of the question, as in such a position he recognized in the audience before him not merely a mass of mortal humanity, whose entire existence or death was snuffed out like a candle, but intelligence that would live forever. He presented the proposition that man was a composite unity—composed of a soul or spirit and a material, physical body. His first proof was drawn from human language. The literature of all languages furnishes words expressing the idea of a soul and body, constituting the man. Science recognizes the visible and invisible: and it talks of matter and force. It recognizes a force and principle and life as inherent somewhere, which is in itself distinct from inert matter, which cannot move itself. It is invisible. All potential agents are invisible. They are in the dead substances which they move. In its classification into species, genus, orders, etc., it recognizes a principle—an invisible principle or force, which is the basis of the classification. Religion also recognizes this duplexity in humanity as a composite unit. And, as the Jewish and Christian Religions were typical of all others, he would refer to them on this point.

In Genesis 2: 7, would be found the statement that man was formed from the dust of the earth, and that God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Given in common genuine English form, it would read that God breathed into Adam a living spirit. In the first chapter this man—or humanity—is said to have been created in the image or likeness of Deity. Does this "image," or likeness, have reference to the physical, or to the invisible, spiritual, soul part of man? Does it include his intellectual and moral nature? He asked his opponent to bear this in mind: Does the declaration that man was made in God's image, mean a physical or spiritual likeness, or both? God is said to be a spirit, in John 4: 24. From this, it is warrantable to assume that it was a spiritual part of man that was created in his image. If otherwise, the inference must be that Deity is a physical being. In Genesis 35: 18, Rachel's soul is described as "departing." Mr. Loveland proceeded to quote a large number of texts in support of his position. Among them, we note Psalms, xlix. 8: xxvi. 9; lxvi. 9; Micah, vi. 7; Matthew, x. 23; 1 Thessalonians, v. 23; Job, xxxii. 8; Luke, xxiv. 37–9.

Elder Grant read the verse: "God formed man out of the dust of the earth." If an entity was breathed into him, then there were two personalities. Then he could not be a composite unit. He believed man really was a composite unit; but argued that Mr. Loveland's theory was inconsistent with such a belief. If man has in him a soul which is a conscious entity after death, was it a conscious entity before he came into the world? To the statement that matter could not move itself, the elder made reply: Suppose a watch or music-box is wound up, by what is it moved until it runs down? The Elder argued that God the Father had a personality, occupied a local habitation and a place; was omniscient and omnipresent by his Holy Spirit. He showed that the same words, in the original, that were translated "breath of lives," in Genesis 1: 7, were used when speaking of the animal creation. The real question was whether it was really man who was made out of the dust of the earth, or whether there was a house made out of the dust in which the man lived. The words in Genesis rendered "living soul" (nephesh chaiyah) were first applied in Genesis as follows: "And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creatures that hath life (nephesh chaiyah.) The margin read "living soul." So all the animals in the water are "living souls." The same words were applied to beasts in Gen. 7: 22. The simple idea was that this breath of life was common to all living creatures, and hence, was properly called "the breath of lives." What is man? inquired the Elder. He answered: A living man is an organized being, made out "of the dust of the ground," having the breath of life." A dead man is the same being without the breath of life. The Scriptures showed that it was no more proper to call man a "living soul" than any other creature. He laid down and argued the proposition that that which is immaterial cannot exist independent of material organism, unless we except "nothing." Attraction, music, love, were immaterial; but they had no existence independent of a material organization. The Elder quoted from Herodotus to prove that the dogma of the immortality of the soul was derived from the Egyptians—as follows: "The Egyptians say that Ceres and Bacchus hold the chief sway of the infernal regions: and the Egyptians, also, were the first who asserted the doctrine that the soul of man is immortal."

The doctrine of a conscious entity in man, immortal, never dying, was the foundation for Budhism, Brahminism, Purgatory, Spiritualism, the eternal torment of the impenitent wicked in hell, and other monstrous doctrines. Martin Luther stigmatized the doctrine as one of "the dung-hill decretals of the Pope." Kitto, in his Cyclopædia of Biblical literature renders Genesis 2: 7, as follows: "And Jehovah God formed the man dust from the ground, and blew into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living animal;" and remarks on the passage, "We should be acting unfaithfully if we were to affirm that an immortal spirit is contained or implied in this passage." Doctor Clarke says when commenting on Genesis 1, 24: "Nephesh chaiyah (living soul) is a general term to express all creatures endued with animal life, in any of its infinitely varied gradations." McCulloch, in his celebrated work on the "Credibility of the Scriptures," says that there is no word in the Hebrew language that signifies either soul or spirit, in the technical sense in which we use the terms, as implying something distinct from the body." The Elder, in his first and subsequent speeches, quoted a large number of texts, and claimed that from them directly, or by comparing the one with the other, he proved that "the soul" nowhere represents in the Bible a conscious part of man, existing as such when the physical organism is sleeping in death. He contended that the popular theology of the day, on this point, is sustained neither by facts, true philosophy, common sense, nor the Bible.

In following remarks, Mr. Loveland, in a very able manner, supported the current theological belief.

The audience paid the most profound attention throughout the discussion.

☞ I shall never forget the feelings I had once when climbing one of earth's great pyramids in Egypt. When half way up, my strength failing, I feared I should never be able to ascend to the summit or get back again, and I well remember the help given, even by Arab hands, to draw me on further, and the step I could not quite make myself, because too great for my wearied frame. The little help given me—sometimes more and sometimes less—enabled me to go up, step by step, step by step, until at last I reached the summit, and breathed the pure air, and had a grand lookout from that lofty eminence. And so in life's journey, we are climbing, we are ascending. We are feeble. Every one of us, now and then, needs a little help, and if we have risen a step higher than some other one, let us from that eminence reach down for the brother's or the sister's hand, and help another to stand beside us; and thus, joined hand in hand, we shall go on conquering, step by step, until the glorious eminence shall be gained.—Bishop Simpson.

BOOK NOTICE.

"SYNCHRONOLOGY OF ANCIENT AND MODERN HISTORY." By S. Hawes.

This is a book which all ministers, historians, editors, writers, and literary men, will have when they can obtain it. It gives "the principal events in Sacred and Profane History, from the creation of man to the present time," with the dates of their occurrence, from what is believed the most reliable evidences. It supplies a place in the department of history not before filled. Whatever king, patriarch, governor, ruler, prophet, priest, pope, race, revolution, war, battle, or chief event in church or state, is found in books, is here packed in one book, with their dates. It contains about 3000 names of chief actors in the world's history, and an indefinite number of great events, with their times. When you see the book you will wish to possess it and obtain it. It is to be regretted that the author follows the exploded chronology of Archbishop Usher in the work, yet as that is the generally received standard, the book is not susceptible of the criticism it would be subjected to if the later and better chronology had been adopted.

The author shows wonderful reverence for infant geology, in a single remark. Here it is:—"It must be observed that by creation of the world, nothing more can be understood now than the introduction of the human race into it; the science of geology having demonstrated that it is utterly impossible to assign a date to its creation." But this does not harm the book. Price, $2.50.

WILL THE HEATHEN BE SAVED?

There is no escape from the conclusion that if the heathen were in a salvable state before the gospel was introduced into their midst, that instead of proving a blessing to them, it has proved a great detriment; for the majority of them reject it, and thereby deprive themselves of salvation—a result they would not have been exposed to had it not have been for introducing the gospel among them, from this premise. While it is true that those who are acquainted with the Divine law "shall be judged by the law . . . in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ" (Rom. 2: 12, 16), it is also true that in the absence of a knowledge of the Divine law, they were "a law unto themselves, . . . their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another" (Rom. 2: 14, 15); and the only chance we can see for salvation on this principle, is for them to retain their infantile standing, never transgressing even the imperfect law of conscience; but how many would thus pass the test, it is hard to tell—probably not many—but this is certain, they had no true sense of pardon after having transgressed the only law that they had any knowledge of; hence, it is affirmed: "As many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law" (Rom. 2: 12), which principle would doubtless debar the masses, at least, from entering the kingdom; so the gospel is a blessing, offering pardon. W. S.

SUPERIORITY OF THE ANIMAL ORGANISM.

It would be a difficult task to find a class of men who would seriously set up the claim that the human organism is inferior to the organism of the animal creation, and yet popular theology thus makes man inferior to the beast, when pressed from premise to conclusion; for it attributes all the intellect possessed by man, not to the physical man, but to an internal entity—a personality existing within, independent of the human organism—thus entirely depriving the physical orgrnism of intellect, making it only the house of the thinker, and not the thinker itself; while at the same time it is admitted that, although animals do not possess internal entities to think for them, they exercise will, caution, fear, love, and hatred, which cannot exist independent of a degree of intellect. From this premise, it follows that if all these proofs of intellect exist in the animal organism, without an internal entity to originate them, or to do the thinking, and if none of these proofs of intellect exist in the human organism independent of an internal entity to originate them, the animal organism is made superior to man's, it being an organism that can think for itself, while man's organism is totally dependent on an internal entity to do all its thinking. If the premise is good, the conclusion is unavoidable. But if the animal organism produces an inferior degree of intellect without the aid of an inward entity, and if man's organism is really superior to that of animals, why may it not produce a greater quantity and better quality of intellect without an inward entity to originate it? Why will not thinking men look at this matter in the light of reason? W. S.

"LAND OF THE ENEMY."

That death is an "enemy," and that the children slaughtered under Herod's reign are reposing in the "land of the enemy," there is no reason to doubt; but do adults, at death, also go to the "land of the enemy"? Why not? When man receives the pardon for sin, he occupies in the mind of God the very place he did before he ever sinned—a sinless state; for conversion does not place man beyond the power of temptation, nor remove from his organism those propensities that may be developed to his detriment unless he makes the required exertion to keep his body under; and a sinless man, as really as a sinless child, falls under the cold hand of the enemy, and why not enter the same land? Indeed, the enemy has but one land for the dead, and that is a "land of darkness, as darkness itself"—the abode of all the dead, regardless of character; but while some there "sleep in Jesus," others only sleep in Adam; and "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again [to an immortal state], even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (with Christ), just as he "brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ." Heb. 14: 20. "They shall come again from the land of the enemy," saints as well as children. W. S.

UNION.

The principles of the gospel show the children of faith one, because baptized by the one Spirit, into the one body. This is well-pleasing to Jesus, as seen by his praying "that they all might be one, as he and the Father are one." Now this oneness looks well in theory, but much more blessed to see its practical working.

In union there is strength. A body of believers with one mind and one will, completely united in effort, with determination, can but be strong, be they few or many. On the other hand, where there is alienation of interest, each striving to have his own way, nothing need be expected but anarchy and distraction. So the apostle identifies this wicked work by saying—"Mark those that cause divisions among you, contrary to the doctrine ye have learned, and avoid them." This refers to a division in Christ's body, or in the true church.

All can see how very careful and jealous for the interest and harmony of the body we should be, that the world may know that this body is the result of a divine organism. Thus when you see christians separating and setting up a meeting because of difference of opinion, or of some local difficulty, or desirous to have things their way; if not, will not be subject to the body, but will go their own way contrary to the golden rule, and regardless of consequences,—this class, individually and collectively, are to be marked, and their course disapproved, for the simple reason that they are very evidently the ones Paul had his eye upon; and if he were here he would mark them.

Jesus says, "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God." They that contend for the faith seek for the peace of the body, and strive for the unity of the Spirit, and do all they can to consolidate and build up, by the vitality of the gospel, which has power to bind together all the living branches of the true vine,—they must be the ones that will hear it said, "Well done!"

Then, brethren, let it be our untiring labor to keep ourselves full of love to God and the brethren, and when anything comes along that does not suit us, or any are found in fault, let it be our first work to "restore in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

The old adversary seeks division and distraction among us, and if he can get our help he is pleased, and gains a double victory. So let us in these perilous times give earnest "heed to ourselves and the flock of God, over whom the Holy Ghost hath made us overseers," and do all we can by kindness and the prayer of faith for the unity of the church, the strengthening of the weak, the correcting of the wrong, the forgiving of one another, and love for our enemies. The Lord fill us with this love, so we may love one another with pure hearts fervently. Let love prompt every act of life, and joy will be ours.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Conn. A. C. Quarterly Conference met according to appointment at Yalesville, Ct., Jan. 5th. President in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Rockwell. Minutes of the last conference read and approved. There was a good delegation from the various churches, whose reports were heart-cheering. They spoke of the work of God being revived in the various churches they represented. Sinners had been converted and backsliders reclaimed, and some added to the church, such as we hope will be saved. Some of the churches are about to build them chapels.

The ministers gave a good report of their labors for the salvation of precious souls. They felt unwearied in their work in presenting to the world the great truth which distinguishes us a peculiar people; the near coming of our Lord and the judgment of the great day pressed with solemn weight upon their hearts.

The church in Yalesville was greatly strengthened. They felt like taking hold of the work of God with more zeal and courage. A debt of five hundred dollars on their chapel was nearly all raised, and in a short time the debt will be canceled and the chapel free. It was good to see what Bible benevolence would do for people.

This was one of our best conferences. We separated in harmony and love, to meet again at the call of the Pres. and Sec.

SR. C. B. TURNER.—Our Savior said, "The poor ye have always with you, and when ye will, ye may do them good." Mark 14: 7. Let us not forget our beloved Sister Turner in this time of need, but respond at once to her present necessities, and God will bless the act. "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother [or sister] have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion, . . . how dwelleth the love of God in him?" 1 John 3: 17. "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THE ADVENT MISSION.

Since I was given the great privilege to understand the great and grand truth of man's entire mortality, and the necessity of the Lord's return on our earth to give immortality to all his chosen children, and thereby conceiving something of the glorious plan of the creation, the fall and redemption of man, I have felt and understood the necessity of the Mission work. By looking around, meditating and reflecting upon the state of the church and the world, I can appreciate the love and mercy of being one of those who among scorn and reveling shall be accounted worthy to proclaim the last grand and glorious truth of our Savior's speedy coming to reward his saints with life eternal. Now if this is indeed so, what is our duty? what ought we to do? The answer is short: spread this truth everywhere.

The next question is, How is this to be done? I think there are two answers to this question: by the living word, and by tracts. I have often with admiration read the noble sacrifice that some of our brethren have made for the spread of our great cause. But let me say another thing, and please bear with me, for it is the burden of my heart. I have often wondered the sacrifice for the foreign Mission was so small. It seems to me, almost, that the church or the Mission Board had no other fellow beings but those who speak the English language. There may be some one that will say, "If we only had some able and competent man among the foreigners, we would do more." But, friend, do you need much ability and competence to go around and spread tracts, and warn sinners, and to tell of the love of Jesus? No! but to do that you need very much of God's grace within, and without this means all our preaching (it may be as able and competent as it may) will not avail much. This is my sad experience both here and elsewhere. How often we charge a minister with incompetence, inability, and lack of executive powers, when we do not meet with such successes as others, without considering the many disadvantages he may be subject to.

Now, dear brethren and sisters of the Advent church, I once more lay our case before you, and make the last appeal to you, if this is in vain. We are two nations in America who speak the same language. Here in Chicago alone are about forty-five thousand of them, and we have not one single tract to spread among them. Every preacher among them is working against us with all their might, and warning the people from going to listen, as eternal damnation is a sure consequence if they do. Now bear in mind that most of our people are brought up in the National church, believing just as much what their ministers say as the Roman Catholics do, and more so.

And now, dear friends, in conclusion, I ask you to take us into consideration. Are we not your brethren, although we are not Americans? I believe I can say, that I am doing all in my power every day to spread the good news of the soon coming Jesus, but I feel that I shall soon have to give it up, if nothing can be done to help us onward. Dear brethren and sisters, help to spread this truth among your Scandinavian brethren, that you may meet many of them around the throne, is the earnest prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ, O. BENDIXON.

14 Hunt St., Chicago, Ill.

P. S.—Please receive our humblest thanks, dear saints, who so kindly remembered us. May the Lord abundantly recompense you both in this life and in the one to come.

BRO. GRANT:—With deep interest I have read of your arrival in California. You know that I am growing old, and that for the last twenty years all the fingers that I own, are the last three upon the right hand, and can have no more until the Lord comes. But I will go hungry to bed without supper, rather than that the full tale of God's last message should not be told to the last generation of this dispensation. And I will be one of twenty-eight who shall furnish you with a Hall for one month, at ten dollars a night.

I have not forgotten, brethren, the Elder's campaign in Montreal, and the heavy draft upon the purses of a few for hall hire.

J. PORTER.

Danville, P. Q., Jan. 16th, 1871.

☞ Nothing so truly shows a spiritual man as the manner of his dealing with another man's sin. The more grace, the more sympathy for the erring.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. French.

DEAR BRN.:—In reading over Bro. Grant's communications from California, it reminds me of scenes of former days. In 1850 I walked the streets of the young city, San Francisco, and wrapped myself in my blanket, and retired upon a pile of boards for the night, where the great city Sacramento now stands. Bro. Grant says:—

"The Lord has prepared and opened the way for us in this city in a signal manner. We have already been invited into six churches, . . . but we are satisfied we could do better for the cause we love so dearly, if we had an independent place, where we could preach the whole truth without any restraint. The only thing that prevents this is the expense of the hall. . . . As we have before stated, what we most need is the means to hire a respectable hall, for a month or more, until the work shall be well started, then we think the means would be provided by those interested. . . For ten dollars [a night] we could get a pretty good hall, that would be quite satisfactory."

I fully concur in the above statement of Bro. G. Now, brethren, let us raise three hundred dollars at once to hire a hall for a month, that the work may go on unhindered. Enclosed please find twenty dollars towards the three hundred to hire a hall.

In this same Crisis, Jan. 11th, is a letter from San Francisco, by "C.," in which the writer says:—"There should be a regularly established agency for the Crisis and for Second Advent publications in this city. . . . I think subscriptions could be obtained and books sold here during the Elder's stay, . . . sufficient to pay all the Mission expense on the coast for the year. And such an agency should be at a book or periodical store, and not at the private dwelling-place of a brother. But tracts are needed now to meet inquirers' demands. . . . And the Elder should be supplied with a large invoice at his rooms. . . . When the regular prophecy-series is commenced, he will have immense audiences. An abundant supply of tracts and papers will contribute greatly to perfect the work."

So it seems to me. Inclosed you will find five dollars for the Tract fund.

Truly yours, A. FRENCH.

Lowell, Mass.

From Sr. S. Condell.

BRO. GRANT:—I saw in the Crisis when you left for the far-off regions. Like the fishermen of Galilee, you left all to follow Christ. Your reward like theirs is sure, at the resurrection of the just. You are gone to publish the great salvation offered freely to the perishing sons and daughters of Adam, as also striving in the strength of the Lord to pull down the strong holds of sin and Satan in that great metropolis. How great is your work. You may say, like the apostle—"Who is sufficient for these things?" "Who is weak and I am not weak?" In the midst of all discouragements, dear brother, you have in store the exceeding great and precious promises to comfort you at all times, so that your peace may flow as a river, as you say it does.

I have read with much pleasure a most interesting account of your travels towards California; hope to hear a good deal more before long. We may hope to hear, as of old, sinners coming and crying out, "What shall we do?" O that your hands may be strengthened and your arms made strong through the mighty God of Jacob, as saith the prophet; and when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, he will give you a crown of life, and unto all who love his appearing. May the Lord, whose you are, and whom you serve, keep you from all evil. Yours in the Lord,

SARAH CONDELL.

P. S.—By urgent request, we in Ventnor have been highly favored by a visit of ten days from our worthy brother, Elder J. Porter. He came in the fulness of the gospel of Christ. He visited from house to house, instructing us in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, and preached almost every evening during his stay. It was a feast long to be remembered. S. C.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. D. D. REED writes:—"In my last communication I was at Napa City. Had called on the Methodist and Baptist ministers, in order to get into their church, if possible. Had some conversation with the Baptist. He inquired what persuasion I was of? I answered—Second Advent. He then said I could not preach in his house. I replied he could not stop or prevent this truth being preached, no more than he could prevent powder exploding confined in a rock with fire attached to it. It would break out somewhere. I then secured the Court House hall for Sunday afternoon, and advertised through the papers that I would preach on the kingdom of God and reign of Messiah. Scattered tracts at the close. A sister came to us at the close, saying she thanked God for the privilege of hearing the gospel once more, as she had not heard it before since she had been in this country.

I attended four meetings at the African church, and we had a great shout, mingled with songs and tears. This was one of our old-fashioned times, such as we used to have forty or fifty years ago among the Methodists.

From there to Petaluma, thirty miles by stage and steamboat, through Sonoma Valley, one of the richest grape-growing vallies in the State. One man had fourteen hundred acres of vineyards, and another eighty tons of grapes ungathered, Dec. 1st. In Petaluma met a colored man, who invited me to preach in their chapel. Had a good free time there. At the close a white brother arose, and said what he had heard was Bible truth, and he had a home for all such preachers. We went with him, and found truly it was the house of Obed-edom, where the blessing of God rested forevermore. He with a few others owned a small chapel, where meetings had formerly been held. We spoke three times in it the following Sunday, and the Lord blest greatly. As one sister said—'It rained salvation all day.' Some embraced the truth, and were made exceeding happy in the Lord."

BRO. J. A. CLEVELAND writes:—"We were at North Troy last week, and commenced a series of meetings in the Baptist house, Dec. 29th, and continued evenings through the week and over the following Sabbath. The meetings from their commencement increased in interest. Some were reclaimed, others rose for prayers. The old pilgrims were very much comforted and blessed, and all felt like starting anew with the year for the kingdom. There is quite a large number of strong brethren in Troy, but they are scattered.

As we have commenced a new year, let us make our mark, and do something to benefit the perishing around us. If there ever was a time when those who have the light on the soon coming of the Savior should work, it is now. Stay up the hands of the servants of the Lord who come to you. Do we believe Jesus is soon coming? If so, let us act it out. Work with a will, and then stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. Laborers are few. The work we are about is a great one, and but a little time to do it in. We shall all want a place in the kingdom, but how can we expect to get it, if we are ever excusing ourselves from labor?

Jesus is soon coming to take his people home. I am glad we have got most through. We can all do something. If we cannot all preach, we can scatter tracts, and help those who can preach. We can certainly do something."

SR. E. L. STREETER writes:—"I thank my blessed Savior for this privilege of penning a few lines for our much beloved paper, the Crisis. It does my heart good every week to read such excellent pieces from those of 'like precious faith.' I feel that I am one of 'Father's family,' and am trying to live near to the Savior, and follow in his footsteps. I believe that Jesus is soon coming, to take his waiting ones home; and I long to hear Jesus say—

'Child, your Father calls,
Come home!'

In this world we meet with persecution, and are tried and tempted, but Jesus never allows us to be tempted or tried above what we are able to bear. I am perfectly willing to suffer any thing for Christ's sake, and am determined to be a christian, and believe the word of God, any way, let it cost what it will. I care not what the world may say about me, for I know Jesus is my loving Savior, and that soon he is coming, and then all our trials will have an end."

BRO. J. CARR writes:—"Brn. and Srs.:—Accept my sincere thanks for the pecuniary aid which you have sent me in my time of trial; also for your kind words of sympathy, which have encouraged me to still trust in the Lord for all things. May we all live so near the good Shepherd, that we may always know and do his will here, and meet in his soon coming kingdom, where sickness and sorrow will never come."

BRO. A. OGSBURY writes:—"I am living near the crossing of the Central and Alton R. R. in the town of Normal, Ill., near the University. The place contains about three thousand inhabitants. It is connected with Bloomington by a 'dummy,' which runs three times an hour to and from Bloomington. Would be glad to have any traveling this way stop and see us. We remain as ever in hope of eternal life through the Son, at the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."

SR. M. E. STREETER writes:—"The Lord has been exceeding good to me, in sparing my life to the present time, for which I will praise his dear name. . . . I long for the time to come when all the faithful ones will meet to part no more. For I can say in the language of the poet—

'O, where shall rest be found,
Rest for the weary soul?'

Who does not want to see Jesus, and be made like him? . . . By the grace of God I will try to be ready to meet my Lord in peace when he comes, and I would desire the prayers of all God's children. It is sweet to know that we are remembered at the throne of grace by those who love the same Jesus."

Obituaries.

ROBINSON. Died, August 25th, 1870, Edward B. Robinson, of Concord, N. H., aged thirty-seven years.

Bro. Robinson was employed as baggage master on the railroad from Concord to Lawrence and Boston, and died in the discharge of the duties of his station. His train had just left Lawrence for Boston, when, as he endeavored to move a heavy trunk by grasping the ends with his extended hands, his hands slipped, and falling backward, his head struck upon the corner of another trunk, inflicting a mortal contusion at the base of the brain. He did not speak or move. A gentleman came to his aid, but nothing could be done, and in a few moments life was extinct. Ten minutes before he was in vigorous health and unusually good spirits, and now he was dead. The shock to his family—a wife, son, and daughter, must be imagined. In one day their home was desolate. The Bethel church at Concord, of which he had been for years an acceptable member, and also the many friends to whom he had become endeared by many kindly acts, mourned for him with deep but not with hopeless sorrow. Bro. Robinson was a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and confessed him as his Lord and King; and we trust he sleeps in Jesus and rests in hope.

The occasion of his burial was improved by the writer in an address founded upon Eccl. 9: 12. The lessons of such an event should incline us to faithfulness and vigilance, to present obedience in all things, and a constant readiness to leave our work, and to ever have our account all ready to be sealed up to the judgment of the great day.

WALTON. Died, at Seabrook, N. H., January 13th, 1871, Wm. Walton, aged thirty-two years.

He retired in apparent good health. During the night the family were aroused by some unusual sounds, and hastened to his room only to find him in the struggles of death. Upon the occasion of the funeral a large concourse of people were addressed by the writer from John 11: 24, 25.

C. H. SWEET.

TINDALL. Died, in Sodus, N. Y., Nov. 19th, 1870, Bro. Alonzo H. Tindall, in good hope of a resurrection unto eternal life, aged thirty-seven years.

This brother came to the knowledge of the blessed hope by the reading of the Bible, having never heard an Advent sermon. Services by the writer. Text, Job 14: 10.

B. P. STEVENS.

HARTFORD. Died, in Liberty, Me., Sr. Betsey Hartford, aged ninety years and nine months.

She left two brothers and one sister, the youngest over eighty years. She professed religion when about eighteen years old, and united with the Free-will Baptist church. Upwards of seventy years she lived in faith. Her hope was that Christ her life would appear, and she longed for the day. Funeral sermon from Matt. 22: 32.

N. F. NASON.

CHENEY. Died, in Bradford, Jan. 10th, Bro. Martin Cheney.

He rests until the last trump shall sound, when he will put on immortality.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Jan. 18. [Special to the New York Herald.] The ultra Reds declare their determination to use the invention against the Germans should they enter Paris. On the other hand, some of the shopkeepers rub their hands complacently and congratulate themselves on having articles that may tempt the German Princes when they enter the capital. Yet I firmly believe, nevertheless, that the resistance will be unequaled in the annals of war. The bombardment has enraged the population, and all are eager to go out and fight. Every man swears to have revenge, even if he has to wait a generation for its accomplishment. Peace is only looked upon as a means for resuscitating the army and country previous to invading Germany at a future day.

LONDON, Jan. 18. King William has issued the following proclamation at Versailles, on the occasion of his assumption of the Imperial crown. He says:

"In consequence of the appeal of the German Princes and free towns for us to restore the German Empire after a lapse of sixty years, we announce that we consider it our duty to Fatherland to accept the Imperial dignity. Henceforth we and our successors will bring to the title of Emperor of Germany the hope that God will vouchsafe a blissful future to Fatherland, and that under our auspices its ancient splendor may be restored. We partake of the dignity, conscious of our duty to preserve with German fidelity the rights of the Empire, and of its members to maintain peace, and to support and strengthen the independence of Germany in the hope that the German people will reap in lasting peace within our boundaries the fruits of their bloody battles, and be safe against a renewal of French attacks. God grant that we and our successors may protect the Empire, not by warlike conquests, but by works of peace, freedom and civilization."

A Versailles dispatch states that King William has given up the idea of making a triumphal entry into Paris on its capitulation. He will content himself by strongly garrisoning the forts of the capital, provisioning them for two years. Orleans and other towns not in the territory to be annexed will be evacuated, the German troops withdrawing to Alsace and Lorraine, both to be strongly occupied, as also a strip serving as a line of communication with Paris. The surrender must be unconditional, but after its consummation arms will be given to the Garde Nationale, to be made answerable for order. The Corps Legislatif will be re-assembled.

LONDON, Jan. 21. A dispatch from St. Quentin says that the railway station was stormed by the 19th Prussian regiment, and that the town was afterwards occupied. Ten thousand French troops were taken prisoners, of whom 2000 had been wounded. Six guns were among the trophies of the victorious Germans.

Despatches of later date positively assert that the French army was utterly defeated, the route being complete, and that Von Goeben is in hot pursuit of the French, who are retreating upon Amiens in a confused and demoralized condition.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—Despatches received in this city assert that on Thursday morning the forts defending Paris opened a vigorous cannonade on the German lines, under cover of which a large body of troops emerged from the city, and a severe engagement ensued, resulting in a complete repulse for the French, with great loss.

It has been finally settled that France will be represented at the conference, at the reassembling of the representatives on Tuesday. The completion of the representative at the conference gives great hope of a speedy termination of the war.

DOMESTIC.

SUBTERRANEOUS FIRES.—The late earthquakes call attention to facts, touching fire in the coal mines. When barely ignited, and all communication with the external air is not entirely cut off (and some imperceptible fissures are quite sufficient to prevent this,) then the devouring element pursues its course without interruption.

Near Mauch Chunk, Penn., is a burning coal mine, which has been on fire for many years. At Brule, near St. Etienne, there is a coal mine which has been on fire from time immemorial. Other burning coal mines are cited in France, for example, those of Decazeville, in Aveyron, and of Commentry, in the Department of Alier.

In the carboniferous basins of the Saarbruck and Silesia, there are likewise coal mines which have been on fire for a long time. In Belgium, between Namur and Charleroi, at a place called Falizolle, the fire has been alight for many years.

In the environs of Dudley, England, there was formerly a coal mine on fire. The snow melted in the gardens as soon as it touched the ground. They gathered three crops a year. Even tropical plants were cultivated; and as in the island of Calypso, an eternal spring prevailed. In another, Staffordshire colliery, the firing of which dates years back, and which is called by the inhabitants "Burning Hill," it was noticed as at Dudley, that the snow melted on reaching the ground, and that the grass in the meadows was always green.—Facts about Fires.

ANOTHER PORK SCARE.——The Pottsdam, N. Y., Courier and Freeman says that on slaughtering a sow of 450 pounds, fattened by Mr. H. D. French of that town, a dark colored streak was noticed extending under the back bone through the loin, in the lard, which on close examination proved to contain dark brown worms, from three-eighths to nearly one inch in length, with heads about the size of a pin's head, with slim tapering bodies. Nothing of the kind was perceptible in the lean meat, but they were found in clean looking parts of the lard. The hog was purchased last spring from a drove of western pigs.

In Brief.

—— Henry Ward Beecher has accepted $20,000 as his salary per year.—— Watts composed 697 hymns, and Wesley 600.—— The Pantheon at Rome, it is said, will be given by the Italian government for Protestant worship. This is the most ancient church in the Eternal city, and was dedicated in heathen days to Jupiter, the Avenger, and all gods. The pavement is said to rest on two hundred wagon loads of martyrs' bones, put there by order of Pope Boniface IV., in order to conquer the repugnance of the superstitious populace to entering it for christian worship. It has since been called the Church of Holy Mary and the Martyrs.—— There are about 11,000 cigar factories in the United States.——It is said that the ostrich only drinks once in five days.—— The number of siege guns of all calibres now in front of Paris, is 1,500.——In one building in Berlin there are 600 American sewing machines, at work on clothing for the Prussian army.—— Espionage is a special study of the Prussians. Their corps of spies is organized in the same way as their corps of artillery.——There are 3,642 languages spoken, and 1,000 different religions. ——A plum tree in the garden belonging to Mrs. Richard Kelley, of Edinburgh, Ind., blossomed three times this season.——Out of forty-seven Sisters of Charity, attending in the small-pox hospital at Paris, eleven have died.——An adjournment of the Conference on the Eastern question until the 24th is confirmed.——The beautiful cathedral of St. Denis, near Paris, is destroyed by the artillery of the invaders in order to give the Parisians a foretaste of what they may expect if they do not surrender.——The first daily newspaper printed in Virginia was printed in 1780, and the subscription price was fifty dollars per annum. ——Modern warfare—To open fire upon a city containing half a million women and children, without previous notice and without permitting them an opportunity to escape.——Of Webster's Speller, more than 50,000 copies have been sold. The present rate of production is 1,000,000 annually. Dr. Webster received one cent upon every copy. —— The people of the United States pay one hundred and twenty-five million dollars yearly for physicians' services and for medicines. They spend a good deal more than that for liquors and other things to make them sick.——It is stated as a proof of the effects of the war upon Germany that of nearly thirteen hundred students who were attending the University of Munich last summer, there are at present only about six hundred.—— A Scotchman's definition of metaphysics: "When the folks wha listen dinna ken the meaning o' what they bear, and when the mon who speaks dinna ken what he means his ain sel'—that's metafissicks. ——All railroad tickets are good until used, the conditions "good for this day only" being of no value, according to judicial decisions.——Rev. Washington Gladden of North Adams has accepted an offer to become the religious editor of the New York Independent.——On the memorable battle-fields of Wissembourg and Woerth there is little left to remind one of the fearful slaughters. A few houses, parts of the walls and gates, and the Chateau on the Geissenburg side, show signs of deadly strife, and a number of mounds which cover thousands of the fallen—all in heaps of so many hundred each—is all that remains.——The South Bend (Ind.) Union says: "We have in our office a lady compositor who cannot be excelled in the State for rapid 'composition' and 'clean proof.' Her name is Miss Augusta A. Miner, and her home is in Angola. She learned to set type in her father's office when only thirteen years of age, and a proof taken the other day of nine thousand ems, had but two typographical errors.——The Grand Trunk Railroad is to be laid with steel rails its entire length.——The Prussians have imposed a requisition of 40,000 francs upon the people of Yvetot and Havre as a punishment for the sympathy displayed by them for the French cause. ——Large droves of oxen, intended for Paris, have passed Rheims, and are ready for the advance of Gen. Chanzy, who is receiving reinforcements. ——The French have established a line of cruisers between Gibraltar and the English channel. Nine vessels have been appointed to the service, six of which are iron-clads.

Religious Items.

Just sixty-eight years ago, Mary Edwards started a female prayer meeting in a private house in Binghamton, N. Y., and continued regularly for fifty years, and in so doing founded the second largest society of Presbyterians now in the United States. ——Rev. Albert Barnes said that for thirty-seven years he had never had a divided vote in the session of his church.——The superstitious ignorance of a Romish population was well exhibited in Southern Italy, when the late auroral display was witnessed. The people took it as a sign of God's anger for the dethronement of the Pope, women ran about the streets saying ave marias and pater nosters, and a mob attacked the house of a Protestant evangelist.——The French have abrogated the Concordat with Rome, sundering another tie between the Papacy and civil power.——Rev. Mr. Knapp of the Baptist church in Madrid, Spain, is working very successfully there. He proposes soon to publish a semi-monthly paper.——Rev. A. B. Earle of Newton, the Evangelist, who has been absent several months, was reported at Wilmington, N. C., Dec. 30, preaching with great power and to united congregations of three thousand persons, with many conversions. He goes from city to city. ——St. Paul's church in Springfield has voted against the use of alcoholic wine for sacramental purposes, and the unfermented juice of the grape is now used at the communion service.——Rev. Dr. Bent, of Baltimore, reports that when in Boston he went to church, where he "heard music that made him wonder how he got in without a ticket."

SHELDON'S FOUR NEW TRACTS.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

1. LIFE AND DEATH THEOLOGY: or, The Scriptural Doctrine of Eternal Damnation and Everlasting Punishment. Price 8 cts. single, postage 2 cts.; 75 cts. per dozen, postpaid; $5.00 per hundred by express.

This work of forty-eight pages is the clearest and strongest document yet produced by Bro. Sheldon on this topic. It is just the thing to scatter among all classes.

2. IMMATERIALISM: or, The Doctrine of Soul-Immortality Refuted. Price 5 cts. single, postage 2 cts.; 40 cts. per dozen, postpaid; $3.00 per hundred by express.

A tract of thirty-two pages, showing that fifteen cardinal errors spring out of the doctrine of the soul's immortality, and that those errors could not exist independent of that doctrine, thus showing it to be the main root of error. Let it be scattered widely.

3. DEATH AND THE DEAD, 16 pages. Price 3 cts. single, postage 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen, postpaid; $1.50 per hundred by express.

Just the thing to scatter everywhere.

4. THE COMING JUDGMENT: Its Necessity and Result. Eight pages. 10 cts. per dozen, postpaid, or 75 cts. per hundred by express.

It will do much good.

For the World's Crisis.

ALMOST BEREFT.

Last eve, the moon in silvery radiance rose;
And as she cast her beams o'er hill and vale,
Methought a lovelier scene ne'er met my eye.
The wind had fall'n asleep, and bright the stars
Were glistering in the clear, cold sky, and o'er
The earth, snow-clad, a bridal loveliness
Had spread.
I wondered if this scene would be Surpassed by that we love to read about
In that old tome so flowing full of truth.
Wild fancy was about to take her wings
And revel in the clime of future bliss,
When, low my mother's voice fell on my ear,
Requesting me to take the watcher's part
Once more, beside the bed of him, my sire,
Once hale and hearty, but now stricken down
By fell disease. In vain the skill of man
Hath tried to bring the health-flush to his cheek;
In vain for months we've hoped against all hope,
So much doth man love life and cling to it,—
And now the shadows deepen in his path,
And death seems sometimes very near.
Would'st know
How he doth view the darksome waves that roll
With threatening murmurs almost at his feet?
Oh, 'tis with christian love and fortitude
Who well becomes a soldier of the cross,
That long hath borne a part in holy strife,
And knows that he hath overcome the world;
And often from his heart come welling up
Sweet words of comfort and of lasting peace,
To us who may a little while remain.
Oh! blessed hope, that can in death's dark hour
Bring cheer to weary, waiting hearts of hope.
And as the moonbeams yester-eve could shed
A calm and heavenly radiance on the earth,
Despite the cold and cheerless shroud it wore;
So, reflect from the Sun of Righteousness
Faith lights our pathway through the frigid clime,
To realms of everlasting joy beyond.
So hope we on, so soon to be bereft,
And bow beneath bereavement, when the stroke
Is heavy, with the grace we bear the rod
When lightly laid.
Full soon the parted skies
Reveal the Royal Majesty at hand;
Then farewell, sorrow, sighing, pain and death,
God is our God. He will be all in all.

For the World's Crisis.

ARE YOU RELIGIOUS?

Beloved reader! will you give thought to the question I now propose to you—Are you religious?

My question is not—Do you attend at the house of prayer in your town, or village? Nor is it—Are you of the Catholic or Protestant persuasion? Nor—Are you a Baptist, Methodist, Congregationalist, Adventist, Lutheran, Episcopalian, or Presbyterian? It is not even—Do you profess to be religious? Nay, nay; it is more pointed; it is more important than these all. In short, it is this: Are you religious? Yes, or no? which is it? Now, dear friend, no preliminary or introductory answers; take simply—Are you religious? Do you believe yourself to be so? Have you a deep persuasion that you have the "pure religion and undefiled" that the apostle James speaks of? Is there a conviction now in your heart prompting an affirmative answer? Have you the evidences in your life that you are religious?

Do you wish to know what it is to be religious? Says James—"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Here are the two ingredients of "pure religion." Have you this kind of religion?—I mean the "pure religion"? How are you to know? In this way: You knew Widow So-and So was poor, had a large family depending on her—poor weakly soul! and did you "visit" her? Did her eye ever see you cross her threshold with a nice bundle of warm clothing to keep the cold from stinging herself and children in winter? And did your arms ever ache with the weight of "food for the hungry," and rest only inside the humble cot of the forgotten and forsaken of all but God? And did your purse-band ever relent its clutch at your good will, and open and gladden the eyes of her who could join with Peter and John and say, "Silver and gold have I none"? And did you ever wait, and say, "Now are you sure you are quite supplied? Can't I do something more for you?" And have you taken the Bible under your arm, and its comfort in your heart, and read to the bereaved and the fatherless words of cheer, and the consolations of God? Have you taught and exhorted and beseeched the ignorant, with flowing soul, to embrace the promises of God and Christ therein, and wait for "the kingdom of God" and "his Son from heaven"? Speak, or be speechless with condemnation! Answer. You know your life. Are you religious so far? Yes, or No?

Then the next part of religion is for a man to "keep himself unspotted from the world." That is, from the inordinate love of it as a possession; the love of its rebel-company, and of its sins, which is its lawlessness; yea, all that is in the world—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life? Do you keep yourself from its pride and self-sufficiency, through living by faith on the Son of God, and depending on him for all? Do you "keep" yourself from its lawlessness by learning the will of God and doing it through imparted Divine purpose and the power of the Spirit? Do you "keep" yourself from its company by being a lover of good men, and "not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together" with them, as the God-pleasing manner of some is? Do you cleanse yourself from secret sins—private besetments—even to the thoughts of your heart; and begin the keeping of yourself by "keeping the heart with all diligence"? Do you do all this by the Spirit and the Blood? If so, if you do this—and you know if you do—you have the "pure religion."

There are other kinds of religion about; and I charge you, reader, be not deceived. Some men think they have religion; but they deceive their own hearts. I have been telling you of "pure and undefiled religion before God." That is genuine in God's sight: he delights to behold it. But there is religion before man, which is everything but "pure and undefiled." O how I am grieved to see so much of it about. This is man's religion. Wear a good exterior. Be very moral and upright. Secret sins are infirmities from which there is no deliverance. Be as good as you know how. Strive to enter the kingdom by the "strait gate" of your own good works. Give a good round sum to chapel building; and as much and more than you have a mind to, for "keeping up" the ministry in good style. You may send a dollar to the poor occasionally; but it would lower a respectable person to go into a poor home; besides, your nice silk dresses may pick up some dirt and be soiled there. You are allowed to dress gay, and you need not when you "visit" go into the homes of poverty and crime; you may "visit" the grandees of society; "visit" the store which keeps the latest [illegible] dance hall; in short, there is scarcely any restriction as long as you know the way to behave yourself when there, conduct yourself properly, and keep up your "reputation" as a "respectable" christian. You must, however, make your will, and put down $1000 to be divided among deserving objects, $999 of which go to the missionary and other societies; and the one left, not knowing what to do with it, to poor Widow —— (I leave you to supply the name). This is religion before man; and I have not put in the blacker shades.

Do you think you have got the "pure" religion? Would it not be well to look and see? The examination can do you no harm any way; and—God bless you!—it may save you from being fatally self-deceived.

No. Scituate, R. I. W. KELLAWAY.

For the World's Crisis.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

There is a great necessity for watchfulness on the part of God's saints in these last days. It is the policy of Satan to distract and divide the people of God. He resorts to various means in order to accomplish his purposes. He will cause misunderstandings to occur between brethren, and most generally of a very insignificant nature in the outset, which he will magnify to unusual proportions, that will sometimes involve a whole church in partisan strife. If we were only sufficiently on the alert, we might detect the designs of Satan and subvert them. Those difficulties are frequently of a nature that touch our personal interests; then the old enemy puts us on our dignity, and whispers—"You are right, stick to it!" when an investigation is sure to reveal the fact that there is wrong on both sides, and a very little mutual yielding would set the matter all right.

Be on your guard! "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth." Cheat Satan of a victory. Do not sacrifice your peace. That is one inevitable result of such difficulties. O! what a loss to lose our sweet peace. Just think of it. Can a few dollars, or a little dignity, recompense us for the loss of christian peace? Never!

Another result is, the loss of influence. When we get mixed up in Satan's dirty work, our friends lose confidence in us; it makes them feel bad. Worldly people lose confidence in you. They are watching closely, and are usually the first to detect any inconsistency. In all such cases it will take a long time to regain lost influence.

And then, again, there are mostly some who are ready to charge all such difficulties to the account of Christianity, and thus the cause of Christ suffers. Our dear Savior is wounded in the house of his friends. The very thought of this result should cause us to pause and reflect before we consent to play into the hands of Satan. Be on your guard. It frequently happens, also, that one or both parties in such difficulties ultimately backslide; just what Satan aims at; and then, unless they repent, they lose eternal life. Only think of it! to barter away eternal life for a little self-will and dignity. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" (or eternal life.) Let us place a higher estimate upon eternal things, and then we shall not so easily relinquish them, and "when the enemy cometh in as a flood, the Lord will lift up a standard against him."

A dear brother, who had recently started in the way of life and salvation, had a slanderous report circulated about him, which made him feel very bad; and Satan suggested that he follow it up, and trace it out. But he wisely concluded, first, to seek the advice of his pastor, who cautioned him against the wiles of Satan, and advised him to take no notice whatever of the matter. He acted in accordance with the advice given. The result was, he retained his peace, his religion, and his hope; and, furthermore, in a little while the originator of the slander came to him, confessed, asked and received forgiveness, and Satan was cheated. Be on your guard! GEO. THOMSON.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The thirteenth annual gathering of the R. I. and Eastern Ct. Conference was held as appointed with the Church at Rocky Brook, R. I. Jan. 4–6, 1871. Wednesday, P. M. a profitable social meeting. In the evening preaching by the clerk from Matt. 16: 3. Thursday, nine and a half A. M. Met for business. As our Moderator had not arrived, Bro. E Bellows was called to the chair. After prayer by Bro. Card, the minutes of our last meeting and the Treasurer's report were read and accepted as correct.

REPORTS OF CHURCHES.

Churches were then reported as follows: Bristol.—Have gained in spirituality and numbers during the past year. Much prejudice has been removed from the minds of the people. Have a new house of worship, which will seat about two hundred and fifty persons. Also a good Sabbath school. Exeter.—Some are trying to split the church with the seventh-day wedge, but have hopes that they will not succeed. Have some good meetings yet. North Scituate.—Soon after last conference Brn. Kellaway and Cotton held a protracted meeting with them. Had ten hopeful conversions. Since then have been prospering under the labors of Bro. Kelloway. A week or two since five more arose for prayers. East Gloucester.—Not satisfied with their present condition. Some have wandered, but think they can be reclaimed. Desire more preaching. Rocky Brook.—Some improvement since last conference. Still suffering for lack of gospel order, and from other causes. Need a good pastor. West Gloucester.—All remain firm, and continue to advance. Wyoming.—No marked change. Danielsonville.—Two have manifested a desire to become christians during the last quarter. River Point.—Are having spirited and interesting meetings. Some members of other churches are getting interested in the truths we love. Rockland.—Prospect more encouraging than for a long time in the past. Preaching every Sabbath. Pascoag.—In a very low state. West Greenwich.—Enjoying a season of refreshing. Some ten or more conversions. Warwick Plains.—A new church has been recently organized, which seems to be prospered of the Lord. Lafayette.—Still in a good spiritual condition.

PREACHERS' REPORTS.

The following preachers reported. The first ten in person, the other's by letter: E. Bellows, J. S. Collins, E. B. Card, R. R. Perry, [illegible] Kellaway, Peter Noka, Sister [illegible] Corey. These reports were full of cheer. All felt that it was sweet to work for Jesus. Some spoke of the last year as being the best of their ministry. They had seen more conversions, enjoyed more peace, etc., than during any previous year. Each wanted more humility and consecration; more earnestness, perseverance, and devotion, and desired through the coming year to show themselves workmen approved of God.

It will be seen that some of our members did not report. We do not like to attribute their neglect to lack of interest in the conference, but trust that they either overlooked the by-law which requires them to report to each annual meeting; or that circumstances over which they had no control prevented their reporting. It is hoped that all such will report at our next quarterly meeting. In the afternoon a timely discourse by Bro. Roberts on the subject of prayer. Bro. E. B Card spoke in the evening from Eph. 4: 30.

Friday, 9 A. M. Met for business. Bro. Durfee in the chair. Bro. Bellows gave a report of his visit to the Rocky Brook church. Report accepted, and committee discharged. The Clerk presented a request from the North Scituate church for the ordination of Bro. Kellaway.

Voted, To grant their request, and ordain Bro. Kellaway during this session of the conference.

Moved, That we have a campmeeting the coming season, under the jurisdiction of this conference. After considerable discussion it was voted to lay the motion on the table until the next conference.

Moved, That we appoint a committee to consult the churches, and learn their minds with regard to having a campmeeting. Carried. The clerk was chosen that committee. Moved, That we amend the seventh article of the Constitution by striking out these words, "In tracts and distribute them at each quarterly meeting to preachers and others." Carried. The article as amended reads thus: "This conference shall be in its operations a Home Missionary Society, and invites the churches to aid them in the work by such contributions as they are able. And there shall be a contribution taken up at each quarterly conference for this object. The Treasurer shall expend these contributions of money as the conference may direct."

After re-electing A. Durfee Moderator, and C. H. Sweet Clerk and Treasurer, the conference adjourned to meet with the church at North Scituate, R. I., the first Wednesday in April next.

In the afternoon Bro Peter Noka gave us one of his characteristic discourses from—"Have faith in God." In the evening began with a prayer-meeting, at the close of which a poor distressed soul arose without being invited, and in language broken with sobs requests prayers for herself and another. Then came the ordination of Bro. Wm. Kellaway, recently from England, who during the past four months has been laboring among us to good acceptance. The sermon was by Bro. Durfee. Text, 1 Tim. 4: 16. It was pronounced a "sound" sermon. Charge by Bro. Durfee. Prayer and right hand of fellowship, by Bro. E. Bellows.

Taken as a whole, this meeting was a good one. No one, as far as we know, has any reason to be dissatisfied. Some enjoyed it exceedingly. C. H. SWEET, Clerk.

For the World's Crisis.

PECULIAR PEOPLE.

There seems to be a class of people at the present day, who are considered by many as being "very peculiar," "fanatical,"—those who are "continually prying into the secrets of the Almighty," and who are often met with the remark, "If you would only give up this miserable doctrine, you might be somebody in the world." But possibly those who are willing to believe God's simple truth, and to obey its teachings, may be "somebody," after all; for we read that it is the "poor of this world that are rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom." And all those who are willing to deny themselves for Christ's sake, forsaking all to follow him, shall in this life receive a hundred-fold and in the world to come life everlasting. Then "they that endure unto the end, shall inherit all things." And is not this better than to seek the honor and praise of men, while we seek to enjoy the pleasures of this world for a little season, and then lose the promised inheritance at last?

Is it not best to examine, study, and "search the Scriptures," and find out fully what this "miserable doctrine" is, and what the promises are to those who are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, before we so hastily speak of a subject that we have not given a thorough investigation? We very well know that sinners cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven; for those who continue in sin, and will not accept of the "gift of God" on the terms which are offered, will not receive "eternal life," but rather, the "wages of sin," which is "death." Rom. 6: 23.

Since, then, we are to choose between life and death, we naturally inquire first, on what conditions may we obtain life, for that is what we all desire to have. We read in Romans 2: 7, that it is "to them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality," he will render "eternal life." And this life is to be in a kingdom free from all sorrow, pain, and death, forevermore. "The inhabitants shall not say, I am sick; the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity." Isa. 33: 24. Who does not want to be of that people, and feel willing to suffer and endure with them while here, the scoffs and frowns of the world, although they may be called "peculiar," and deemed unworthy of worldly honors, if they may but receive the smiles and approbation of their heavenly Master, when he shall come to gather together his jewels, and welcome them into those bright "mansions," which he has prepared for them? God has told us that he would "purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Titus 2: 14.

And knowing this, it is well for us that we are classed among that people, for all such as are "pure in heart" have the promise that they shall see him, and not only see him, but be made like him, and dwell forever in his presence.

THE BURDEN-BEARER.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee."—Ps. 55: 22.

There are many kinds of burdens, and but few feel themselves free from a burden of some kind. Some bear their burdens cheerfully, and some seem ready to sink under their load. Peter exhorts us to cast all our care upon Him, for he careth for us. How shall we do this? How shall we cast our care and our burden upon the Lord? The answer comes in the words of one of our most familiar hymns—

"Take it to the Lord in prayer."

"Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Matt. 6: 6.

Bro. or sister, have you a burden? Are you perplexed with the business and the cares of this life? Have you trials that may not be told to those who are around you? You may go and tell Jesus. Cast your care and your burden upon him, and he will sustain you.

How much anxious care, how many painful forebodings, are now bearing down and almost crushing the weary, heavy-laden ones, when they might be cast upon the Lord, to the great relief and unspeakable joy of the burdened heart. "The heart knoweth its own bitterness," and each individual knows his own burden. And if you have a burden that seems too heavy for you, just try this plan, and go and tell Jesus.

I have tried it, and have always found the promise verified, "He shall sustain thee." Even if the source or cause of grief be not wholly removed, you will at least find this assurance, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Mourning pilgrim, there is consolation for you, and it is within your reach. There is nothing too hard for the Lord. If your grief is like a mountain, it shall be removed in answer to prayer. When you have tried it, then you will praise the Lord, and be ready to tell what he hath done for you.

WEST PARSONSFIELD, ME.

A good interest has been awakened and is prevailing in this community, within several weeks past, in the cause of religion, and still the work is onward, we believe; for while some have decided to be for Christ, there are others laboring under deep conviction, and it really seems that they will yield to the influence of the Spirit and join the praying band, and the work of the Lord abound to the saving of many more in the place. Up to his time, fourteen have acknowledged their intention of serving Christ, the most part of whom were wanderers from the Lord. A few weeks ago some of our brethren, living near by, established a prayer-meeting in the place, which is an old, neglected and run-down field of labor, formerly occupied by the Free-will Baptists and others; and the Lord has prospered the effort. Bro. Mark Stevens has labored to a considerable extent in the place, earnestly, faithfully, and effectively; also Bros. H. M. Bryant and A. Stillings have labored some, and to good acceptance. Large congregations for a country place attend the meetings, and give the best of attention to hearing the word. It seems that, with good cultivation and care, fruit may be had in the [illegible]

HOW TO SPELL.—Often, in writing, a simple word is required, of the orthography of which the writer is not sure. The dictionary may be referred to—but is not always convenient. An easy mode is to write the word on a bit of waste paper, in the two or three ways of which you are in doubt. Nine times in ten the mode which looks right is right. Spelling—particularly English spelling—is so completely a work of the eye, that the eye alone should be trusted. There is no reason why "receive" and "believe" should be spelt differently, yet sounded alike in their second syllables. Yet write them "recieve" and "beleive," and the eye shows you the mistake at once. The best way for young people, and indeed people of any age, to learn to spell, is to practice writing. Cobbett, the famous English radical, taught his children grammar by requiring that they should copy their lessons two or three times. These lessons he himself gave them in the form of letters; and his French and English grammars are two of the most amusing books in the English language. Of course "learning to spell" came in incidentally.

A PRAYER.

"Thy will be done," e'er though it be
To suffer, Lord, awhile for thee;
In deepest agony, to feel
That Jesus doeth all things well."

Then welcome sorrow, toil, and pain,
My losses here prove greater gain;
Blessed Redeemer, help me bear
A few more days this load of care.

Give strength, that I may ne'er complain,
Nor cast a backward glance again;
Give courage, that I ever dare,
Amid reproach thy cross to bear.

Grant faith beneath the cross to see
The star-gemmed crown that waits for me—
To wait,—"unto the end endure,"
Because thy "promises are sure."

—Free Methodist.

☞ There is a beautiful legend illustrating the blessedness of performing our duty at whatever cost to our own inclinations. A beautiful vision of our Savior had appeared to a monk, and, in silent bliss, he was gazing on it. The hour arrived at which he was to feed the poor of the convent. He lingered not in his cell to enjoy the vision, but he left to perform his humble duty. When he returned he found the blessed vision still waiting for him, and uttering these words: "Hadst thou staid I must have fled."

☞ I have heard some persons, when leaving a place of worship, admiring the minister, and exclaiming, "what splendid language! what beautiful metaphors! what original illustrations!" May they rather say, after hearing me, "what sinners we are! what a glorious Christ we have! what a blessed salvation!"—Rowland Hill.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

"CATCHING COLD," OR "CATCHING HEAT"?

The season during which the complaints commonly called "colds" prevail most extensively is now upon us. . . . There is a general misapprehension of the true nature of these affections, and of their causes, the very phrases cold and catching cold being often misnomers, and we propose to show that in many cases the trouble is caused by catching heat rather than catching cold.

The parts usually affected by colds, are the lining membranes of the nose, throat and lungs, or, more properly, of the bronchial tubes; for when the lung substance is attacked, the affection is of a very different and more severe character than a common cold. . . . . Every one knows that in going from a hot room to a cold one, or to the outside air in cold weather, they are liable to get cold, but very few know that they incur the same danger in going from a cold atmosphere into a warmer one. . . . .

As before stated, the mucous membrane of the air-passages are the parts affected in colds, and are supplied freely with blood-vessels and mucous follicles, which in health pour out sufficient mucus to keep the membrane moist and healthy; when a cold is contracted, the increase of this mucus is one of the most prominent symptoms, and is caused in this way: you probably know that when cold is applied to the skin in any way it drives the blood from it by constricting the vessels, and that as soon as the column of blood regains its force, the fluid returns to the skin in increased quantity; this fact is well illustrated by plunging the hand into hot water after it has been benumbed with cold; the redness of the skin, and the painful tingling produced, give pretty good evidence of the force with which the blood returns. Now this is just what happens in the mucous membrane of the air-passages; the cold air, passing over the membrane, drives the blood from it temporarily, but when it returns it comes with greater force and in larger quantity than is natural, distending the blood-vessels, and forcing a greater amount of the fluid to the mucous surface, exciting them to increased activity, and they then pour out a larger amount of the mucous secretion than is discharged in health, in order to relieve the congested state of the mucous membrane. . . .

How can we avoid them, you ask, if both cold and heat give us colds. We cannot reduce the temperature of our rooms below a comfortable degree, nor elevate that of the outside air; very true; but you can very often avoid going immediately from a cold room into a hot one, and vice versa. After coming in from very cold outside air, linger for a minute or two in the hall, or on the staircase, before entering the heated rooms—which, by the way, are much too hot generally—and on leaving the house observe the same rule. Many will consider these needless precautions, useless trouble, etc., but some people are exceedingly susceptible to colds without knowing why they contract them, when, as they suppose, they have not been exposed to any exciting cause, and it is to those who are so exceedingly susceptible that these precautions are particularly recommended; at first, perhaps their observance will be a little troublesome, but after following them for a short time, and experiencing their benefit, those who have been sufferers from almost continuous colds during the winter season, will feel well repaid for their attention, by the unusual freedom from these troublesome complaints which they will experience. —Good Health.

BATHING.

Regular bathing, so far as the people of this country are concerned, is certainly a habit of pure modern adoption. The fathers and mothers, and grandfathers and grandmothers of those who have reached middle life, seldom or never bathed except in the warm months of summer. Their dwellings afforded no conveniences for the act, if they felt the need of performing it. As a general thing, the health was unaffected by this omission. Why was this? Because of their occupations and methods of living. They were active workers, they wore but a small amount of clothing, they lived much in the open air, and their dwellings were without stove and furnace heat. . . . Dry friction over the whole surface of the body, once a day or more in two days, is often of more service than the application of water. The reply of the centenarian to the inquiry, to what habit of life he attributed his good health, and extreme longevity, that he believed it due to "rubbing himself all over with a cob every night, is significant of an important truth."

If invalids and persons of low vitality would use dry friction and Dr. Franklin's "air-bath" every day for a considerable period, we are confident they would often be greatly benefited. Cleanliness is next to godliness, no doubt, and a proper and judicious use of water is to be commended; but human beings are not amphibious. Nature indicates that the functions of the skin should be kept in order mainly by muscular exercise, by exciting natural perspiration by labor; and delicious as is the bath, and healthful under proper regulations, it is no substitute for that exercise of the body, without which all the functions become abnormal.—Journal of Chemistry.

The Children's Corner.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

For the "Children's Corner."

LITTLE FOLKS NEAT, TIDY, GENTEEL.

"Oh! the light from their glad faces
Makes a little heaven below;
So we have named them fireside angels,
Yes, their love from heaven doth flow."

Little folks neat and clean, pink-like, rosy-like? Certainly, neat as a pink, sweet and heavenly as the morning rose; cheerful as the singing birds, happy all day long in doing what is pleasing to the Lord.

Little friends, fix yourselves up neatly, genteelly, especially when you rise in the morning, come to the table, to family prayers, or attend the house of God. You'll feel better, hear better, pray better, do everything better. No slovenly person feels as he ought. Make this a matter of conscience. See that your bodies are fit temples for the Holy Spirit.

With what care and attention do the feathered race wash themselves, and put their plumage in order, and how perfectly neat, clean, and elegant do they appear. Among the beasts of the field we find that those which are the most cleanly are generally the most gay and cheerful, or are distinguished by a certain air of tranquillity and contentment; and singing birds are always remarkable for the neatness of their plumage. So great is the effect of cleanliness upon man, that it extends even to his moral character. Virtue never dwelt long with filth.

Some little boys and girls, we are sorry to say, remind us of the peacock and butterfly, who take pride in dress; tip off gaily in fine things, gew-gaws and artificials, and think more of a pretty face, a new dress, a new coat, bonnet or hat, than of the improvement of the mind and heart, the blessed Bible, and of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We never see a person proud of his dress but we think, well, he has only cast-off clothes, after all; he has the jacket of the lamb, and the old great coat of the sheep; from head to foot he is dressed in what the trees or the animals have used before him. His shoes are made of hides, his stockings of the cotton-shrub, his shirt of the flax-plant, his handkerchief is spun by the caterpillar, and his gloves are the waistcoat of the angola. Why not say,

"Then will I set my heart to find
Inward adorning of the mind;
Knowledge and virtue, truth and grace,
These are the robes of richest dress."

Want you to look pretty? Certainly we do, young friends, pretty as pretty can be; beautiful as the morning rose, as the lilies of the field. But what is beauty, and what will make you beautiful? Heaven in your souls, Jesus, the Lamb of God! Meanwhile adorning yourselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but (which becometh women professing godliness,) "with good works"—"with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Such a spectacle of the morally sublime is the admiration of angels.

"Look to the garden of your heart,
For weeds are growing there;
With faithful prayer act well your part,
It needs a constant care."

In advocating gospel simplicity in costume, the entire avoidance of display or worldly conformity, the adorning of gold, pearls, or costly array, we should be careful not to fall into an opposite extreme, and neglect our exterior deportment. The neglect of the outward appearance indicates either a little mind, or a disregard to the opinions of our neighbors. One should always be neat and clean in person and dress, because this is an evidence of respectability and the fear of God. No lady, who has any regard for herself, or any respect for the society in which she moves, will be slovenly in her appearance, or careless in her attire. To dress simply, and without ostentation, is not only a mark of modesty, but of gospel simplicity and purity.

"Modesty, like diamonds, shine most fair,
More worth than pearls or rubies are;
More rich than gold or silver coin,
O may it always on us shine."

Behold the daughter of innocence! How beautiful is the mildness of her countenance; how lovely is the diffidence of her looks! Her cheek is dyed with the deep crimson of the rose; her eye is placid and serene, and the gentleness of her speech is as the melting softness of the flute. Her smiles are as the enlivening rays of the sun; the beauty of her presence, as the silver light of the moon. Her attire is simple; her feet tread with caution, and she feareth to give offence.

"I almost think the angels,
Who tend life's garden fair,
Drop down the sweet wild blossoms
That bloom around us here."

D. F. N., Author of "Apples of Gold."

"WHEN HE COMES."

ANTHONY BUSCH.

O for that day, that natal day,
When sleeping earth shall wake,
And from her eyelids shake
The lethargy of ages lost in sin,
And taste the joys—those joys that might have been;—
'Twill be—'twill only be—when He comes.

O for the time, that promised time,
When nature, bowed in gloom,
Shall rise afresh to bloom;
When all the pangs of Paradise deplored
Shall be the bliss of Paradise restored!
'Twill be—'twill only be—when He comes.

O for that hour, that hallowed hour,
When mortal dust shall stand
Where the sure guardian hand
Shall signal to the dying clay—"Arise!"
And man redeemed, immortal, pierce the skies!
'Twill be—'twill only be—when He comes.

O for the age, undying age,
When death and woe and pain
Shall curse no more again;
When blooming earth renewed, enrobed in light,
Shall swell the tuneful chorus to His might;
'Twill be—'twill only be—when he comes.

THE LAW OF GOD.

R. W. WILSON.

From the use which Seventh Day teachers make of the expression "The Law," as frequently found in the Bible, we would be led to believe that it always referred to the ten commandments. We will give a few Scriptural examples to show that this expres[sion] [illegible] meaning; [illegible] reference to the five [bo]oks of M[ose]s, the Pentateuch, and at other times [it re]lates to any part of the Jewish Scriptur[es]; it signifies, also, God's doctrine as a whole, embracing all the instruction he has given in his word. John 10; 34: "Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, "I said, Ye are gods?" John 12: 34: "The people answered him, We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever." John 15: 25: "But this cometh to pass that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, they hated me without a cause." Matt. 5: 17, 18: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

What law did the Savior refer to here? This is answered by a passage in Luke 24: 44, "And he said unto them, these are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning me." Gal. 4: 21, "Tell me ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?" Paul means by the first expression, "under the law," the one which is contained in the first covenant, and in the allegory, of which he speaks in the connection, as from Mount Sinai which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar: but in the second, "do ye not hear the law," the context shows that he has reference to what is written in Gen. and in Isa. Psalm 19: 7: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." The marginal reading is "doctrine," [illegible] that which is taught. [illegible] any other to prove the perfection of [the] ten commandments, as a rule for moral [co]nduct; but they offer not the slightest [pr]oof that this text has any more reference to the Decalogue, than it has to any other portion of the All Scripture given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine.

In reading an article on the law, written by Eld. J. H. Waggoner, I find he has used this text six times as the foundation of his theory relative to the perfection of the ten commandments; and as one error is generally the root of another, he has produced several from his perversion of this Scripture, that are very contradictory to the word of God and quite pernicious in their tendencies.

I will give you some of his own words on this point as found in No. 38 of The Signs of The Times. "But if it could be shown that another law had been given in the New Testament, why should it be called a better law than that given on Mt. Sinai? Could it be more just in its nature? That was perfect. Could it be more replete with moral obligations? . . . But if that law was perfect, embracing in its requirements the whole duty of man (and so it must have been or the Scriptures are not true), then every principle of morality that could arise out of our relation to God or our fellow-men must have been embraced in it. . . . If all the moral duties growing out of our relation to God and to our fellow-creatures were included in that, then none remained to be added thereafter."

False premises produce false conclusions. According to Eld. Waggoner's teaching we have no moral instruction in the word of God, either in the New Testament or in the Old, except what is contained in the ten commandments. Inasmuch as the object of this writer is to prove the importance and supremacy of the ten commandments, as a code of moral instruction over the teachings of the New Testament, we will examine this position in the light of the Divine word. Deut. 18: 18, 19, "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.

By referring to the context of this Scripture you will find that God in accordance with the request of the children of Israel, did not give them all of his words or commands in the day of the assembly in Horeb (or Sinai), but reserved a portion to be given and commanded by his prophet like unto Moses; and it is very manifest from the doctrine of Christ, which is the doctrine of God, that the words or commandments which God has spoken to us by his Son have much more weight in point of completeness, and in producing moral obligations, than those of the Decalogue. Acts 3: 22, 23: "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me: him shall ye hear in all things, which he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." John 8: 51: "Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man keep my sayings he shall never see death." Therefore, if destruction is the result of not hearing this prophet and eternal life the result of "keeping his sayings," he must have given some very vital instruction touching morality.

Prominent in these sayings of Christ we find "Have faith in God;" and "This is the word of God that ye believe on him whom he hath sent," also repentance and remission of sins, supreme love to God, love to our neighbor, and the promise of eternal life in the kingdom of God as the reward. These sayings are saving, and meet the real wants of fallen humanity. Said Paul, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by our Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" Again in 1st Tim. 4: 16: "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee."

What doctrine does Paul refer to here that is so saving? The doctrine of Christ which he had declared, and called it "the whole counsel of God;" and in giving God's whole counsel did he ever enjoin obedience to the ten commandments? No; but the strongest arguments he ever used were in support of the fact that God does not require perfect obedience to any law as the ground of justification, but heart-faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

After giving in Rom. 3: the most indisputable and infallible proofs in support of this position, he sums up by saying, "therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." Paul did say in giving the whole counsel of God with regard to the fourth precept of the Decalogue, in Col. 2: 16, "Let no man therefore judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath;" and also in 1 Tim. 1: 9, "Knowing this that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for whoremongers, for them which defile themselves with mankind, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine." Mark this point, "the law is not made for a righteous man."

We learn from this that after a man has received Christ and abides in him by faith, [illegible] complete [illegible] peace and joy in the Holy Spirit; and having the Spirit in him, and the love of God shed abroad in his heart thereby, he is in possession of that pre-eminent, law-fulfilling power—love; and it is his very nature to live righteously. He does not require the restraint of law, for it is the love of Christ which constrains him; so the law is not made for such, but for the disobe[dient].

We r[ead] in Isa. 33: 22, "For the Lord is our judge; the Lord is our lawgiver; the Lord is our king; he will save us." We are required to fulfil the law of Christ. What is the law of Christ? It is the doctrine of Christ. 2 John 1: 9: "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." Did Christ teach his own doctrine or that of his Father? John 7: 16: "Jesus answered them and said my doctrine is not mine but his that sent me." And whereas God did not give all of his doctrine necessary for the moral instruction and salvation of man, when he gave the law from Mt. Sinai, but reserved what he has given since by his Son, this in itself furnishes positive evidence that any exposition of Scripture that is used to show the perfection of the ten commandments as a moral law embracing the whole duty of man, is grossly perverted.

We will hear Eld. Waggoner again. I now quote from the 44th No. of the same paper referred to above. In this article he uses his favorite text "The law of the Lord is perfect" over and over again, on which to base his arguments in favor of the perfection of the ten commandments; and he claims "that this law is so perfect that in the day of judgment God will judge the world by it. The day when God will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." But why did he not give the balance of this passage? Because it would spoil the point he was trying to establish. I will give you the whole passage. "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel", and not according to the ten commandments.

It is equally as culpable in any one to suppress a part of God's word, in order to give a different sense from the one contained in the passage as to add to it for the same end.

In another article we have found that this same writer has added one of his words to the word of God, in order to give strength to his position. If we find any more of this unfair dealing, we will not only conclude that Eld. Waggoner is the advocate of theories that are not in harmony with divine truth, but that he himself is not just what he ought to be. God has said in the passage already quoted, Deut., "It shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name I will require it of him." When will he require it of him? John 12: 48, 49: "He that rejected me and receiveth not my words hath one that judgeth him; the words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. For (or because) I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say and what I should speak."

Therefore the commandments of Christ are the commandments of God, and we have found that the doctrine or truth spoken by Christ is the doctrine or truth of God. Ps. 96: 13, "He shall judge the world with righteousness and the people with his truth." Eccl. 12: 13, 14, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. For God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel; and Paul's gospel was the gospel of Christ; and why will God judge the world according to it? Because it contains the sum and substance of every moral precept that God has given to man. It gives the fullest revelation of sin in its various forms, and it presents the [illegible] whole duty of man with the greatest [illegible] ness and comprehensiveness.

Jesus said in relation to the Jews who were in possession of the law, and who lived under all the light of its obligations,—John 15: 22, "If I had not come and spoken unto them they had not had sin, but now they have no excuse (margin) for their sin."

But we will hear Eld. Waggoner once more on this subject. I quote from the 37th No. of The Signs of The Times: "Some would be willing to admit that Paul's endorsement of the Old Testament Scriptures is correct in some degree; they would accept his words yet under large limitations, but Paul's words allow of no limitations. . . . After saying "they are able to make thee wise unto salvation, they are profitable for doctrine, for discipline, for instruction in right-doing;" he adds, "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works;" and as a confirmation of this he gives his usual text, "David said the law was perfect." This statement does not apply to us, for we receive this divine utterance of truth in full, and not with the limitation in which it comes to us from Eld. Waggoner. He has left out that portion of this passage which explains all the rest: "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, [How?] through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

The Old Testament Scriptures mentioned here were only able to make wise unto salvation by means of the report which they gave of the Savior, and men were saved in Old Testament times, in the same way that they are now, not by rendering perfect obedience to any law. God saved them graciously by counting their faith in him who was to come and put away sin by the sacri[fice of] himself, to them for righteousness [illegible] the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets, even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all and upon all them that believe."

"Being witnessed by the law and the prophets, "every sacrificial offering made for sin by the law witnessed for Christ, that he would come and "put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And the prophets taught both his sufferings for us, and his righteousness. Jer. 23: 6, "In his days Judah shall be saved and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is the name whereby he shall be called the Lord our Righteousness." Ps. 89: 16, "In thy name shall they rejoice all the day, and in thy righteousness shall they be exalted." Isa. 44: 17, "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." Our blessed Savior called Abel righteous, and he is the first one of our race who is thus declared. He was brought into this condition by faith in the promise God had made of a Redeemer, which he evinced by the offering of a more excellent sacrifice than Cain; and all who have become righteous since the days of righteous Abel down to this day, have been made such in the same way, namely, by having their faith in Christ counted or reckoned to them for righteousness.

God has but one method to save men, which is by his grace through faith in Christ, and this he instituted immediately after sin had entered into the world, and our race was brought under the curse [illegible] means of his promises relati[ve] [illegible]. This he has called his word, [illegible] covenant, reaching from the fall of man, through time, unto the eternal kingdom. It was confirmed to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, also to David, and [once] more by Christ, who sealed it [with his own] blood. It was called the [illegible] to distinguish it from the [illegible] covenant. Ps. 10[illegible] his covenant [illegible] commanded [illegible] covenant [illegible] oath [illegible] unto Jacob for a law." The covenant declared here consisted in the promise God made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob concerning Christ and the eternal inheritance. But how was this confirmed unto Jacob for a law? Because "by the obedience o' faith in this promise he was brought into the same condition of righteousness as the fullest obedience to a given law could have rendered him [Having the same point in view Paul speaks of the law of faith"]. Jacob is a representative of all who have heart-faith, and like him wrestle with God and prevail.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE GREAT PROPHETIC SYMBOLS OF DANIEL AND JOHN.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

While Daniel's attention was fixed in considering the ten horns, "behold there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots." There is a general agreement of writers as to the application of the ten horns to the kingdoms of the Roman empire, but some dispute as to the application of this little horn, we will notice some of the conditions of prophecy.

First, it is said that this little horn came up among them, i. e., the ten. It was in Western Rome, for here was where the body of the beast grew, and here is where the ten horns are to be found, and are located by Machiavel, the Catholic historian, and others. As this "little horn" was to come up "among" the "ten," and the "ten" can only be located in Western Rome, it follows and is certain that this "little horn" can in no way be identical with the Eastern empire. The Eastern empire at the time of the rise of this "little horn" [illegible] imperial [illegible] that the [illegible] ard beast" (which is identical with the horn") his power, and throne, and great authority." This was done by Justinian, the Emperor of the East, who conquered the Vandals in Africa, and the Ostrogoths in Italy, and gave Rome, the original throne of the old "dragon," to the beast, or the papal hierarchy.

The removal of the seat of government from Rome to Constantinople by Constantine in 329, which has so puzzled historians, was evidently ordered of God to bring about those changes in the empire that were necessary while undergoing the change from its pagan to its papal character. The imperial or dragonic power must exist somewhere at the time Popery was established. Now it is a historical fact that imperial power ended in Rome in A. D. 476, by the abdication of the emperor Augustulus, the last of that line of emperors established in the West, after the division of the empire by Theodosius in 395. The line of emperors in the East was not broken, but continued till the fall of Constantinople in A. D. 1453. Therefore about A. D. 540 Justinian, the Eastern line of emperors in whom the imperial power was vested, conquered the Goths in Italy, and gave Rome into the hands of the papal hierarchy. So now the West and the East became united again, and the papal hierarchy adopted the code of laws framed by Justinian, which became the basis of legislation for papal Rome, or the empire, till broken by the French revolution in 179[8].

It is a historical fact that imperial power was wholly transferred from Rome to Constantinople by the abdication of the emperor Augustulus, and by the vote of the Senate, in A. D. 476, and continued there till popery was established in Rome, about 540. That the Justinian code of laws was framed [illegible] into that system of abomination, is evident from the fact that they became the basis of European legislation for 1260 years, which legislation was under the direct control of the papal hierarchy. So that Gibbon could say that the laws which governed all Europe for more than a thousand years issued from the Vatican in Rome; and thus the saints and times and laws are now in the hands of that "little horn," for the predicted period of "time, and times, and the dividing of time."

It may be interesting to give here an extract from Irenæus, an ancient Christian writer, who lived in the second century. He interprets this little horn, applying it to the rise of antichrist. He says that "ten horns shall be upon the beast, and another little horn should rise up in the midst of them, and three horns of the first be rooted out before him; and behold, saith he, in this horn are eyes as the eyes of man, etc., of whom again the apostle Paul, in 2 Thess., declaring together the cause of his coming, thus says, And then shall that wicked one be revealed, etc. He also refers to John, the disciple of the Lord, in the Revelation that he "hath yet more manifestly signified of the last time, and of those ten kings it among whom the empire that now reigns (the Roman empire) shall be divided, declaring what shall be the ten horns which were seen by Daniel, saying, The ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet, etc. [illegible] manifest that of these [illegible] three, and the rest shall be subject to him, and he shall be the eighth among them."

Jerome on the place says that this is the sense of "all ecclesiastical writers, that when the Roman empire is destroyed there shall be ten kings who shall divide it among them; and an eleventh shall arise, a little king, who shall conquer three of the ten kings; and having slain them, the other seven shall submit their necks to the conqueror." This power he says is "the man of sin, and son of perdition; so that he dare to sit in the temple of God, making himself as if he was [illegible]

Says Dr. Gill, [illegible] extracts [are] taken: "Now to the Roman antichrist everything here said answers. He is a horn possessed of power, strength, authority and dominion, of which the horn is an emblem; a 'little' one, which rose from small beginnings, and came to his ecclesiastical power from a common pastor, or bishop, to be a metropolitan of Italy, and then universal bishop; and to his secular power, which at first was very small, and since increased, and yet in comparison of other horns or kingdoms, but little; though being allowed to exercise a power within others, is, or at least has been, very formidable. This came up among the other horns (or kingdoms). When the northern barbarous nations broke into the empire, and set up ten kingdoms in it, this little horn sprung up among them; and while they were forming kingdoms for themselves, he was contriving one for himself; they rose at the same time and reigned together. See Rev. 17: 12, 13."

Says Bishop Newton:—"Antichrist then (as the fathers delight to call him), or the 'little horn,' is to be sought among the ten kingdoms of the western Roman empire. I say of the western Roman empire, because that was properly the body of the fourth beast. Greece, and the countries which lay eastward of Italy, belonged to the third beast; for the former beasts were still subsisting, though their dominion was taken away. 'As concerning the rest of the beasts [saith Daniel, v. 12], they had their dominion taken away; yet their lives were prolonged for a season and a time.' 'And therefore,' as Sir Isaac Newton rightly infers, 'all the four beasts are still alive, though the dominion of the first be taken away. The nations of Chaldæa and Assyria are still the first beast; those of Media and Persia are still the second beast; those of Macedon, Greece and Thrace, Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt, are still the third; and those of Europe, on this side of Greece, are still the fourth. Seeing, therefore, the body of the third beast is confined to the nations on this side the river Euphrates, and the body of the fourth beast is confined to the nations on this side of Greece, we are to look for all the four heads of the third beast among the nations on this side the river Euphrates; and for all the eleven horns of the fourth beast among the nations on this side of Greece. And, therefore, at the breaking of the Greek empire into four kingdoms of the Greeks, we include no part of the Chaldæans, Medes and Persians in those kingdoms, because they belonged to the bodies of the two first beasts. Nor do we reckon the Greek empire, seated at Constantinople, among the horns of the fourth beast, because it belonged to the body of the third.' For the same reason neither can the Saracen or the Turk be the 'little horn' or 'Antichrist,' as some have imagined them to be; and neither do they come up to the character in other respects."

We regard this reasoning of the two Newton's as sound and conclusive, because it is based on facts for evidence rather than fancy, and as it agrees with the express requirement of the prophecy.

This little horn had eyes, and a mouth; these are features, or elements, not stated as connected with any of the other horns. The kingdoms represented by the ten horns were composed of men of intelligence, with eyes to see, and mouths to speak; but in this, is a power of remarkable foresight and penetration, greatly differing from other kingdoms in its constitution, being an ecclesiastical and spiritual, as well as of civil and temporal authority. The policy of the Roman hierarchy is the most deep and damning of any ever before known among men. Its schemes and plans have been laid with consummate skill, and executed with a resolution second to none but of Diabolus himself; of monstrous wickedness surpassing all before it; the "detestable, horrible," or the "abomination of desolation," falsifying every righteous principle under heaven; wh[ile] professedly an overlooker, or overseer, or bishop, professing to act as a good shepherd, to lead the sheep into good pastures, and beside still waters, they have been of the character of the "wolf" that has devoured the "sheep."

The "mouth" in this "horn" has also spoken "great things." The popes in their bulls of excommunication have arrogated to themselves prerogatives and titles that belong only to God; setting aside the laws of God, and in their assumptions as above all law, they have spoken most blasphemous words against the Most High, and have "worn out," or wasted, "the saints of the Most High," and have "changed times and laws," have made war upon all that have dared to oppose its pretensions or resist its claims. It became inaugurated and established by reason of "arms" that stood "on his part"; first, in suppressing paganism; second, in plucking up three Arian kingdoms—the Burgundians, the Vandals, and the Ostrogoths; this last in 540. It is called in Scripture "the mystery of iniquity," and its workings have been, as it were, behind the curtain in its rise, so that superficial interpreters of prophecy have confounded it with the Greek empire, they not having given close attention to its scriptural delineation. Jurisdiction was given to it over the whole Roman empire, both East and West, and all have been appalled with amazement by reason of "the great words which the horn spake," and all the world have worshiped the beast, except "those whose names were written in the book of life." But "he that has" led "into captivity has gone into captivity; he that has killed with the sword is now being killed by the sword." The times of its continuance in its several conditions have well nigh run their course. The "time," and times, and the dividing of time" (or 1260 years) evidently terminated near the commencement of the present century, and the 1335 years from its establishment to its final overthrow must now be near their completion; and accumulating signs keep even pace with prophetical and historical data.

THE ATONEMENT.

I. C. WELLCOME.

[illegible]

Having shown the hopeless [state] of man by Adam's transgression, so far as any effort which he could make to reclaim himself, or anything the law could do for him, we now pass to consider the effects of Adam's transgression upon the earth and the animal creation.

This is presented to us first in Gen. 3: 17: "Because thou hast . . . eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it, CURSED is the GROUND for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee, and thou shalt eat the herb of the field . . . till thou return unto the ground." Paul gives us a grand comment on this: "For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope. . . . For we know that the whole creation [every creature—margin] groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." Rom. 8: 20, 22, "For the creature was subjected to suffering"—Whiting. These Scriptures and many others show clearly that the evil results of Adam's sin, fell not only on him, but upon all the creation which God had pronounced good, very good. But this point we have argued more fully in another chapter of this book.

In view of these facts our loss in Adam may be summed up as follows: 1. We lost in Adam the right to live. This right was involved in the command (Gen. 1: 28), "Be fruitful, multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it." Also in Gen. 2: 16, "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of all the trees of the garden thou mayest freely eat." This includes the tree of life, whose fruit was not to give life, but to preserve life. We do not argue that Adam's life was eternal life. No term of time was given by which to measure it. Its perpetuity depended on his obedience to the command of God. Thus it is written: "But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Gen. 2: 17.

We lost in Adam the prospect of eternal life, and dominion over the earth (Gen. 1: 28), which was based on the condition of obedience to the law of God. Adam had right to the tree of life, which would have preserved his life forever. See Gen. 3: 22, "Lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." He had this prospect laid before him in the benediction. "And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion." This dominion is referred to by the Psalmist: "Thou madest him (man) to have dominion over the works of thy hands." Ps. 8. 6. We find Paul also arguing upon it as a matter of much importance. He quotes Ps. 3: 6, and refers it to "the world to come," Heb. 2: 5, 9.

Again, we find a graphic statement of this matter by the prophet: "And then, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come [What come?], even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of [New] Jerusalem." To this add the statements of Christ: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5: 5), and again, "Come, ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 34.

In the above text Jesus refers to the same dominion presented to Adam; and that it was an eternal dominion is settled by Christ's words in the 46th verse of Matt. 25th: "And these [the wicked] shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." All this was in prospect for Adam on condition of obedience to God, and was lost by his transgression.

3. We lost in Adam a state of probation or trial preparatory to eternal life, and the dominion. Gen. 1: 28. Ps. 8: 6. If Adam had obeyed the law of God, which he might and ought to have done, no death would have entered nor curse blighted the fair creation of God, which he had pronounced very good. Then we, his posterity, in pursuance of that law, would have gained the promised dominion. But, alas! in the hour of temptation, by a single act of disobedience, his prospects were blighted in a moment, and all was lost. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that [being in him] all have sinned." Rom. 5: 12.

4. We lost in Adam a good, sound, and healthful organism, both physical and mental; for thus it is written: "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good." Gen. 1: 31. In this respect man was holy, else God created and gave breath of life to an unholy being. We do not use the term holy as a moral attribute in reference to character and action, but in reference to his physical, mental and moral organism; for, though thus created, Adam formed a very unholy moral character. We find the word defined thus: "Holy —whole, entire, complete, sound, unimpaired"—Webster. The term holy was once applied to a spot of ground: "The ground whereon thou standest is holy ground." It is also used in reference to other things, as, the holy Sabbath, holy temple, holy city, holy vessels, holy oil, etc.

Let no one therefore conclude, that, because Adam lost for himself and his [race] good physical, moral, and mental organism, and that Christ by his death will effect a restitution of all things, the wicked are entitled to a good moral character. This does not follow: a good moral character in God's sight is gained by faith in the atoning blood of Christ.

Much theological speculation has obtained in our world as to what was man's original nature; the nature and effect of the tree of life, the character and object of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and [illegible] of the penalty of God's [law] Adam incurred by his sin, and which now holds his race. Although we have discussed these points in other parts of this book, yet a few remarks may be in place here.

We are told (Gen. 2: 7) that man was formed of the "dust of the ground;" that God breathed [blew] into his nostrils the breath of life, and man (formed of dust) became a "living soul." That this living soul was formed of dust is so plainly stated that we think no unbiassed mind can fail to see it. This man was made in the image of God, male and female. Gen. 1: 27. Here, again, theologians have gone to the end of their wits to ascertain what this image consisted in, as pertaining to man. Some have claimed that it was immortality; but we find the word image defined thus: "A representation or similitude of any person or thing formed of a material substance; as an image wrought out of stone, wood, or wax."—Webster. "God formed man in his own image." Jesus asks concerning the penny (Matt. 22: 20, "Whose is this image and superscription? They say unto him Cæsars." We point to man and ask, Whose image is he? The Scripture answers, "God's." "Adam begat a son in his own likeness, after his own image, and he called his name Seth." But Adam was in the likeness and image of God; hence his son Seth must have been in the same likeness and image.

Will any one claim that Adam begat an immortal soul? Man is a living soul: the beasts are also living souls (Gen. 1: 30, margin, Heb. a living soul). Man received from God the breath of life, or spirit of life. So also have the beasts (Gen. 7: 21, 22, margin, Heb. the breath of the spirit of life). "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast; for all are vanity, all go to one place, all are of [the dust, and all] turn to dust again." Eccl. 3: 19, 20. [illegible] same Scripture terms which are claimed to prove the natural immortality of Adam, or his consciousness in death, may be claimed with equal propriety to prove the immortality of the beasts, and their consciousness in death. Take the atonement by the death of Jesus Christ out of the Bible, and the future of man after death would be an eternal blank; hence Paul argues, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen," (1 Cor. 15: 16, 18, 19), then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable;" and closes this point by saying, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not: let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

If Adam was made immortal he could not have died; but Adam did die, therefore he was not immortal. Immortality is an innate principle of undying nature, not to be lost by a change of circumstances.

We are now prepared to inquire, What was the nature and object of the tree of life in its relation to man? It is certain that its properties were not to give life, for Adam had received that from his Maker before he saw the tree of life. Nor was it to make him immortal, for, as we have shown, Adam was made mortal (like other animals), to generate his species, with the prospect of immortality and dominion before him; and it would seem absurd to suppose that God would give him free access to the tree whose fruit would change that nature from mortal to immortality before he had fairly entered upon the work assigned him (Gen. 1: 28); for it is a fair and reasonable conclusion that the two trees in the midst of the garden, viz., the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, would first attract his attention, and being forbidden to eat of the latter, he would first partake of the former.

Eternal life would be the inevitable product or result of immortality, while free access to, and partaking of the tree of life would preserve the life of a mortal man forever (Gen. 3: 22), as well as nine hundred or one hundred years, and yet not make him immortal, as immortality is not the result of life, but eternal life is the legitimate result of immortality.

Again, Paul informs us that immortality is an object or condition to be sought "by patient continuance in well doing" (Rom. 2: 7), and is recompensed with eternal life. Neither of these did Adam possess, nor did they grow in nature's garden, but were placed in the distance as an object of pursuit, and to be given to the victors when the race is ended. What, then, was the object of the tree of life? We think Adam (as all other animals) was constituted to generate his own species and supply the earth with men (Gen. 1: 28), subject to change, decay, and loss of life, by a change of circumstances. If he eat of the forbidden fruit he must "surely die;" being in this condition, the tree of life was provided (not to give, but) to perpetuate his life until his work of replenishing the earth and subduing it (preparatory to his having dominion over it, provided he did not forfeit it by sin) is done. This is clearly proved from Gen. 3: 22: "And now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." Adam had free access to the tree of life while in the garden; if left there after he sinned, with free access to that fruit, such was its nutritious power to counteract the waste of his nature (not to change that nature to immortality, but [illegible] God's [illegible] his life), he would never [illegible] never be fulfilled: hence the Lord drove out the man, and placed cherubims and a flaming sword to keep the way of the tree of life. Gen. 3: 24. (To be continued.)

PUBLISH THE GLAD TIDINGS.

News is recent intelligence of events not looked for—not anticipated, while tidings is intelligence of events anticipated—waited for. "We wait for tidings respecting an absent or sick friend. We may be curious to hear the news; we are always anxious for tidings." Webster.

God's ancient people received a gracious promise from God that he would send them a heavenly leader, who should, in the spirit and power of Elias, prepare a people for the coming of the Lord. Israel for a long time waited for tidings of his approach,—evidences of his speedy advent to accomplish the much desired work foretold by the prophets. At last Gabriel appeared to Zacharias, and announced to him the long expected "glad tidings" that his wife Elizabeth, although "well stricken in years," should become the mother of the wonderful man of God. Zacharias, on account of the fact that it seemed impossible that his wife could become the mother of the predicted agent to do the marvelous work of preparing a people to receive the Messiah at his foretold advent, and notify the world of his speedy approach, did not believe the message. For this unbelief God made the priest dumb (a striking type we think) for a season. John, the long expected man who was to train and educate a people to look for the immediate personal appearing of the Messias did come and prove himself to be the forerunner, so that when Jesus should be presented as the Christ they could not reject him as such without rejecting John with all the accumulated evidences of the divinity of his mission.

God had taught all good men for ages to look for a Savior—a mighty deliverer to appear upon the earth. They had anxiously and prayerfully waited, generation after generation, age after age, to hear the first note of the heavenly tidings—that the long looked for King was coming. At last in God's own time the glorious tidings—the news of Messiah's prayed for advent—sounded its first note from angelic lips, falling upon the ears of the devout shepherds.

Those who were then living in holy expectancy, waiting for God to fulfil his gracious promise to send a Restorer of our world and Redeemer of our race, like Simeon and Anna, caught the glad note of holy tidings and echoed it upon the human ear with ecstacies of devout joy.

The Holy One appeared in all the glorious perfections of humanity, blended with Divinity, and glorified by an eternal oneness with Deity. Standing among the sons of Adam, he was the only one "altogether lovely," the "chiefest" among ten thousands. His head rose far above the grade of corrupted humanity, while from his presence Satan and demons were driven in dismay. His heavenly origin and allmightiness were manifested in his power to convert the fleecy waves of a disturbed sea into terra firma, for his triumphant march, as the echo of his voice, stilled the howling tempest and stopped the rushing winds. The sick and dying were vitalized into vigor and health by his touch. Blind eyes were opened, and deaf ears unstopped by his commandment. The fig tree was killed, the wild colt tamed, and the fish swallowed Peter's hook by the exercise of his will. He satisfied the hungry thousands with a little bread, and put to silence the wisdom of the world by his God-likeness and superhuman wisdom. He spake to the dead, and they leaped into life to manifest their obedience to the King Eternal.

He notified his friends that he must return to the Father from whence he had come, and would send the Holy Spirit to comfort them while suffering the loneliness and sadness of his dreaded absence. He also, before leaving his covenant people, promised them that if he went away and prepared a place [illegible] would come again and receive them unto himself;" and said, "Where I am there ye may be also."

Upon this most definite and glorious promise of Jesus Christ the true church, having the true gospel hope and faith, has ever rested in a joyous expectancy of that promised "coming again;" delighting in the prospect of "ever being with the Lord." The church has therefore remained upon the watch-tower through the tardily moving christian centuries, praying for and longing to hear the most joyous of all glad tidings—the speedy returning of the Christ.

The blessedness of hearing these all-inspiring tidings, and the glorious privilege of sounding them out upon the four winds of heaven seems to have been reserved for the faithful of this generation.

God's great prophetic clock has evidently sounded the alarm, notifying all to prepare for the ending of the hour—the gospel age. The signs, indicating the approach of the great change, the transformation and reconstruction of a world, which will be more glorious and sublime than any marked upon the calendar God gave to man, are now flashing their light athwart the heavens and sounding their deep notes exactly as foretold. The glorious tidings, "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him" is now sounding a more important note upon the human ear than ever greeted it since the dawn of time. The events betiding those who meet that day will entirely eclipse those of all other days, in grandeur of scenes, importance of results, as to glory and infamy, life and death, extent and duration.

As a wife waiteth with heart-longings to hear the tidings of the coming of her long absent husband, as she wanders homeless and friendless, so the church has waited with longings indescribable, peering into the heavens, and watching every vibration of changing earth-scenes, to catch the first ray of light, and hear the first sounds indicating the approach of her heavenly Bridegroom.

As the events heralding this proclamation will be more important to our world in their grand and eternal results; ending sin and the curse, raising the dead, glorifying the saints, radically changing earth's government, bringing Christ back to our world as the Judge of quick and dead, the Redeemer of his people, the glorious King of its restored dominions, so is it more vitally important in its reception, sublimely glorious in its promises and terrible in its threatenings than any message ever revealed by God to man.

The church was never called of God to do a more reponsible work, or to take a higher or more holy position in proclaiming any truth from the lips of Jehovah than in sounding the most glorious news of Jesus' returning.

As the message is of superior importance so God has guarded it on every hand with numerous and incontrovertible evidences of its divine origin, the imperative necessity of accepting and proclaiming it to the world, and the blessed certainty of its ultimate accomplishment.

We view the faithful promulgation of this last edition of inspired truth as a grand specialty in christian labor. We look upon this judgment message as God's last battery to be unmasked before the enemy's works. Preaching the gospel of the kingdom is the last work Christ has given his servants to do. Let us never dream of being prepared to meet the coming Christ until we find ourselves at the post of duty appointed by the great Commander.

Whenever God gives his people special work to do, Satan always makes special efforts to turn them from that work; to blind them to that duty, and hide the truth which manifests the divine will upon that subject. All can see this principle in its application to the past, but it is always most difficult to see it in its application to the present—to ourselves.

Ye men of God, be careful and see if he has called you to bear any special tidings to this generation of coming events! Can you read the divine inscription upon the mile-post we are now passing? Are not the earth-scenes now every where exciting the public mind, somewhere pre-written on the inspired page? Did God overlook the strange events of our times in giving the prophetic history of the world to its end? If you find the history of the present, be careful and read the sentences which follow in the consecutive history, where you will find the special tidings, or the account of that which betides the world in the immediate future. Be faithful, be faithful, all ye people of God, to your high and holy calling, for these times call every one to their post of duty. J. C.

JEWISH EXPECTATION.

There is evidence that the Jews think their land is not to "be trodden down of the Gentiles" but a short time longer. But it must be "trodden down" till "the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." When they are fulfilled, we may expect the return of Jesus to set up "the kingdom of heaven." Some of the Jews now hold very prominent positions in the old world. Mr. Disraeli, of Jewish origin, is the Prime Minister of the British Government, The Messrs. Rothschild [Jews] hold the purse strings of Europe. Their influence is immense. It is said the Jews are waiting for the opportunity to purchase Palestine, or a portion of it, when the Turks are ready to sell. We think the rightful Heir to David's throne will return before the Jews can purchase the land. The Lord says, "The land is mine," and it shall not be sold for ever." Lev. 25: 23.

The Advance says:—

"Without being too sanguine, we think that striking events are immediately before us. The finger of God is certainly moving forward the hand on the dial toward noon. If, as interpreters of prophecy almost universally believe, we are on the eve of the day of millennial glory, we cannot but conclude that the events now transpiring in the East are, partly at least, struggles between the darkness and the light as the morning breaks."

Yes, we believe "the day of millennial glory" is at hand. "Striking events" are about to open that will astonish the world, shake the very foundations of society, and cause men's hearts to fail them with fear. The converging lines of prophecy are continually approaching their terminal point. The end must be soon. M. G.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR.

In view of the great event now approaching, every christian should be fully awake, clad with "the whole armor of God," that he may be able to stand firmly in Christ amid the perils of these last days. Now is the time, if ever, to persuade the unconverted to seek an interest in our dear Savior. No opportunity should be omitted that may be employed to lead them to life's living fountain. The value of eternal life to one loved soul will [illegible] more than the treasures of the world. Shall we [illegible] to give them a helping hand now, when it is most needed? If persons saved from a shipwreck or burning house should refuse to help rescue other perishing ones, we should think them almost unworthy of respectable society. How much more is this true if we do nothing to save our friends, relatives and neighbors, who are in danger of eternal destruction? Will the Lord say to the idle ones "Well done"?

Let each inquire, What am I doing for Jesus? Every christian man and woman should go to work at once, when pardoned, to persuade others to leave the broad road that leads to death eternal. He owes such service to his divine Master, as well as to the perishing.

If any father or mother who reads this knew that a dear child had just taken a dose of poison, or been bitten by a rattlesnake, thereby greatly endangering life unless immediate relief could be obtained, would the news be passed by with indifference? But such a calamity would only result in temporal death. Instead of this, that same child may be poisoned by sin, or bitten by that "old serpent," which must result in eternal death, unless help is sought from the great Physician. Every sinner is a sick person, and needs the help and sympathy of all who truly love Jesus. They should spare no effort to convince him of his great danger, and of the willingness of the Lord to help him. Paul ceased not to warn the people night and day. Should we not do as much in these last hours of time? Is there not danger that many will be found at last like the barren fig tree, having "nothing but leaves" [illegible] we are living to please self, the world, or the Lord? Let it be kept in mind we "cannot serve God and mammon." We must either gather with Christ, or scatter abroad. He says we are his "friends" if we do whatsoever he commands us. Again he says: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." We are commanded to come out from the world and be separate, and then he will accept and guide us. It is a great privilege to submit to the direction of one who is never found to be weak or unwise.

The hour has come when all who wish to be ready to meet Jesus should make a full, unconditional, and everlasting surrender to him, and be willing to do or suffer anything that will advance his cause. Whatever we do for his glory is for our good. If we go contrary to the one, we do to the other. When we give the heart unreservedly to him, we have done the best thing possible for our present and future welfare. Has the reader done this? If not, why not? What objection? If willing, why not now. Jesus says now. Let the response be, Now.

> "I give my all to Thee,
> Friends, and time, and earthly store;
> Soul and body thine to be,
> Wholly thine for evermore."

Jesus is waiting to have you say, Yes, I'll be thine, wholly thine, for ever more. If this be the language of the heart, then there is nothing to fear. Perfect love and peace come next, with full assurance that "all is well." The present will be filled with sunny contentment, doubts all gone, and the future outlook will be bright and glorious. May such be the experience of the reader. M. G.

PORT SANILAC.—We are now (Saturday) at Port Sanilac, Mich., about thirty-three miles north of Port Huron. We arrived at a late hour last evening, after a very tedious day's stage ride. Owing to the exceedingly muddy traveling, it was necessary to walk the horses a good part of the way. It took about ten horses to go the thirty-three miles. To-day (Saturday) we have had three good meetings. The prospect is encouraging. Eld. George W. Wright has been holding meetings here, and some forty have been converted since the beginning of the move. We hope to see many more come to Jesus. M. G.

IT PAYS.—We have the best of evidence that those who have been sending the Crisis to their friends for three months have been doing a good work, that will produce rich fruit. So far as we can learn, most are delighted with the paper, and wait joyfully for its weekly visits. Do not let the list be closed till every subscriber has sent at least one copy for three months to some person. A little self-denial will save money enough to pay for it. Do it for Jesus. M. G.

THERE are many fruits which never turn sweet until the frost has laid upon them. There are many nuts that never fall from the boughs of the forest trees till the frost has opened and ripened them. And there are many elements of life that never grow sweet and beautiful until sorrow touches them.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Ten Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth in the furtherance of the good cause. The times, the signs of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord loveth the liberal giver.

HAMILTON.

L. BOUTELL.

Last Saturday I took the last train for this place. Bro. Elam Burnham was at the depot and took me to his home. I came by appointment to preach in their new Chapel, erected by the labor and sacrifice of Bro. E. Burnham and others in the neighborhood. The [illegible] constructed, pleasantly [illegible] congregation [illegible] Chapel, open to all christians.

I preached three times last Sunday, to interesting congregations, with good attention. I tried to give them the Bible hope, culminating in the coming of our blessed Lord and the resurrection of the dead, when all will be rewarded according to their deeds. A [illegible] Bible has been presented them by [illegible]worth and Harding, of the 4th Baptist Church, Haverhill. On presentation the congregation rose and sung,

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

I could [illegible] hope the day I spent with them might be profitable. The singing was good and brisk. All tongues seemed inspired with tune. I [illegible], praying they might have a reformation that would make the best of them better, and the rest of them good. So mote it be.

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS ON THE TIMES.

THOS. FITZSIMMONS.

We give in this column a few of the opinions of the press on the present extraordinary times in the United States. We have come across them in our recent readings, and as they are extracted from papers neither Prophetic or Advent, perhaps they will be received by sceptics as unbiased testimony of the latter [illegible]—"Distress and Perplexity of Nations."

THE OUTLOOK.—"It does seem to the superficial observer inexplicable that agriculture, trade, manufactures, and transportation, should all be suffering at once, with apparently no tendency towards recovery. Great forces are at work, producing a great change." —New York Tribune.

OUR POLITICS.—"It must fall upon the present generation of our country to throttle [illegible] and to re-arrange the machinery of a pure [illegible] government." —New York Herald.

PUBLIC MISRULE.—"Politically the country is becoming more and more disordered each year."—Elizabeth, N. J., Herald.

A DISHONEST AGE.—"The age of embezzlements and defalcations, public and private."—Philad. Evening Bulletin.

[illegible]—"There are half a million of people in New York City and vicinity, to whom the preaching of the gospel is as strange as to the inhabitants of New Zealand or [illegible]."—New York Evening Post.

OUR COMMERCE.—"There has been a general decline in the foreign commerce of the United States during the year 1875. In New York the exports have fallen off over twenty-one millions, and the imports over fifty-three millions."—Boston Journal.

[illegible] OF THE UNITED STATES.—"We have received from a friend a terrible account of brutalities and indecencies, developed in an investigation of a county prison in Georgia. Our friend probably does not know that his [illegible] matched easily enough up North. [illegible] are more than 4000 prisons in the United States, and it is a fearful fact that a majority of them are terribly managed, immoral, [illegible], fraudulently managed, and [illegible] of perdition, brutalities to the inmates resulting in death being frequent. We could fill our paper with such sickening details."—New York Weekly Journal.

[illegible] OF THE DAY.—"The past year has been one of unusual demoralization in literature. Never during the same length of time has the public press and publications so [illegible] with obscenities, immoralities, and [illegible] attacks upon the principles which [illegible] foundation of upright moral [illegible]. Looking still further, we see the [illegible], dishonesty, disbelief [illegible] hostility to God, oppression, and inhumanity. These elements of the situation taken together give a gloomy aspect for the future, and threaten the defeat of religion, the subversion of morality, and the destruction of the freedom of the State."—The Interior, Chicago.

We could supplement the above testimony by columns. The evidence is valuable as showing us beyond question the rapid fulfilment of the last day prophecies.

YORK CO. CONFERENCE.

The A. C. Conference of York Co. and vicinity held a quarterly session at South Windham, Me., March 2nd to 5th, 1876, Eld. Jesse Gay presiding.

The business transacted during this session was as follows: The Secretary and Treasurer gave their reports, which were accepted. The Evangelist reported that he had visited and held meetings in six different places. The whole number of meetings held were eighty-seven, and fifty-eight persons had requested prayers. He thought that most, if not all of these had found peace. His receipts amounted to sixty-eight dollars and fifty-nine cents; and his travelling expenses had been six dollars and fifty cents. This report was discussed at length, and finally accepted; after which it was unanimously Voted, That C. H. Sweet serve us another quarter as Evangelist.

Voted, That we choose G. F. Haines to assist C. H. Sweet in his labors as Evangelist.

Voted, That our Evangelists be requested to properly represent themselves, financially, to the people among whom they labor, and that they be requested to have a collection taken up.

We next listened to reports of preachers and delegates, which were of unusual interest. Elders W. H. Mitchell, J. Gay, E. A. Stockman, G. H. Haines, and C. H. Sweet reported in person, and Eld. J. Hill by letter. They all reported revival interests, some of them extensive reformations.

REPORTS OF CHURCHES.

Biddeford: Still united in trying to advance the cause of Christ. Nine or ten hopefully converted and reclaimed. A number have come in from other denominations. Hollis Centre: An increasing interest in their prayer meetings. South Windham: A small band; well united; not so much engaged in the work as they should be. Kennebunkport: Has been blessed with a wonderful reformation, which wrought a great change in the churches and people there. West Poland: Interest low. A few still holding on. Steep Falls: Rather backward in the Advent cause. Portland: Had a little revival. Eight or ten started. The bar between the two societies seemed to be melting away, but Satan crept in and succeeded in stirring up much of the old feeling again. Things now appear to be getting quiet. Bonny Eagle: Enjoying a remarkable revival interest. Bar Mills: Nearly thirty conversions. Congregations good. Interest increasing.

It will be seen that we had a larger number of church reports than at some previous sessions; while the number of preachers reporting themselves is smaller than ever before. We do wish something could be said or done to induce every preacher and church [illegible] the interest and usefulness of our Conference.

We adjourned to meet at Bar Mills, Me., the first Thursday in June next. We had large congregations, good social meetings, and excellent preaching throughout this session. C. H. SWEET, Sec.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Dear Brn. Editors:—Let me in a few words speak of the goodness of God to poor me, an old man seventy-six years old. I am infirm with age, but my general health is good. I travel two miles in a day often, and visit families as I used to, and give lectures occasionally.

I am now in Windham, Vt., a hundred miles from home. I am doing the same work that I do in other places. I feel that it is a wonder that I live and am able to work, while those younger than myself are laid up by age and infirmity. God has been good to me from my youth up, and crowned my life with his blessing. Blessed be his name! I have been preserved through evils, seen and unseen, even through thirty-five years, and God has raised up for me kind, hospitable friends everywhere.

I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to friends all over the country, who have received me so kindly and treated me so hospitably. God bless them, is my prayer.

I am now with the scattered ones among the mountains of Vermont, and I find them in quite as good state of mind as those who are in places where churches are established. They are not troubled with the divisions and strife which rend our churches and bring reproach upon the cause. I have been exceedingly [illegible] which prevail among us in many places where I have been. There is a want of the good spirit which "suffers long and is kind," which "thinketh no evil," but esteemeth others better than themselves. O for more of this loving, heavenly spirit, which will overlook others' imperfections.

I feel sad to see this dividing spirit. What are we coming to? The answer comes—Why, we are coming to the advent of our blessed Master, Jesus, when each one must stand or fall for himself. We cannot lean upon the church, nor upon one another. It will not be asked in that great day whether we belonged to a church, or whether we believed in the thousand-year age, or the thousand years gone by, or the seventh-day Sabbath, or the non-resurrection of the wicked. No, these are matters of minor importance. They do not affect our salvation. We may all have our peculiar belief in relation to these things, but we must have the spirit of Jesus, and a disposition to love each other. Love to God and love to man is the essential thing.

I have been looking over the Crisis, and I see many names with which I am acquainted; it gives me joy to see them. I cannot read much, because of weak eyes, but their names do me good. Though I cannot read, yet I can write, and do write a great deal; and will correspond with any who will write me, and do it with pleasure. Keep your hearts in order, your lamps burning; "signs there is no mistaking, proclaim Messiah near." Chelmsford, Mass., is my post-office address.

From Sr. S. D. Lapham.

Dear Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad:—Thinking that perhaps you would like to hear from this part of the Lord's vineyard, I thought I would write a few lines for the Crisis. We are now living in Southern Kansas. We were formerly from Gilman's Corner, Sangerville, Maine, where for the first time we listened to Advent preaching by Brn. Hemenway and Birch. Afterward Bro. Israel Damon, and others of like precious faith. Those were days never to be forgotten while time lasts. We shared in the blessed hope, the glorious anticipation of our Lord's coming in '54; and the same wave of crushing sorrow swept over us that brought God's people into the tarrying time.

After our disappointment we came West; and for years we never heard the voice of any one preaching the glorious message. But the great truths of the Bible were too deeply engraven on our hearts to be obliterated; and we could still pray "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

The Crisis was our only preacher, and its contents were read with eagerness. But the pieces about tobacco worried my husband, for he had used it for years, and rolled it in his mouth as a sweet morsel. But he often went to the water pail to rinse his mouth before he could bow in prayer, and often resolved to quit its use. Still the old enemy conquered.

Two years ago last New Year's day he read Bro. Hemenway's pledge,—Never again to taste tobacco. He started up saying, "If Bro. Hemenway can leave off, I can. Lord, remove this longing, and I'll endure the pain." Since then he has been like another man. His health is much improved, and he weighs more than he ever did. He used tobacco twenty-seven years, and his leaving off has proved a blessing to him. He often says that if he was ever called to preach it is against tobacco using. Several by his persuasion (for he never leaves them a hair line to stand on) have renounced the filthy weed, knowing that they must cleanse themselves from all things that offend if they would stand acquitted before the Judge of all the earth.

Last spring we attended the State Conference, and for the first time for nineteen years found ourselves among those that we could truly call brethren. Although we were among strangers, yet we felt at once that we were at home among Father's family. Thank God for that tie which binds God's children together. There are no jarring notes of discord, but that love that casteth out all fear. We returned home feeling that we had indeed feasted from God's word. This winter Bro. Preston, of Burlington, has come to see us, and been preaching of the soon coming King. There seems to be a great interest to hear, and we think that some will come out on the Lord's side, and that much good will be done. Pray for us, in Southern Kansas, that the Lord will raise up a little band here, that shall be saved in the day of his coming. Amen.

Longton, Elk Co., Kansas.

From Bro. D. D. Lathrop.

Editors of the World's Crisis:—Dear Brn.: I used to be a subscriber to your paper, have been a number [illegible] have not been. About a year and a half ago my wife died, and my family somewhat scattered. My address used to be New Milford, this Co. I got so hungry for present truth that I sent to you a few days ago for specimen copies of the Crisis. They came, and I have had a good feast that does my soul good. For the many years that I have held the Advent or Christian faith, it has pleased the Lord to place me among people who opposed it. For what reason it is best known to himself; perhaps he knows there is no danger of my being overcome by the Spiritualisms of the present day, and I can do a little towards suggesting the truth to those who may be benefited thereby. I know I have tried to do so in the love of Jesus. In my earliest work of that kind I was met with all the opposition that the Baptist church, to which I belonged, could bring to bear; but finding themselves so weak before the sword of the Spirit, and fearing the church would soon be on my side, a few of the leaders procured my exclusion by voting me a letter, recommending me as a Christian, but not of their faith. They never gave me the letter, however. I suppose they thought it would have rather a bad influence against them.

Some nineteen or twenty years have elapsed since then, and thank the Lord, he has ever been with me and kept me; but I am sorry to say that that church has been declining ever since, and is about ready to die, unless God has quite recently revived them. I have not lived among them since my expulsion. The doctrine of "the immortality of the soul" is the tenderest sore spot in the faith of most people here that I have ever found; and no wonder; for it is not so much as named in the Bible. It is not the ne plus ultra—"much in little"—with them, but it is the [illegible] the different churches up to the first of this week; now it is being weakened for want of the more solid food, such as Advent christians usually enjoy at the gospel feast. They cannot leave "the first principles of . . . repentance from dead works," for want of the strengthening food, and need to be perpetually fanned to keep the breath of life in them.

Montrose, Pa.

From Bro. J. A. Packard.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I have felt for some time that I would like to say a few words through the Crisis, and the time has come when it seems to be in order to speak of the dealings of the good Lord with us in New Boston, N. H. For the last year and a half, or more, for causes to be much regretted, this church has been very low in spiritual things, and divisions have crept in among us, until it seemed as though our little church must go down. Our prayer meetings were poorly attended, but, thank the Lord, there were a few who offered their petitions to Daniel's God continually, and in time there came a change. Bro. T. L. Hall came among us just in time to render efficient aid, under God, in righting the ship. He has been with us ten Sabbaths, also holding meetings three weeks, preaching every evening but one. Would to God there were many that would preach for the good of souls instead of the dollars, and more that felt the worth of such preaching deep enough to stay the hands of the faithful servants of the Lord.

The church has been greatly blest, and some we trust have given themselves anew to God. We humbly hope lasting good will be the result of these meetings. We feel that we have but little time to war against sin, but we expect the conflict will grow more severe as we near home, and the enemy will bring his forces nearer, if possible, in order to throw more effectual shot within our ranks. But thank God we have a place of retreat from the enemy. We can hide in Jesus, run into his name and be safe. O, what a blessed hiding place is this! Then let us be good children, and do God's bidding, and all will be well with us when he comes.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

Dear Brn.:—I have just returned from New Bedford, where I have spent two Sundays with the Advent church in the old Kempton St. Chapel. I find they have made some progression since my last visit with them. Their prayer and conference meetings were spirited, and with zeal did they give a reason of their hope "that maketh not ashamed." Some precious ones have fallen sweetly asleep in Jesus; others are sick, but by the goodness of the Lord Bro. H. V. Davis is at his place in meeting, giving glory to God.

Saturday I visited our dear Bro. M. Batchelor, who has been very sick and under the doctor's care; but his symptoms were better, and he was hopeful (the weather becoming warmer) of soon being out among his friends again, confessing Christ and his love for his appearing, for which he has battled so manfully for the last thirty years and more. I also visited dear Bro. S. S. Brewer; found him and wife pretty well, and pleasantly housed away from the cold north winds of winter at their daughter's, where they have been for some months. He is now desirous of getting out into the field to proclaim the sacred message that relates to the soon coming of our Lord. And I do hope they, with the blue-bird, may come out with thrilling notes of prayer and praise, highly seasoned with the song of redemption. Remember him, and pray for these dear sainted pilgrims. In Jesus' love.

Chelsea, Mass., March 20th.

From Sr. O. N. Morse.

Dear Brn.:—I have been reading the many letters from the dear pilgrims scattered over the earth, and with one united voice they cry, "How long will his chariot wheels delay? When will this night of sadness end and bring in everlasting day?" Surely all things proclaim Christ's coming at hand.

My mind goes back to '43 and '44, when my dear companion, who is now sleeping in Jesus, and myself were living in Lockport, N. Y., and Bro. Miller came there and proclaimed the coming of the Lord. We gave heed to the words we heard, and to-day the coming of the Savior sounds pleasant to my ear. Although alone in this world of sorrow and death, I have the blessed promise in God's Word that he will never leave nor forsake those who put their trust in him. The signs thicken, and men's hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth, and I long for the time to come when my loved companion, who walked with me life's journey, will come from the enemy's land [illegible] glorious [illegible] Christ, who has [illegible] life and immortality to light [illegible].

We are admonished not to be "ignorant concerning them which are asleep, that we sorrow not as those which have no hope; for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. . . . We which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Springville, Wis.

From Bro. T. L. Waugh.

Dear Brn.:—As a report of the condition of the church and of religious matters here may be interesting to many who read the Crisis, I will relate what God by his Spirit has been doing for us. A series of meetings was commenced Feb. 23d, continuing every evening but one up to March 9th. Bro. and Sr. G. L. White have been laboring with us in these meetings, which have been increasing in interest and a number among the children and youth, and several heads of families have become hopefully converted and are on their way rejoicing. The church has been strengthened and encouraged to renewed effort in trying to rescue the perishing. We have labored together in love and harmony since the meetings commenced, and our hearts have overflowed with gratitude and praise to God for the work he has wrought [illegible] praise meeting in which many participated. It was a precious season to those present and will not be forgotten. We expect this good work, so auspiciously begun, will continue until others who are unsaved will be brought into the fold of Christ, the ark of safety, the city of refuge, that when the storms of God's wrath are poured out, they may escape the sinner's doom and be saved with the ransomed host. I would say with the Psalmist, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." We have class meetings Tuesday evenings besides our usual social meeting on Thursday evening. Divine service on the Sabbath as usual.

West Morris, Ct., Mar. 10th.

From Bro. G. D. Danks.

Dear Bro. Burr:—By request of the church, I will write and let you know how we are prospering here in this place. We have had regular meetings for about one year at our house, under the leadership of my father, H. D. Danks, who has preached to us every Lord's day at 10.30 A. M. We also have prayer meetings Sunday and Wednesday evenings. But we have had no organization until last Sunday, Feb. 20th, when we met and organized a church of thirteen members, of whom we elected Bro. Charles Dewrose as elder.

Although we are few in number, we feel strong in the Lord, and willing to hold up the "banner." We are looking for the soon coming of our heavenly Master, and there is a deep and increasing interest manifested in the cause of Christ. O let us be faithful and strive on a little longer until Jesus comes, and we shall have done with this cold, wicked world. Brethren and sisters, pray for us that we may prove faithful, and with you gain a home in the everlasting kingdom. Yours, in the hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

Fon Du Lac, Wis.

From Bro. M. Batchelor.

To the Church scattered abroad, Greeting: I am at home, sick with chills and fever. Have been confined to the house for four weeks. I am now improving, and hope, when warm weather comes, to be again in the field, where there is now so much to be done. I have not been able to answer letters from my dear brethren, and they will hereby know the reason why their letters are not replied to. I ask the prayers of the church that I may be speedily restored to health, and my brethren abroad.

New Bedford, Mass., March 16th.

From Bro. E. Morrill.

Dear Editors:—The Lord is blessing the people of Hampton with a shower of salvation. We have been laboring in this hard old town for the past three weeks. Have had great prejudice to overcome, and the enemy has been very busy trying to neutralize the effect of our labors; but God's power is above the power of the enemy, and a good number of stout-hearted and some of the hardest cases in Hampton have found Jesus and are happy in his love. Praise the Lord, it still goes on.

Obituaries.

QUIMBY. In Carlinville, Ill., March 1st, '76, of an ovarian tumor, Mary Jane Quimby, daughter of Elliot and Lucretia Braley, and wife of Jesse S. Quimby, aged thirty-nine years and ten days.

Sister Quimby was born in Holliston, Mass., gave her heart to the Lord at the age of ten years, and was baptized when fourteen. She was married in Carlinville, Ill., Feb. 27th, 1859, and in the same house and room where she was joined to her husband, the hand of death parted them. During her residence in Carlinville her conversation and influence was more and more for Jesus, until in the last year or two of her life, the whole city, in its religious recognitions, regarded her testimony and life as a power for good among them, unsurpassed by any in her sphere. Often have congregations melted to tears under her spiritual testimony, and during her sickness the sympathy of the church-going community was greatly enlisted in her behalf, as were also many who cared but little for the modern type of christian profession. Sister Quimby's modest, unpretending ways, and her truthful, searching words, bore a weight of testimony among the ungodly seldom equalled. With christian resignation she bore her sufferings, which were intense, while her heart and lips were filled with God's praises. A large circle of relatives, as well as the church of Christ, mourn her loss. Her faith was that Jesus would soon awake her again. The motto of Scripture hanging on the wall of her room for the day of her death, was, "I am the resurrection and the life." (John 11: 25). This was the last word she read, and was the text for the service, from which we preached to a very large audience in the M. E. Church. The Methodist and Presbyterian ministers joined us in the service. The local paper gave a just tribute to her memory.

FRANK BURR.

Bro. and Sr. Quimby were personal friends of ours when we lived and worshiped together in the old Granite State. Sister Q. was for a time a [illegible] christian life. May angels watch the place of her silent slumbers, and Jesus call her to blissful life at his appearing. J. C.

HARWOOD. In Providence, Feb. 3d, 1876, Mary S., wife of George S. Harwood, aged sixty-nine years.

Mother is gone, and husband and children are left to mourn. That voice which we so much loved to hear is still in death, but we sorrow not as those which have no hope; for we believe she will come again from the land of the enemy. She was converted while in her youth, and maintained a christian walk until her death. She had been a great sufferer for most thirty years, but bore it with christian patience. She was perfectly resigned to Him who ruleth all things. Near the close of life she looked up, while her countenance seemed almost angelic, and bade each good bye separately. I have no doubt many of the readers of the Crisis will remember her. She has attended the campmeetings at Wilbraham and Springfield for a number of years. We are looking forward to a glorious reunion in the kingdom of God, when all the loved ones who sleep in Jesus will be clothed in immortality, never more to die. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. J. W. Thomas. E. M. LAKE.

BURRELL. In Rockland, Mass., Feb. 23d, '76, of typhoid pneumonia, Reuben Burrell, aged seventy-two years.

For forty-four years he had been a follower of Christ, and since 1842 a believer in the Second Advent doctrine. He died as he had lived, firm in the faith that he would meet Christ at his coming, and receive the welcome, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." His last words to his wife, who was very ill at the time, were—"Good night, mother; meet me in the morning of the resurrection." Although a great sufferer, he said he never enjoyed a day more than the Sabbath before he died. He has been for the past three years an active worker in the cause of Christ in the Baptist church [illegible] society near. He felt there was work [illegible] we felt assured his earnest [illegible] have been, and will be blessed still more. Bro. White conducted the funeral services, assisted by L. L. Fitz, pastor of the Baptist church. A large circle of friends mourn their loss, and feel that he was gathered "like a shock of corn fully ripe."

DANFORTH. In Woodbury, Vt., Jan. 6th, 1876, of dropsy, Elmina Danforth, wife of Bro. Charles W. Danforth, aged fifty-two years.

A faithful wife, a loving mother, and a devoted disciple of Jesus has fallen asleep to wait the trump of God to awaken her from her brief slumbers to stand upon the earth renewed. This hope was an anchor to her soul as she drew near the hour of death, and helped her to bear her great sufferings with patience and christian fortitude. She leaves a husband, five children, and an aged mother to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from 1 Thess. 4: 13–14.

A. GORDON.

KILBURY. In Fremont, N. Y., Feb. 26th, '76, Sr. Camilla Kilbury, aged thirty-one years.

Sr. Kilbury gave her heart to God a few years ago, and has lived a meek and humble christian life. She has left a husband, sister, and other relatives to mourn her early death. The writer attended her funeral at the A. C. Chapel, Fremont, and spoke words of comfort from Rev. 14: 13. May the Lord help husband and relatives that mourn to so live that they may have a reunion in the world to come. W. J. HOBBS.

MOSES. In Brentwood, N. H., Jan. 17th, '76, Mrs. Paulina Moses, aged seventy-three.

Suddenly, and remote from friends, "Aunt Paulina," as she was familiarly known, passed away. As to her last days' experience we know but little, but have no question that the adage, "People die as they live," was verified in her case. She had lived for Christ, and loved his appearing. "She sleeps, but not forever." E. OWEN.

BALZAR. In Milldale, Southington, Ct., Jan. 1st, 1876, of consumption, George Balzar, aged fifty-nine years.

The subject of this notice had been a Roman Catholic, but during his sickness, when nigh to death, refused to send for the priest for comfort, choosing rather to put his case in the hands of God, trusting for pardon in the blood of Jesus. We used at the funeral service his large Catholic family Bible, from which we brought forth to the large circle of mourners (mostly Catholics) the Gospel hope. He was highly esteemed.

ENOCH MORRILL.

BERRY. In Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 26th, 1876, George W., child of Edwin W. and Annie M. Berry, aged eleven months, sixteen days.

Little George was a beautiful child, but was nipped by death's untimely frost, and withered like the morning flower. Bro. and Sr. Berry mourn, but not without hope. Funeral service by the writer, assisted by Brn. Emery and Wells.

"There my little ones I know
Round me shall be clinging;
There the loved of long ago
With me shall be singing.
Oh that land I long to see,
Where the weary hearted
Shall with Christ in glory be,
Never to be parted."

J. W. WHITE.

GROVER. In Portsmouth, N. H., Feb. 15th, 1876, Mrs. Adeline S. Grover, formerly from Elliott, Me., aged sixty-eight years.

For nearly fifty long years the subject of this notice had been an open professor of faith in Christ, being actively connected with the M. E. Church, but during the last few years of her life, and especially the last one, she became much interested in the faith we hold. She died suddenly of consumption, but was ready. Four children survive her to mourn. "How long shall death the tyrant reign?" E. OWEN.

NICHOLS. In Hereford, P. Q., Feb. 24th, 1876, Bro. Nathaniel B. Nichols, aged seventy-six years.

He leaves a companion, three sons and two daughters, and other relatives, to mourn their loss. We trust our brother died in hope of eternal life. He was a great sufferer, and bore it patiently till the last. We hope to meet him where the inhabitants will never say, "I am sick." May the blessing of God sustain his dear companion and all the friends in this bitter trial.

JOHN H. EVANS.

CROUSE. In East Washburn, Me., March 2d, 1876, Leroy Crouse, infant son of Abraham and Bethiah Crouse, aged fifteen months and seventeen days.

This babe was sick for about a month, but death came at last and released the innocent one from all its sufferings. May the Lord sanctify this affliction to the good of the parents and children, who deeply mourn their loss. Funeral services by Eld. R. A. Patten, Baptist.

G. CROUSE, JR.

WELLS. In Hereford, P. Q., Feb. 22d, 1876, Deborah A., wife of Hiram Wells, aged eighty-three years.

She leaves one brother and five sisters, also Bro. and Sr. M. B. Wells, who had the care of their step-mother for nineteen years. They feel their loss. They miss her around their fireside, but she died in faith, in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. Funeral services by the writer, from Ps. 23: 4. JOHN H. EVANS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, March 11. A land slip occurred last night at Caub, a small town on the Rhine in Northern Germany, caused by rains. Eight houses were buried and twenty-six persons killed.

March 15. The Times has a special from Berlin containing the following:

A letter from Peko Paulovich, who commanded the insurgents at the battle of Muratovizza, asserts that 1550 insurgents attacked 3200 Turks. Only 700 of the latter returned to Gatschko. About 800 were killed and others drowned or dispersed. The insurgents captured 675 rifles and four rifled cannon.

March 16. The Paris dispatch to the Times reports that the inundations have stopped work on the Government tobacco factory, and in the founderies of Alfortville. Two hundred houses are flooded at St. Maur.

The gale of Sunday caused a fearful destruction of life and property. Eleven persons were killed in Cambria. At Selgers the river Roer rose 20 or 30 feet, inundating the country. At Coblentz the Rhine rose behind the railway bridge like a waterspout to the height of the houses. Hamburg and Frankfort have also suffered.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Louisville, Ky., March 10. Capt. J. M. Burt of Mt. Sterling, Ky., a gentleman well known for reliability, arrived in Louisville to-night with specimens of the flesh which fell last Friday in Bath county. The flesh covered two acres of ground, resembled mutton, and left traces of blood on trees and fences which were touched by the falling flakes. Chickens and hogs devoured it with evident relish. The heavens were clear, the sun shone and only floating clouds were visible at the time—2 P. M., March 3. Quantities of the flesh have been preserved. That brought to Louisville was given to Prof. Lawrence, a well known scientist, who says without doubt it is animal flesh. He proposes making an examination to-morrow. Hundreds of persons are willing to attest with affidavits the truthfulness of the entire matter.

Chicago, March 11. Specials report that a most terrific wind, rain and thunder storm visited the Northwest late yesterday afternoon and evening. It appears to have extended from Quincy, Ill., to the northern portion of Iowa, and to have been specially severe near the Mississippi river. At some places it amounted to a tornado, and considerable damage was inflicted. The town of Hazlegreen, in the southeast corner of Grant county, Wis., near the Illinois line, which has about a thousand inhabitants, mostly lead miners, was struck by the tornado about four o'clock. Messengers were dispatched to Galena and Dubuque for doctors to care for the injured. These messengers told a story of a most extraordinary destruction of property and life. One of them affirmed that forty-one people had been killed outright or injured, and that the town was almost totally destroyed. There is no telegraphic communication with the region.

The latest accounts give the list of killed and [illegible]: Joshua Richards, Mrs. John [illegible] Jackson, Edward Thompson [illegible] nine persons in all. There was a rumor that eighteen were killed, but it cannot be authenticated. A great many are badly injured, some probably fatally. Broken legs, arms and other casualties are reported in numberless cases. The village was built of wood and the tornado swept a clear track from the southeast to the northeast through the town, destroying twenty-six buildings in all.

THE loss by the fire in the California State Prison is estimated at about $300,000.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

As the Mass. Annual Advent Christian Conference is soon to convene, and as at its coming session there are Delegates to be chosen to attend the National Meeting of the Second Advent Christian Association, it is necessary, in order to determine the number of Delegates to which the Conference is entitled, that there be sent to the Secretary by each church the number of members therein. It is therefore earnestly requested and hoped that each church within the bounds of this Conference will without delay send to the Secretary its present membership, so that at the Conference it may be certainly known how many Delegates are to be sent by this Conference to the meeting of the Association. Let every church do this at once, and so be represented in the Conference. Direct—Boston, Mass., Drawer 5140.

S. G. MATHEWSON, President.
I. I. LESLIE, Secretary.

A Meeting of the Board of Managers of the S. A. C. Association will be held in Boston, at the Crisis Office, on Tuesday, April 11th, at eleven o'clock A. M.

S. G. MATHEWSON, President.
C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

Notice.

The next Annual Meeting of the Mass. Advent Christian Conference will be held with the church in Lynn, commencing Tuesday, April 11th. The Conference will continue over the following Sunday. Important business is to come before this meeting of our Conference, and it is hoped that every church in the State will be represented by one or more delegates to which it may be entitled by the Constitution of the Conference.

I. I. LESLIE, Secretary.

NOTICE.—By divine leave, Eld. Edwin Burnham will commence meetings at Farmington, N. H., in the Advent Chapel, March 26th, and hold as long as it seems duty. All christians are cordially invited to come, and unite to labor in these meetings for the salvation of dying men. As this may be our last opportunity before Jesus comes to hear our Bro., we hope our brethren and friends in this region will avail themselves of this privilege.

Conference.

The Delaware Dist. A. C. Conference is hereby called to meet and hold its fourth annual session at the Advent Christian Church, Eighth Street, above Noble, Philadelphia, Pa., commencing on Thursday evening, April 20th, and continue over the following Sabbath. All the officers for the year ensuing will be chosen at this session. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathising with us will be represented, either by letter or delegates. All letters of correspondence for the Conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. ASHMAN, President.
E. KING, Secretary.

Hoosick Valley Conference.

The next Quarterly Session of the Hoosick Valley Conference will be held with the church at North Adams, Mass., commencing Wednesday evening, April 12th, and continue with three meetings each day over the following Sabbath. It will soon be said "It is done." We are having our last meetings; we are doing our last work. The Father by his Spirit is bringing to light and to our remembrance numerous evidences of the approaching end.

Brethren in the ministry, do come to this meeting with the light you have, that we may feed and be fed with the pure Word of God. We do earnestly hope that the churches will be represented by delegates, and as many others as can come. Do not wait to be blest at the meetings, but come filled with the Holy Spirit, to work for the salvation of others. The meetings will be held in Millard's large Hall, a short walk only from either of the depots. Those who are dwelling in God and God in them, will you pray for this meeting?

H. K. FLAGG, Pres.
R. CANDLISH, Sec.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting in the Town Hall at Rochester Village, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, March 22d, and hold over Sunday, March 26th. We hope the friends of Jesus will come and labor in the meeting for the salvation of sinners.

ENOCH MORRILL.

NOTICE.—There will be a protracted meeting, beginning at the Vitum school-house in Sandwich, April 7th, as Bro. Isaac Hodgdon may arrange. Brn. D. W. Davis and C. R. Parsons are expected to preach the Word for the brethren.

C. R. PARSONS.

NOTICE.—There will be a Woman's National Union Campmeeting holden at Seabrook, N. H., commencing June 28th, and continuing till July 10th. Any wishing to build tents can correspond with C. A. Barton, Seabrook, N. H. Particulars hereafter. A. E. SMITH.

NOTICE.—The Mass. A. C. Conference will hold its next annual session at Lynn, on Fast day week, April next. Regular notice hereafter.

THE Pittsfield, Me., Campmeeting will commence Sunday, Aug. 27th. O. S. FRENCH, Sec.

THE Mechanic Falls Campmeeting will commence Saturday, Sept. 2d.

R. R. YORK, for the Committee.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference in Milltown, Me., to commence March 22d, at 7 o'clock P. M., to continue over the Sabbath. Bro. A. Ross is expected to attend. Other preaching brethren are cordially invited to come and assist in the good work. Come one, come all; and may the blessing of God rest upon this meeting for the salvation of sinners. M. W. CORLISS.

THE LAKE VIEW CAMPMEETING, Magog, P. Q., Canada, will be held, as per vote of Conference, immediately after the Alton Bay meeting. Time hereafter definitely given. Let those who have promised to build cottages be in time with their preparations. Lots free, and all welcome.

C. P. DOW, for the Committee.

NOTICE.—The Lord willing, there will be an Advent Christian Conference holden at E. Washburn, Maine, Crouse school-house, commencing Thursday, March 30th, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and continue over the Sabbath. Preaching brethren, M. W. Corliss, R. Snow, and H. Raymond, are expected to preach the Word of life. We cordially invite other preaching brethren and sisters, who would like to come to this meeting, to come filled with the Spirit, and take hold with the church here, and labor for the salvation of [illegible]. For the brethren, GOULD CROUSE, JR.

NOTICE.—Any of our [illegible] siring the Conn. A. C. [illegible] them about the last week in April next, please correspond at once with O. D. WOODRUFF, Sec.

NOTICE.—I expect to be at liberty after the middle of April to go and labor most of the time, as the way opens, with those who may desire to investigate facts of prophecy fulfilled and fulfilling touching the immediate coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ. Address me at Rutland, Vt., immediately. H. K. FLAGG.

THE church in Concord, N. H., [illegible] Uri Baker, E. Gordon, and Wm. H. [illegible], for their ministerial committee.

E. D. CLOUGH, Church Clerk.

ALL brethren wishing to preach to the A. C. Church in Keene, N. H., will please correspond with A. A. Stiles or Geo. W. Elliott. In behalf of the church, A. A. Stiles, G. W. Elliott, G. W. Spalding, H. H. Darling.

IMMERSION AND SPRINKLING: "The water and the blood, the ordinance and the atonement," is the meaning of the proposed title of our forthcoming work—"Baptism and Rantism," which we hope to issue soon, showing what "Baptism" is, and that "Rantism," or sprinkling, is not baptism, but relates to the atonement and the "blood of sprinkling," and therefore has a place in the teachings of the New Testament. Please continue to send in orders. Price of the book not over 50 cts. Let all who want it send in at once, to L. C. MCKINSTRY, Richmond, P. Q.

THE ministerial committee of the Advent Church of Hoosick, N. Y., are C. M. Lawton, Potter Hill, N. Y.; C. Brawnell, West Hoosick, N. Y.; L. Gardner, Hoosick, N. Y.

THOSE wishing to preach at Melvin Village, N. H., will please correspond with C. H. Sh[illegible] or M. W. Piper, before sending their appointments. T. W. PIPER.

THOSE wishing to preach in Lawrence, Mass., please correspond with J. Churchill, J. T. Merrill, or F. Flanders.

Appointments.

☞ APPOINTMENTS [illegible] TUESDAY MORNING [illegible] for the coming week.

☞ The following [illegible] was passed at the late meeting of [illegible]:—

"RESOLVED, That no appointments be published in the CRISIS hereafter for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by [illegible]) the Editors, Editorial Committee [illegible] unless satisfactory reference shall be given."

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommend, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"RESOLVED, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received, as a basis for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—GEO. T. ADAMS [illegible].

HADES, OR THE INTERMEDIATE STATE OF MAN. By Henry Constable, A. M. This is an able work of 367 pages. Second edition. Price $1.37. Postage 13 cts.

THE STRUGGLE FOR ETERNAL LIFE. By E. Petavel, D. D. The design of this work is to show that "Eternal life, instead of being the natural inheritance of man, is to be striven for and sought by faith in Christ, and patient continuance in well doing, and that at last there is a choice of the fittest for eternal existence, while confirmed sinners are doomed to extinction."

Price: Cloth, by mail, 85 cts.; paper, by mail, 55 cts. AG'T.

"GOSPEL SONGS."

"A choice collection of Hymns and Tunes, New and Old, for Prayer Meetings, Sunday Schools, etc."

This is a new book that has had a large sale at our campmeetings this season, and contains some very choice pieces:—"When Jesus Comes," "More to Follow," etc., etc. For sale at this Office. Price, 35 cts. per copy; $3.60 per dozen by express; by mail, 40 cts. [illegible]

NORTH CAROLINA AGAIN.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The blessed truths we as [illegible] how God is at work, I copy a letter received from this country before I left home. It is from a very able and prominent Baptist minister, who refused to publish my appointments last September when I came to this country; but he has been reading since then, and now writes as follows:

"Jan. 12*th*, 1876.

DEAR BRO. CARGILE:—To-night finds me doing what I would not have done twelve months ago without feeling that I had almost committed a crime; but now rest assured, I do it with pleasure; that is addressing you as a fellow-laborer in the gospel. I begin to see what it is to be persecuted for righteousness' sake. I have been trying to preach the Bible as God gave it, which is an unwelcome message to the majority of my people. I have been thinking of writing to you for sometime, but have delayed till after our regular church meeting, which was last Saturday, as that was the time old Bro.——— said he was going to have a general cleaning out of Flat Top church. We were all there ready, but behold the old man did not appear; consequently not a thing was said about the Advent doctrine, notwithstanding I preached a straight out Advent sermon, as far as I was able, from 1 Pet. 1: 3–5, and, as I told them that day, I never have felt more at liberty in my life than while preaching from this and kindred texts. I said I felt that God's hosts were with, or around me. I can't tell what will be the termination of the matter at our church, but God being my helper, I intend to stand for what I see the Word teaches, leaving the consequences with Him who doeth all things well.

My time as Pastor will terminate next meeting; then there will be a change in matters, and I pray God for the better. I long to see you return to N. C. again. Come without limiting yourself as to time, if you can. I did not try to preach on last Sunday, as Bro. D. C. Harmon was present with his gun heavily charged with immortality. Text—What is man? His first position was that [illegible] was made of two parts—one mortal, the [illegible] immortal. I could but think, when he made this statement, how different from the [illegible] statements were pretty much in harmony with this. When will the time come when we, as ministers of the gospel, will be willing for the Bible to speak?

I am still trying to preach to four churches, but understand they are going to close the doors against me at one of them, down in Caldwell, next meeting. This does not daunt me, as I feel I have the Bible for my theme, and trying to trust what Paul says in Rom. [illegible] master, I will preach it on the highway, to one or to a thousand, as opportunity offers.

There are many believers in the doctrine of the kingdom in this country, and the number is increasing in proportion as it is preached. A large field presents itself, where [illegible] people will readily embrace the truth, [illegible] if it is presented to them as it is in [illegible] Bible. The harvest is great, but the laborers are few. I have an appointment ten miles from here, East, the fifth Saturday and Sunday, to preach 'The Kingdom.' Pray that I may have the Spirit to attend me. I never felt like I wanted to preach as badly in my life as I have for the last few days. The cause I guess you can explain better than I can.

I have just commenced to read 'The [illegible] of Redemption,' by Welcome and [illegible]ude, in which I see things as I never saw them before, and I think in their true light. I have just read 'Ghostology' for the first time; I think it the most convincing I ever read. I have read many tracts and pamplets since I saw you, but love my Bible the best of all. When I think of the saints' inheritance, and realize what it is, I often think this is too good for me. Who could help loving a being like our blessed Lord? who would ever offer such things to poor sinners like me? and with the poet I can say—

'If there is only one song I can sing,
When in his beauty I see the great King,
This shall my song in eternity be,
O! 'tis a wonder that Jesus loves me.'

I want you to write me as soon as you get this, and let me know when you are coming. Send your appointments. I will publish them this time. Love to Bro. Smith. [illegible] him to come back when he can. [illegible] me. Yours in the gospel, T. [illegible]"

[illegible] opinion. His cheerful and christian [illegible] the storm of life is with him. She said to me, "[illegible] care what they say; I want the tru[illegible] O, I do praise God for the advocacy of the work. I will now give a few [illegible] by the way."

After receiving [illegible] N——'s letter, I left home Jan. 28th, stopped with the church at Ooltewah, Tenn., till Monday 31st. Had good social meeting and preaching Saturday, and on Sunday [illegible]ing and the Lord's supper. Sister [illegible] Smith (the aged widow of Bro. Silas Smith) was very sick. Pray for her. She is indeed a mother in Israel. [illegible] Ooltewah [illegible] Monday 31st, and on the [illegible] met the editor of the Baptist Reflector [illegible] Morristown, Tenn. He never had heard [illegible] of [illegible] views, and after talking a while said, [illegible] "The parable of the rich man and Lazarus [illegible] can find that seems to favor the conscious state of the dead." I gave him some very strong [illegible]. He kindly invited me to dinner. I found his wife also was very kind and social.

Left Morristown Tuesday, Feb. 1st. Had a lively controversy on the train with a Bro. Susong, a wealthy farmer of Cocke Co., Tenn., a Baptist, who believed folks went to heaven when they died. I asked for his picture. He replied, "Oh, if I was as well [illegible]

—I had no further use for it; but that it was not yea and nay, but yea and amen, to the glory of God.

Tuesday night stayed at Wolf Creek. It snowed, and the ground was frozen hard next morning. I started in an old open hack for Ashville, N. C., a distance of sixty-nine miles. When I had gone five miles, facing the keen North Carolina winds, I was very cold, and a gentleman came out from a store on the road side, in Madison Co., N. C., who proved to be Bro. P. Scism, the owner of the store. He said if I would stop over he would send round and get me a congregation to speak to; and as our views had never been proclaimed there, I felt it duty to do so. A small audience was out at "Antiock," M. E. Church South, in which I had the liberty of speaking. Took dinner with Bro. and Sister Gorrell, of M. E. Church South, who treated me hospitably, for which I shall ever remember them kindly. Spoke again at night to a large concourse of people, notwithstanding the extreme cold. Staid all night with Bro. Scism's amiable family. Here I met a Bro. Frank Lamb, who seems to have a mind to search for truth. The people seemed interested, and many invitations were given me to visit them again, which I will do, the Lord willing, on my return.

Thursday morning, Feb. 3d, very cold, cloudy, and high winds. I started at nine [illegible] rough frozen ground, and had to leave it at a blacksmith's shop on the road side for repairs. I mounted a stage horse, with his harness on, and with my large valise, filled with reading matter, before me, the driver on the other horse, we reached Ashville at half-past nine P. M., almost worn out with riding over the rough snow and ice, through the mountains, where a stage could not go till it thawed. During the day we passed much grand scenery and works of nature. Winding up the rapid French Broad River, we passed under many rugged rocks. Just after passing the celebrated Warm Springs, kept by Col. Rumbo, we passed through a narrow place between the river and the long fabled "lover's leap." It is a huge and almost shapeless rock, towering two hundred feet or more over the bosom of the swiftly rolling river. About one hundred and fifty feet from the water, in yellow paint, are the words "J. C. Smith, 1843." I was astonished; and cannot tell how any human being ever painted it there.

In Ashville Bro. W. P. Blair, proprietor of the stage lines, kindly refunded half of my stage fare for riding on horseback. Left Ashville Friday, the 4th, in the stage with Bro. J. H. Mills, former Editor of the Baptist Recorder, which once published a warning against the dangers of Adventism. I had a pleasant time with him on theology, while being bumped and jolted and shaken down in the stage through the mountains to Old Fort, where we arrived at ten P. M., almost frozen.

Saturday, Feb. 5th, took the train for Morganton, still in company with Bro. Mills, also Col. S. McD. Tate, the President of this Western N. C. R. R., which is destined to run to Morristown, Tenn. We had a pleasant time till at a station a gentleman entered the car, and Bro. Mills introduced him as Rev. Mr. Crisp, [illegible] talk to me on the Bible. Bro. Crisp is a Methodist minister, who I found had so much zeal for his views that he would "give nor ask no quarter." He said he heard how I carried things "rough shod" with Bro. Moody and others, in Caldwell Co., but I could not run over him that way. His eye showed irritation. I told him I proposed to be a christian, and they (christians) did not run over things "rough shod," but always worked with the mild spirit of Jesus. He challenged me to a debate, and began to take the position that Paul taught the immortality of the soul by "this earthly house of our tabernacle." I began to ask him questions about the distinction between the "earthly seeing and the "tabernacle," [illegible] empty house in the absurdity of [illegible]rrection of this old body, heaven [illegible] very abruptly and left the car, saying as he went, "Well, I will end the conversation with one not worthy to talk to me." I thanked him kindly as he went. I accepted his challenge, and wrote him, after consulting my brethren, to come on the 11th.

In Morganton I met Bro. D. D. Coffey, who had come sixteen miles on horseback to meet me. We reached his house just at dark, took supper, and then with Sister Coffey, his wife, we rode by the [illegible] light of the moon through snow and ice [illegible] Bro. Henry Coffey's, where we had a go[illegible] time with several of the brethren and [illegible]sters who met me there. It gave me ple[illegible]e to hear them tell how the Lord had br[illegible]t them through tribulation since I lef[illegible]n in September. Sunday, the 6th, sp[illegible] day with Bro. Israel Coffey and Bro. O. F. Goodwin and Sister wife[illegible]son, who all live in the same house. [illegible]ived here by a messenger a proposition [illegible] Bro. D. C. Harmon (Baptist) to debate, [illegible] Wautauga Co.

Monday, A. M., I started with Bro. Goodwin and rode twenty miles to Blowing Rock, in Wautauga Co., and staid with Bro. Nelson, a minister of the Baptist church. He with his good wife loves the truth, and by every possible way made us feel welcome; and really we felt at home, and enjoyed their hospitality. The people were so anxious for the debate, that a Baptist Bro. started at twelve o'clock at night on horseback after Bro. Harmon to come and meet the Adventist. Tuesday, at three P. M., spoke in the dwelling of Bro. Wm. M. Morris, who keeps guests during the summer at his celebrated spring. He and his wife are Methodists, but love Jesus, and proved by their kindness to us that religion is charity.

Wednesday, the 9th, spoke at the dwelling of Bro. Sherril, who is also prepared to keep boarders during guest season. Persons cannot find a more pleasant summer retreat than here, on top of the Blue Ridge mountains, with as good water as can be found anywhere. At three P. M. Bro. O. F. Goodwin preached at the house of Bro. Morris again, and we spent the night with him, together with Bro. and Sister Nelson, where we had a blessed little social meeting. Thursday, the 10th, I tried to preach at eleven A. M. in the dwelling of Bro. John Estes, a Baptist Bro. We took dinner with him and his devoted wife. At three P. M. Bro. Goodwin preached with good effect. He is now a sower of the seed, and I thank God for giving me such a helper as Bro. G. We [illegible]

May God bless all the dear brethren and sisters in Wautauga Co. who love the truth, and lavished so much kindness on his unworthy servant. Friday, the 11th, spent the day in debate with Bro. D. C. Harmon, Moderator of Three Forks Baptist Association. Had a pleasant discussion, and feel thankful that it was conducted in a kind spirit, and not a harsh word during the day. At night rode down the mountain with Bro. Elijah Moore, fifteen miles, to his home, where we arrived at eight P. M., having come the last four miles through a heavy rain, and so dark I had to call out occasionally to learn whether I was following Bro. Moore, whose mule would go home. Thank the Lord we reached there in safety, and with the kind motherly attention of Sister Moore, we soon forgot the rain storm, and went to bed with a severe headache from the hard day's work in debate.

Fearing this article has grown too lengthy, I must close here for the present. I have some blessed news for my next "notes by the way." Meetings increase in interest. Pray for your Bro. J. A. CARGILE.

REPORT OF J. J. SMITH'S LABORS.

Dear Brethren:—Since my last report I have been almost constantly at work for the Lord in my feeble way. On my return [illegible] our little churches. I found the breth[illegible] and pressing forward in their pilgrimage, excepting a few of the young, unstable ones, who could not, or did not, resist the temptations of the Christmas frolics. How can it be otherwise with the weak ones, when all the sects get up Christmas tree parties, sport and mingle with the world, and have a good time together. I know one village in which all three denominations of the place got up foolish parties to raise money for benevolent purposes. They have secured an infidel to act the part of a clown for the occasion. I am informed that this same clown was about the same time indicted for blasphemy, and has been refused as a witness in court, on account of his denying the Bible as a revelation from God.

When the writer preached in the house of these same "fun"-loving christians, on the saints' inheritance, a large concourse being in attendance, he courteously invited their minister to conclude the service, which he did by saying, "Let us get down in the most humble manner and pray." His prayer began thus: "We thank thee, O Lord, that we do not worship a material Jesus, but a spiritual Savior, and a God without body or parts." Thus he controverted the doctrine of a personal reign of Christ with his saints on the earth. The assembly being dismissed when he concluded, all retired, leaving me without an invitation to dine or lodge. It occurred to me that if I had preached a funny sermon I might have had a dinner in that village without going to a public house and paying for it. But, thanks to the Lord, I had the means for paying that time, or I might have suffered hunger. I know another brother who preached a good Bible discourse in that same house, and had his discourse criticized, after which he was left without an invitation to lodge for the night. He put [illegible]

In view of the Savior's language, Matt. 10: 14, is it obedience to continue our efforts in such a place? I have visited one other village and two cities where four or five churches in each have kept their doors closed against our preachers, but throw them open to the "lovers of pleasure." In some of these cities we have had the privilege of preaching in the Court House; in others we have hired a hall at $5.00 [illegible] service. In other inst[illegible] hotel keepers have th[illegible] open their halls free[illegible] good has been done. [illegible] outsiders inquire why we [illegible] allowed to preach in churches. The [illegible] is that we are "heretics," "materialists," "soul-sleepers," etc. Thus popular clamor being against us, the public soon learn to be shy of us, so far as thorough drilling can effect it. The preachers turn on us and say, "Where are your converts?" "What good are you doing?" "Don't you feel as though you had cut yourself off from the religious world?" "You must have a hard time of it." We can reply in the language of one who "conferred not with flesh and blood," "Necessity is laid upon me." I must do duty.

But to return: we have warned and admonished the young members of our little churches, time and again, to be on their guard against the wiles of the enemy. We have good reason to believe our labors in that direction have not been in vain. We do have much less party going than others.

We have had a visit from Bro. John S. Lawver, of the Southern Ill. Conference. He preached for us some, and did much in social intercourse with us to strengthen and encourage us. We all regretted that he left so soon, but he was not in good health, and the weather was rainy at the time. He hopes to spend some months with us next autumn. He is the right man to do good in this field of hard labor.

[illegible] S. R. Hood, of Etowah Co. He is one of those five Baptist ministers in that section lately proscribed for the truth's sake. I set out on foot to Trenton, Ga., where I purposed to take the train on the A. & C. R. R. to Ft. Paine, about forty miles. I was informed that, owing to the bad condition of this Road, but few would travel on it, and that none who knew its condition could feel safe on it. I hesitated to ride on it, but I had not now time to walk and meet my appointment; so, trusting to and praying the Lord's protecting care in his work, I paid my full fare, and moved off slowly. I soon saw that there was a dread among the passengers, some standing outside keeping their eye on the engine, so as to leap from the train if she should fall through the trestle. But, thanks to the Lord, I reached my point safely. At or near 1 o'clock P. M., I started over Lookout Mountain, a distance of about fifteen miles to the nearest place where I was acquainted with any one. With a heavy overcoat and other luggage, I found this a hard afternoon's walk; but as the weather was not so warm as when I made that hard walk last summer, I did not injure my feet as I did then, but the road was rough and tiresome.

On the way I came to that remarkable river, called Little River, being, I suppose, [illegible] over majestic precipices. The scenery is grand for miles. I had been informed that I would have to wade this rapid current if I got over, but on reaching the ford I found that a man had just dug a trough about eight inches deep, and as many wide. This was in a round log of white wood, about ten feet long, with the bark on. I called to a man on the other side to set me over on a horse. He said I could do it in the trough. So for ten cents (cheap enough) he took me to the other shore.

It was now early sundown. It was yet four miles to my destination; no other habitation on the way; a dim path to follow. Should I miss my route I might have to stay out all night, in wild forest, abounding in wolves after dark. I had heard some frightful stories of their following men, and snapping at their heels as they ascended some tree to get out of their reach. With these thoughts came [illegible] thought that on one occa[illegible] Daniel, the [illegible] of the Lord was protected from the [illegible] of lions, and the same Lord had power to protect from wolves. Twice after dark I lost my path, and found by the ro[illegible]ing of the waters in the great chasm th[illegible] was approaching the wolf neighborhood, [illegible] retraced my steps. Thanks to the L[illegible] I arrived safe at my cousin Jesse W[illegible] before they had retired. Here I [illegible] welcome, kind sympathy [illegible]

The next day I had but six miles to travel to reach my first appointment. I spent the day with my cousin's family at Bro. F. M. Thompson's. Both of these families are of like precious faith, my cousin having learned the truth some years ago near Bethel Church, Tenn. He has been industriously preaching the truth from house to house, and wherever opportunity offered. [illegible] reminds one of his father, Silas Smith, of Ooltewah, Tenn., who died last spring, having finished his untiring labors in the most triumphant hope.

Bro. Thompson furnished me a good gentle mule, to ride to my appointment at Friendship Church. On arrival I met with many smiling faces and cheering words. O how pleasant these friendly greetings! but will it not be sweet in the great gathering day?

I preached here Friday night, Saturday and evening, and over Sunday. Here I had the assistance of Brn. R. Banksow and Wm. W. Livingston, both of whom are suffering shame for the name of Jesus, having been excluded from Baptist churches for preaching "materialism."

These brethren might effect much good, but they are unable to devote a great share of their time to the ministry. They are poor in earthly goods, [illegible] have to labor to support their rising families. Bro. L. also labors under physical disadvantages, his lungs being weak. They have many warm sympathizers outside their own church. It is generally known in their communities that they have been excluded in palpable violation of the rules of the churches so excluding them. The churches that have driven us out for preaching truth have, in every instance that has come under my observation, declined from the truth, and are doing but little if any good.

I would [illegible] that the brethren [illegible] out doors [illegible] truth [illegible] found them a [illegible] to worship [illegible] poor in this [illegible] good [illegible] sake, had [illegible] willing hands [illegible] gone to [illegible] good earnest and built them a good, substantial, plain house. [illegible] the world helped to build it, not for a [illegible] for God's people, never to be locked against any who come to preach the Bible. Merchants aided by contributing nails, etc. The Lord bless, preserve and build these dear ones in the truth.

From here I went to meet Bro. S. R. Hood, of [illegible] Hill, Etowah Co. In my next I will report my labors with him and his people. May the Lord keep us all in these trying times.

Long Isl[illegible], Ala.

[illegible] DEPARTED.

C. F. [illegible]OW.

The dead mean not those who have left us for a day, or a short period, and will return; but are gone to the vale of death,—the still, [illegible] land of deepest shadows, where is no [illegible] plat to mark the passing years, burdened with great events, in which the living take a part. O, how the number increases! "[illegible]hen in this vale of tears I backward look and [illegible] such numbers."

What a feeling of loneliness, what a painful consciousness at one by one our loved and loving friends leaving us to "fight the good fight of faith" without their presence and helpful influences. Each true christian friend that thus departs leaves one the less by our side to cheer us on. Death's arrows are flying thickly around us; the funeral knell is often heard, the new graves are upon every side go where we may, we see the sad evidence of the same old tyranny, provoked and caused by sin. Well may we feel prompted to inquire, When will the night be gone? [illegible] come? When [illegible] spoiled, and the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings? When will those who sleep in the dust awake and sing? That gilded hour of gold gladness will, in due time arrive. The well established truth helps us to bear the deep grief of the separation.

From week to week in our several papers we read the brief obituaries that in a year's time, amount to a large number. Honored names of our ministers who have fallen within a few years past, linger upon our memories, and we think of their sermons, and self-denying labors and feel the while, the warm tear course down our cheeks. Brn. Miller, Galusha, Whiting, Pinney, Pratt, Howel, Bliss, two Turner's, Hitch, Hudson, John and Eli Himes, Hancock, Stevens, Smith, [illegible] Lee, Chapman, Page, Merrill, Haskin, and others—all departed, gone from life, gone from the living, and are now with the dead, where none "praise the Lord" or [illegible] for his truth." Prostrate, with faces [illegible] as though looking "for the [illegible] from heaven," with cold hands folded, [illegible] hearts now still,—they wait in the grave. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Others of the living will depart, during the brief period of the present swiftly passing year, and we may each well ask, "Is it I?" [illegible] me to take up the strain of this article—Sr. Thompson, of Kansas, and Bro. Hoyt, of Magog, P. Q., both gifted persons, whose absence is a loss. The man of hoary hairs, as he looks backward through the dim vista of rapidly receding years is startled to see the many vacant places of those who started with him to run the race of life, with hope young and gay. Many of these are out of sight, fallen by the way. Those in the vigorous and healthful prime of manhood, all absorbed as they may be in the busy scenes of this vain and transient life, are often compelled to pause and give at least "the "passing tribute of a sigh," as they see one by one drop from the circle, and sink into the solemn silence of the tomb. Youth may well mourn to find that even its blooming ranks are fearfully thinned by the fell destroyer. This shows the frailty of our tenure of life; for the "rider of the pale horse" is victorious even there.

What then is our hope? Said my friend, who saw an open grave before him, "If I go down, I shall come up. There is a resurrection of the dead." This is the hope that is like an anchor, both sure and steadfast. This is "everlasting consolation, and good hope through grace." It bids those in grief to "sorrow not as those that have no hope." We do believe that Jesus died and rose again, most literally; and that "even so, them that sleep in him will God bring with him," without the loss of one.

We have read about a resurrection at the last day—beyond the time of dying, so that all may be rescued. Oh, the divinity of the plan! how well ordered! It is worthy of a God. We need not be querulous about "how the dead are to be raised up;" as though these might after all be a lack of power; nor are we left to petition "science" with its vaunted powers to help us; all we need is to know or duly recognize the ample power of the mighty God of the vast universe, and simply feel that underneath us is the unfailing power of that God who says—"I will ransom them from the power of the grave." Let all the mourners be comforted.

IN MEMORY OF MOSES SMITH.

C. J. HUCKINS.

Gone from his home is our father dear,
And we miss him sadly there;
Vacant the place by the window now,
And empty the old arm-chair.

Threescore and sixteen were the years he lived
Ere death the dread summons gave;
Meekly he sank in his icy arms
To the quiet rest of the grave.

I go to his home—it is lonely there,
For father will greet me no more;
The dear hands that led our infant feet,
Their labor of love is now o'er.

Then farewell, father, fare thee well,
Thy days on earth are o'er;
But we'll meet thee with the angel throng
On Canaan's happy shore.

Holderness, N. H.

FROM J. C. & S. E. SMITH.

Dear Friends in Christ, Greeting:—It has been some time since you have heard from us, and we will again write to you, hoping and praying that a few thoughts penned in the spirit of our Master may not be unprofitable to the readers of our much loved paper, the Crisis.

Since our last correspondence we have been East, making Newton Upper Falls, [illegible] the last seven months. While there we were greeted by many loved ones, who are anxiously looking for the return of the Nobleman. We saw many whom we had formerly learned to love, and who are still doing what they can for the spread of truth. We attended a number of meetings while there, held in different localities, and saw some good done in Jesus' name.

Feb. 2nd, we again started for this mission field. It was hard to part with those we love, and leave a pleasant home, where we were enjoying the comforts of life; and had it not been for the command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," we would have gladly tarried East with them.

Wednesday, at five P. M., we started from Boston; came as before to Albany, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Quincy, Kansas City, and from there to Pleasanton, Linn Co., Kansas. We were not quite three days and nights on the way. Wife and little Chester did not leave the train till we reached Kansas City, Mo. At Pleasanton Bro. Crowell was at the depot awaiting our arrival, and welcomed us to his Tabernacle. Feb. 9th, Bro. C. prepared his house for meeting, and we spoke to a few brethren and sisters who are endeavoring to hold up the standard here and let their light shine.

10th, I started for Arvonia, Osage Co., leaving my wife at the quiet home of Bro. C. Rode thirty-five miles or more, and then put up for the night among strangers. In the evening I went to a school meeting, which lasted nearly two hours, and then I hung up the chart, and spoke to them from Dan. 2. All stopped and listened with great attention, and after meeting they came for tracts, and requested me to stay longer. One man gave a stirring exhortation, and advised them all to take the tra[illegible] [illegible] my way rejoicing, and scattering the seed by the way-side, as I met persons from time to time. I reached my uncle's in the afternoon, and took him by surprise. Called on Bro. Brian and family; found them in the work, and looking for the Lord. At night rode seven miles further, making a distance of thirty-five miles. We had a happy greeting at our brother's home. Bro. Hunt was there, and we had a refreshing season. Before the throne of grace, around the family altar, we felt the presence of the Lord, and gave thanks for his watch-care and great goodness in our protection, and the protection of others from whom we have long been separated. After thanksgiving and praise we packed up, crossed the river to Bro. Webster's, then returned to Bro. Brian's and took him to his appointment on Tuck-war Creek. At night a large company came out to hear the Word. Bro. Brian had been here before, and a door of utterance was opened before us.

Sunday, 13th, we met at 11 A. M. The house was full, and the Lord helped in speaking from the chart from the words, "And the kingdom, and the dominion," etc. I never saw better attention. After meeting, a large company came up for tracts. At night we had an overflowing house, and the words of Paul, found in Heb. 9: 27, 28, we endeavored to present to the hearers. [illegible]

God they would meet us in the kingdom. We had a weeping time in the Lord. Seed has been sown here by Brn. Brian and Webster that will tell in the coming judgment. The Lord will bless his own truth when it is presented in love. It will not return void.

Monday, 14th, we took Bro. B. home, and then went to Arvonia; heard Bro. Hunt give a temperance lecture to the children and neighbors. 15th, visited Bro. Webster and a Bro. on the prairie. 16th, started with Bro. Hunt for Franklin Co., distance thirty-five miles; reached there before night. Found Bro. Snyder and companion in the living way for the kingdom, and glad to see us again. 17th, rested. At night met for worship. Had freedom in the Lord speaking from 2 Pet. 3: 4. A goodly number testified to the goodness of God, and their expectation of soon seeing the King in his glory.

18th. Came to Ottawa, and stopped at Sr. Wilson's. Scattered some seed for the Lord, and on Sunday, 20th, went to the colored church, and was invited by the preacher to speak. The words of the apostle from Titus 2: 11–14 we appropriated to their use. The Lord helped in presenting his grace and salvation, the teaching of his divine law, and the looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Was invited to speak again. Thank the Lord some drank in the truth, and rejoiced to know redemption was nigh. Had three preachers out,—one white man, who has come out on the blessed hope. Sunday night we went to hear a professor lecture on the subject of "Ishmael." He showed the fulfillment of prophecy in regard to this nation. He spoke of the Turks; said that by spring they would be driven out of Europe, and that would be one move in the conversion of the world. Thus they are overlooking the second coming of Christ. At the close of the meeting I asked him some questions, gave him some reading matter, and trust he will learn a more perfect way.

22nd, we started for Pleasanton, distance fifty miles. On the 23d we arrived, and loved ones were glad to see us. At night Bro. Hunt spoke from the words, "He that hath ears to hear let him hear." The evening of the 24th we had another meeting.

25th. With Bro. Crowell and my wife we started for Missouri, Bates Co., to attend the Quarterly Conference. We arrived in season to attend the evening meeting. Here we found brethren and sisters from different churches, and Bro. Cate who has been used as an instrument in the hands of God of strengthening the cause. Also met Bro. Little, who came some distance to attend this meeting, and who with Bro. Cate are true yoke fellows in the Lord, doing his bidding. While there we had a blessed season—a refreshing long to be remembered. Brethren and sisters were kind and hospitable, and came together in the spirit of the Master. They made advancement in the right direction. They commenced to raise a Mission fund for tracts and books, and for those who labor in the gospel. We praise the Lord for the sweet season we enjoyed while with them.

The 28th we returned to Pleasanton. We have calls from a number of counties to labor. Hundreds of places ought to be visited, and the seed of the kingdom sown. We need tracts and papers. Will not some of our brethren and sisters, who have them to spare, send to me at Arvonia, Osage Co., Kansas; also papers? Bro. Harrington and others have been brought out by reading the Crisis. There is a vast country here for labor, and the Lord is blessing every effort. Multitudes are anxious to hear these great truths that relate to the near coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead.

O may all make haste and do up their work while it is called to-day. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters, that we may have strength to publish the glad tidings till Jesus comes. From your Bro. and Sr. in Christ.

Pleasanton, Linn Co., Kan., Feb. 29th.

WAR.

War, like intemperance, is a giant evil in its ramifications, reaching and contaminating all of the interests of society. Like the river with its poisoned fountain, its corrupting influences reach every nook and retreat, sending a widespread desolation wherever man is found. Under its withering influences, more deadly than pestiferous miasma, it blasts every rising hope, cripples industry, exhausts natural resources, fans the fires of jealousy and hate, widens local chasms, excites malicious animosities, practically closes the doors of the churches and the halls of learning, and thus fearfully degrades our fallen humanity. In its absolute sway, its tyrannical assumptions, it siezes not only the public treasures, but lays a ruthless hand on the national conscience, transferring the individual moral sense to the censorship of a superior in military position, making might the synonym of right. The inferior is thus compelled to yield his moral [illegible] to the [illegible] by no means [illegible] or to the supposed emergences of the accidents of war. In such circumstances and under such influences private virtue must become dwarfed, and vice assume gigantic proportions. The Sabbath, a necessity, not only of man's moral but of his physical nature, is violated, desecrated, becoming a day of hilarity and carnage. Familiarity with crime makes it less odious, while scenes of cruelty and bloodshed cannot fail to callous the heart, brutalize and destroy, in some degree, the more ennobling and the finer sensibilities of our higher nature.—J. H. Hanaford.

THE RESURRECTION.—Reflecting the other day upon the sad state of the churches at the present moment, I was led to look back to apostolic times, and to consider wherein the preaching of the present day differed from the preaching of the apostles. I remarked the vast difference in their style from the set and formal oratory of the present age. But the main difference I observed was in the subjects of their preaching. Surprised I was when I discovered that the very staple of the preaching of the apostles was the resurrection of the dead. The apostles, when they preached, always testified concerning the resurrection of Jesus, and the consequent resurrection of the dead. It appears that the Alpha and Omega of their gospel was the testimony that Jesus died and rose again from the dead according to the Scriptures.—Spurgeon.

THESE minds help one another by mutual struggles.

HOME AND HEALTH.

OLD BEDS.

Are old beds as wholesome as new ones? No. We have much to learn about beds. Disease and feebleness very often come from our beds. Without refreshing sleep we cannot enjoy or exert the full powers of our physical or mental natures. The first question which many of our wisest doctors are now asking of their patients is, "How and where do you sleep?" The location of a bedroom is everything. Science and common sense tell us that our bed-rooms should always be on the sunny side of the house, and that light and air should pass through them most of the day. The seeds of disease are in our mattresses. Thousands of families sleep on feather and curled hair beds which have been in daily use—and they boast of it—for twenty-five years. How often have such beds, even in well regulated families, been turned out to the sun and exposed to the air, as they should have been, especially in the summer months, for hours together? It is frightful to think of the quantity of perspiration from our bodies which adheres to the unrefreshed mattresses.

Ignorance of these matters inflict upon posterity untold burdens, and robs the world of an immense amount of power. How can a man who has slept on an unhealthy bed rise in a singing mood in the morning ready for a full day's work? Almost any bed well managed contributes to vigorous health and long life. The material of the mattress is of the smallest account. Freshness and cleanliness are the essentials. In the sweltering nights no bed is fit to be occupied that has not been under the sun several hours in the twenty-four. The maids in our houses make up the cribs and beds almost as soon as they are vacated, without the slightest regard to purification. The hard struggle for healthy life is of our own creation. As we make our beds so we must lie on them. There is light enough on this subject, as on all others, but we love the darkness rather than the light. We think with pity of the family which attends the poisonous theaters and returns to neglected beds at midnight. This is called enjoyment and recreation by persons who know not what they are doing.—Ex.

HOME AND HAPPINESS.

The truest happiness is ever to be found at home. No man without a home can be long happy; at least, truly so. But the domestic group can only be productive of happiness when stimulated by affection and prudent friendship. What can be compared in the intercourse of life with the attentions, the little acts of kindness and loving smiles in the family? These all raise the most pleasant emotions, and call forth the liveliest sentiments of our natures. What are the honors of ambition, the pleasures of fame and name, in comparison with home and happiness? We often see distinguished men shutting out the praises of the world, and seeking the pleasures of home around their own quiet firesides, with there prattling little ones, and enjoying their innocent pleasures. This to a fond parent is one of the purest sources of mirth.

Even Cicero, with all his hardness of heart and illiberality of mind, felt the tenderness of home attachments. At one time he acknowledged that he received no satisfaction in any company but that of his little daughter and wife. Sir Thomas Moore devoted much of his time and life to his family, from a sense of duty, also delighting to amuse his children. Let us, then, renew our efforts to increase the happiness of the children with whom we are thrown. Children would progress more rapidly in their studies were their teachers less austere, and would win first the affections of the little ones. After several years' experience in this matter, I have found [illegible] you love them [illegible] to [illegible] them, and I will insure su[illegible].—Christian Neighbor.

FASHIONABLE LIFE.—If there is any environment which can degrade a human being or harden a young heart, it is the atmosphere of fashionable life, without that home culture which should be its natural accompaniment. You may take the tenderest and most beautiful and lovely girl, the one that is kindest at home, and loves her father and mother most, and put her in the highest circle of fashionable life, with plenty of money and full scope to do as she pleases; let her dress herself as she will—cover herself with diamonds and pearls; let the love of admiration become the ruling passion; and soon all the tenderness of that young nature passes away; her thoughts concentrate upon herself—what figure she is cutting, who her admirers are, what conquests she can make. By and by the youthful, beautiful modesty is gone, and the way is open for vice, that, in the beginning, would not have been dreamed of, or, if thought of, put away as utterly impossible. —Banner of Holiness.

DRINK LESS WITH YOUR MEALS.—If water with food is the cause of functional debility much more objectional is hot drink. Every thing taken at a high temperature is relaxing. The teeth are injured by hot drinks; the throat and stomach debilitated by them, and if we use tea, coffee, wine, etc., the mischievous effects are greater. Drink, then, should not be taken with food. It is better, if one is thirsty, to take a draught of water thirty minutes before eating, or four hours after. Many men have relieved themselves of dyspepsia by not drinking even water during meals. No animal except man ever drinks in connection with his food. Man ought not to. Try this, dyspeptics, and you will not wash down mechanically what ought to be masticated and ensalivated before it is swallowed. [illegible]

THE LORD MAY COME TO-DAY.

Busy servant in the vineyard,
Earnest soldier in the fray,
Cheer your heart, and upward glancing,
Think—the Lord may come to day.

Weak and weary troubled mourner,
Fearing dangers in the way,
Be no longer sinful, caring,
For the Lord may come to-day.

Are you busy, all too busy
With the things that fade away—
Wealth, or fame, or gain, or pleasure;
Drop them, he may come to-day.

Or an idler in the vineyard—
Others pass you on the way?
Wake, and live as an immortal,
Lest the Lord should come to-day.

Is the blood upon your garments?
Have you on his pure array?
Naught can hide a guilty sinner,
If in light he come to-day.

Are you waiting for the Master?
He is surely on his way;
We can almost hear his footfall—
Blessed Jesus! come to-day.

"THE IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT."

BY G. W. STETSON.

The Christian Union of Jan. 23d says: "It has been shown that during the first four hundred years the three theories of restoration, of annihilation, and of eternal punishment of the wicked were held indifferently in the primitive church, and no man's orthodoxy was called in question on that ground." That is a very frank admission concerning the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked, and one which very few ministers of the gospel in our day are willing to make. But of the three theories held in the primitive church, that of annihilation should have been placed first in the list of specifications, for it was the first and most ancient held in the church; and if we allow the literal and primary signification of terms used by Moses and the prophets, Christ and apostles, God and the Bible, it was the only one held and taught until "the mystery of iniquity began to work" in the church, creating "the apostacy," preparatory to bringing forth "that man of sin, . . . the son of perdition," whom the gospel is to consume and the Lord destroy by the brightness of his personal appearing.

By "terms used" I mean the many Greek words used in the Septuagint version of the Old Testament and in the New Testament concerning the future state of those unregenerated in this life. Those Greek terms are translated in our English version by death, destruction, perishing, and their equivalents; as "they shall die," or "be punished with everlasting destruction." Luke 13:3; Rom. 8:13; 2 Thess. 1:9.

Now we have another very important admission in relation to the signification of these terms which we hold to be synonymous with annihilation. In a series of five discourses by the Rev. J. Baldwin Brown, B.A., on what he is pleased to style "The miserable doctrine of annihilation," published in The Christian World, London, Eng., Feb. 19th to March 19th, 1875, he says (1) that "immense stress is laid on the assertion that most of the words which are applied in Scripture to describe the future doom of the wicked are words which, in their original or natural sense, convey what we mean by destruction,"—i. e., annihilation. This is true! But (2) he says that the view we annihilationists take of them is perfectly correct; that, in that Greek language in which the New Testament is written, those words have as their "original and natural sense" the precise sense we have put on them. This, he says, "is freely allowed." See "Review" by H. Constable, in Rainbow for May, 1875. There, that is all we need to carry us victoriously and triumphantly through. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." God has said so. That is enough!

Let me here call attention also to a republication—in Bro. Burr's paper, the Advent Christian Times—of an editorial from the Chicago Daily Tribune of Jan. 15th, which was an endorsement of an article written by Bro. Burton W. Holmes, on Future Punishment, and published in the daily Tribune of Sunday, Jan. 13, 1878. I hope we shall see a reprint of that editorial in the Crisis. Of course there are other avenues to the second advent than life eternal in Christ only; but one thing is certain, the horrible doctrine of endless suffering in a hell of eternal misery is doomed.

But when obsolete and gone, what shall be in its stead? Law without penalty of some kind for its violation is no better than a rope of sand; and a penalty that cannot be executed makes it no better. Penal law can have but one of these objects in view, if I understand correctly. (1) To compel obedience through fear of incurring the penalty of transgression. (2) To amend and reform the refractory by wholesome chastisement for past offences. (3) To extirpate the lawless desperadoes for the vindication of justice, for a terror to evil doers, and for the peace, security and well being of survivors. Beyond this all infliction of penalty is useless, and is transformed into malicious vindictiveness and unjust exercise of power tyrannically. But endless suffering is never alleged as either reformatory or extirpatory to the lost, and can in no way benefit the saved, as they are beyond the reach of harm, and raised above the power and influence of evil. As a "terror to evil doers", here and now, it has already become a nullity; has long since lost its force to restrain and deter from crime, from the fact that it is not feared, because it is not believed on account of its disproportionate excess of infliction to time and turpitude in transgression, and aimless object in prolongation.

To say, then, that the Infinite has made such penal law for the government of the finite is to tax creative wisdom and charge God with folly. I say it makes him, and him only responsible for the perpetuity of evil. For, if there ever was a point when God began to create, then there was a time anterior to creation, when God only was; and then no evil did exist, for moral evil is sin, and sin is the transgression of law by a moral agent. But God certainly foreknew all things, or he could not have "declared the end from the beginning." He therefore knew, prior to creating that moral agent, that man would sin and in sinning introduce moral evil into his universe. Infinite in power, as well as in wisdom, he was able to make man with an undying nature and endow him with an endless existence, with an inalienable immortality; or to make him with a nature susceptible to dissolution, so that, after a temporary, transitory life, he should return from whence he came—into nothingness, and his moral evil would also terminate with him. But if he created man for an endless existence, then he himself must redeem man from the evil, or evil would stand as an eternal blot in his universe, marring the beauty of his work and impeaching the perfection of his creative wisdom.

Every attribute of divine perfection, therefore, cries aloud for man's redemption and restoration in and to him or extirpation from and by him. But exclusion from the "tree of life" after transgression, and guarding the way with cherubim and flaming sword, is the voice of God's eternal justice, making proclamation that man ought not, must not and shall not "live forever" in sin, lest he be miserable forever, and wickedness be immortalized in his evil existence by the prolongating power of life through the divine energy. The destruction of the old world by water, and the cities of the plain by fire, are divine attestations that evil and evil doers must have an end. The translation of Enoch and Elijah, with the "long-suffering" in Noah's time, are manifestations of the divine goodness in forgiveness; while the life, death and resurrection of Christ is the voice of the divine compassion in behalf of man's redemption and restoration to the divine favor in holiness. The discussion of the divine penalty must therefore finally be reduced to these two—Restorationism and Annihilationism.

Educating the masses aright will devolve upon the vanguard of the army of the Lord. Brethren, come to the front. "Hold the fort!" Send forth the proclamation, "Christ our life." Shout the battle-cry of "Victory or death!" Victory in Christ over the world, the flesh and the devil, over hades and the grave. Everything everywhere is most propitious. Only this one thing stands in the way of a speedy triumph for the truth—division. Alas! alas! these miserable side-shows! O for "the wisdom that cometh from above." But, thank the Lord for another thing, "the conflict is irrepressible." Men can as effectually dam Niagara with a shingle, or put out the fires of Vesuvius with a cup of water, as to arrest this onrushing, incoming tide of thought and anxious inquiry.

AMOS 3: 7.

BY DAVID C. DUDLEY.

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

Ever since the blood of righteous Abel was shed, God has had a people that have feared his name and worked righteousness, and to these the Almighty has entrusted his secrets and unfolded his plans for the future, for the secrets of the Lord are with them that fear him, and he will show them his covenant. The plan of redemption, as devised by Omnipotence for the salvation of perishing humanity, has been revealed to the servants of the Most High. God's people have been able, by the enlightening influence of his Holy Spirit, to understand the deep things of God. The rise and fall of nations, the establishment and overthrow of kingdoms, has been revealed to his servants the prophets; and God has showed them his covenant and made known his purpose.

The prophetic stream of time has been delineated upon the chart of futurity. Its winding course has been traced from the great fountain-head out into the boundless ocean of eternity. Holy men of God, with the Spirit's penetrating powers, have scanned the future of this earth, and witnessed in heavenly visions its varied changes. They have walked and talked with God, and his favor has been manifest toward them. They have enjoyed the sunshine of his presence, and the glory of his power.

God established his covenant with his servant Noah, and revealed unto him his purpose to destroy the world with a flood of waters. Noah believed God and prepared an ark for the salvation of himself and family, while the unbelieving perished. Abraham was called the friend of God, and to him was the great future unfolded, with the promise that in him all the nations of the earth should be blessed. When God purposed to overthrow the cities of the plain for their great wickedness, he hid not the thing from Abraham, "For surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." Moses, the law-giver of Israel, was entrusted with the tables of testimony, and received from the hand of the Almighty the law of Sinai. He talked with him on the Mount until his face became so resplendent with the glory of God that the children of Israel could not look steadfastly upon him. God made a covenant with Moses concerning the children of Israel, and from Pisgah's top showed him the land which he sware unto Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed. David, the sweet singer of Israel, the man after God's own heart, to whom the Lord had promised that his seed should endure forever and his throne as the sun before him, knew of the secret things of God. He foretold of the first and second advent of the Savior of mankind, and to him was revealed the final overthrow of the enemies of God and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom, with Christ as the lawful heir of his Father's throne to establish it in mercy and reign in righteousness.

Daniel, in visions of God, with the angel of the Lord to strengthen him and give him skill and understanding concerning the vision, saw the rise and fall of the four universal kingdoms of earth. He "beheld until their thrones were cast down, and one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom that should break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms, and it should stand forever." He penetrated the gloom of futurity until he saw, down here in these last days, a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, and in his astonishment he cried out, "O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" He foretold the purifying time when the people of God should be made white and tried. He saw the wickedness of the wicked increasing. The time of running to and fro, the increase of knowledge, the inability of the wicked to understand, and the final delivery from the thraldom of sin of those whose names are written in the book. All this has been faithfully portrayed by God's servants, the prophets. The refreshing times when all things are to be restored has been foretold by all the holy prophets since the world began.

Away back in earth's infancy Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of a judgment day saying, "Behold, he cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all." In the very shadow of the fall, when man by his disobedience had forfeited his right to the tree of life, a Deliverer was promised that should effectually triumph over the arch deceiver, and destroy the originator of sin with all his works, and destroy that which was lost through unbelief. Standing upon the lonely isle of Patmos, the angel of the Lord is sent to John to reveal to him things which must shortly come to pass. In his apocalyptic vision the last day scenes pass in successive order before him. The condition of the churches, as they shall appear in the great day of accounts, is revealed to him. Looking down through the vista of ages, he sees the cruel persecutions of the saints of God by the man of sin, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped. He traces his dark career from beginning to end, until his short-lived triumph is cut short, and he is destroyed by the brightness of the Coming One. He sees the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. The new heavens and new earth, which was promised to Isaiah, and for which Peter according to that promise looked, was seen by the revelator restored to their Eden beauty. The pure rivers of water of life were there, and on either side of it was the tree of life. No cherubim with flaming sword was needed now to keep the way of the tree of life, for its leaves were for the healing of the nations, and the inhabitants of that celestial city could eat of its fruits and live forever.

All through the sacred oracles, the last crowning event, the finishing stroke of redemption, has been talked of by prophets and apostles. It was a theme upon which the Savior loved to dwell, and which angels desire to look into. An event around which cluster all the christian hopes and joys. It soothed the dying martyr's pains while the burning faggots blazed around him. Through the blinding smoke and flame, by the eye of faith, he sees the Savior standing with outstretched arms. Above the hissing and crackling of the funeral pile, and the taunts and jeers of the enemies of the cross of Christ, he hears the loving voice of the Savior saying, "Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." It is an event for which we are told by the blessed Savior to watch, and when we see its near approach, to look up and lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh.

Giving earnest heed to the sure word of prophecy we see the day hasteth greatly. The twilight shades of evening have long since gathered around us. The unerring hand of time on the great dial of eternity has almost reached the midnight hour of earth's existence. Heralding angels are about to usher in the coming morn, and the same heavenly voice that summoned Lazarus from the tomb will arouse the sleeping ones. The voice which once shook the earth will then shake heaven and earth, and those things that are shaken will be removed and forgotten and never come to mind. Those that sleep in the dust will awake and sing, and behold him in his righteousness, and be satisfied to awake in his likeness. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of the last trump, the living will be changed and caught up to meet the Lord in the air to be forever with him in glory. We shall see his face and be made like him, and his name shall be in our foreheads. There we shall be healthy, and the inhabitants will never say, I am sick. But with immortality stamped upon their features, they will roam the elysian fields of glory throughout the countless ages of a never-ending eternity.

2 Though fiercely howls the stormy blast,
And wild the angry billows roar,
Though life with clouds is overcast,
There's sunshine on the other shore.—Chorus.

3 Though parted in the thickening gloom,
Yet we shall meet to part no more;
And shout, while bursting from the tomb,
There's glory on the other shore.—Chorus.

4 O, home of hope, and peace, and rest,
I sigh for thee, where woes are o'er;
To dwell with all the pure and blest,
In glory on the other shore.—Chorus.

5 Thou, Saviour of the lone and lost,
Who hast our sinful burdens bore,
Thy blood shall save the tempest-tost,
In glory on the other shore.—Chorus.

PSALMS 118: 20.

BY J. P. MARQUAND.

"This gate of the Lord, into which the righteous shall enter."

Our text is a figure. For the sake of the argument I shall call it "The gate of regeneration," and say that none shall enter it but those who are holy and pure, free from defilement, abomination and lying. Rev. 21:27.

The question now arises, What is regeneration? I answer, it is a new heart and a right spirit, which David prayed for in the 51st Psalm. It is being good and godlike, living above the world and its enchantments, not yielding to sin, or to temptations, but calling upon God continually for aid and strength to do his will, and living a life of faith and prayer as our Savior did. Do you doubt that Jesus Christ had many mighty struggles? Turn to Heb. 5:7, and there see what strong crying and tears came from him to his heavenly Father, and he was heard in that he feared.

Now, poor mortal, are you any better than your Master? and can you make yourself any better in your own native strength? Nay, you must do as Jesus did, look to your Father for the Holy Spirit to help you; and as Paul has said, it is through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost (Tit. 3:5; 2 Thess. 2:13), through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, or as Peter says, "through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Christ."

Regeneration is being begotten again by the Spirit of God, being made a new creature in Christ, leaving the first Adam behind and coming in to the second Adam, who is the first resurrection. "This is the true God and eternal life." 1 John 5:20.

I know there are persons who doubt if there is any advanced christian experience, and seem to rest in the first principles of theoretical religion. Their ideas may be correct and their character nominally right, but this deep, inward work of the soul, which is a part of regeneration, they do not covet or desire, and yet the Bible invites us to seek and obtain it; not by the works of the law, but by the hearing of faith. "Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above;) or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Rom. 10:6-10.

Dear reader, do you wish for an entrance into the kingdom of God? Then lay aside all malice, envy and backbiting, and enter the strait gate and narrow way which leadeth unto life. Matt. 7:14. It will cost you something to get into that gate and walk in that way. It will amount to crucifixion to this world and deadness to all its follies and vanities. The new life in Christ will charm you so that you will turn away from the old and miserable paths you once trod, and forsake them forever. It would be sad indeed if you should so misimprove your advantages and privileges as to fail in securing an entrance into life eternal. God grant you to make a mighty effort to throw off the chains of darkness and of sin, not forgetting [illegible] infirmities and teach you how to pray. No man or woman can be saved by their own efforts, without the aid, comfort and strength derived from the Spirit of God. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts," Zech. 4:6.

PRACTICAL INQUIRIES AND THOUGHTS.

BY C. M. SWEET.

I firmly believe that our Lord is very soon to "appear the second time without sin unto salvation." I therefore feel prompted to make of you, dear reader, some searching and solemn inquiries, and present some important practical thoughts for your serious consideration. Have you not in many instances slighted the gospel of Jesus Christ? If you have not scoffed at his Word, and trampled eternal verities beneath your feet, have you not, on too many occasions, given a decided preference to the things of this present evil world? If you have, do you not think that such conduct is offensive to the Lord, and that you had better repent of it immediately?

Again, have you not frequently taken part with the world, or joined with them in pleasures that are prohibited in the Scriptures, in order to evade the cross, when you should have appeared as the bold champion of him who died for you, holding forth the light of truth to a benighted world, and showing forth the power and virtues of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light? If you have been guilty of sins of commission like these, are there not also sins of omission of which you must plead guilty? Have you not, on these accounts, cause to humble yourself before the Lord, and to repent in dust and ashes? Once more, have you daily and faithfully improved the talents which God has given you? What use have you made of the Bible? Have you read it in your family and in your closet? Have you taught it diligently to your children, and taken it as a light unto your feet and a lamp unto your path? Can you say with David, "Thy word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against thee?" Ps. 119:11. Have you erected an altar for God in your family? Do you make it appear in all your intercourse with men that the religion of Jesus Christ is your chief and greatest concern? When Moses came down from the Mount, "his face shone." Of Christ's first disciples it is said that their enemies "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."

As to professed Christians in general, how little do they manifest the great principle of christian love; how little do they resemble the first Christian Church, when the disciples were of one heart and of one mind. Surely the seamless garment of Christ is rent in a thousand pieces. See what divisions distract the church to-day. Let us carefully examine ourselves and see if many of the evils of which we complain in our family, our social circle, or in our local church, may not in some measure be traced to our own personal neglect to discharge our christian duties.

When we think on what we are and ought to be, what cause we all have to humble ourselves before God!

Moreover, do not many who profess to love and reverence the Holy Scriptures, neglect one great and particular portion of them, and keep it entirely out of their minds, as though it were a useless and unprofitable part of them? I mean the prophetic portion of the Word of God, concerning which it is said by our blessed Redeemer, "Blessed is he that readeth and he that understandeth" it. In shutting out this portion of Scripture, they shut out the Holy Spirit, and exclude it from one particular branch of its office, which is not merely to take of some of the things of Christ, but of the things of Christ without limitation or exception; not merely to lead into truth, but into all truth; not only to show us the things which have been, but which "shall come to pass." It is no slight matter to reject any portion of revealed truth, especially that to which God calls our most serious attention, saying, "Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place."

Dear reader, beware how you treat this subject. Those who thus grieve the Holy Spirit, and dishonor and mutilate the Scriptures, may expect to be left in great darkness, and in a barren and unfruitful state.

Now let me say in conclusion, if you are not fully prepared for the coming of Christ, complete this work of preparation at once.

"Signs of which there's no mistaking,
All portend Messiah near."

HOPE.

BY G. E. MERRILL.

"Hope is the sheet-anchor of all human hearts. The sick hope to get well. The doctor says, 'As long as there is life there is hope.' Many christian people hope to fly away when they die. Adventists hope to live eternally when Jesus comes. The real hope of christians is the appearing of Christ. Until he comes the church is without a head, without a shepherd."

The coming of Jesus is the only hope the Bible holds out to man. It is the "one hope," the "lively hope," the "blessed hope." It is the "polar star" of the church. It is my hope. It is the "sheet-anchor," the great anchor of my poor heart. It holds. There is no let up to it. It is "both sure and steadfast." In it there is life—life everlasting. It is a grand hope, a glorious hope; never ceasing to afford consolation and refreshment. It is not exhaustive of interest, but a perpetual fountain of joy. It stands a tower of glory amid Bible topics and promises, itself the best and fairest of promises.

This hope of flying away at death beyond [illegible] ular it may be, is a false hope. I had rather have a genuine Bible hope, if unpopular, than to have a spurious unscriptural hope, be it ever so popular. O to have a hope in the return of the Life-giver! When he comes the saints may expect life eternal, life lasting, perfected. We shall live, WE OURSELVES, all there is of us. Blessed hope! glorious expectation! Christ coming, to raise the dead and give life to his people!

And the time is drawing near
For our blessed Lord t' appear;
Saints, lift up your heads, do not fear,
Eternal life will soon be here.

Bless the Lord, my brother, sister,
Our mourning days will then be past,
We shall see our dearest Master,
And live and reign with him at last.

This is the day told of by the patriarchs, prophets and apostles; the day long looked for by the saints of all ages. When this day is ushered in, pain and sorrow will have ended. None there will say, "I am sick." Perfect health will then obtain and be enjoyed by all who enter through the gates into the city—that wonderful city of God—for there the "tree of life" will be, bearing "twelve manner of fruits, and it shall be for the healing of the nations." No death there, no devil. O glorious clime! I long to share it with all the people of the Most High,—the "rest that remaineth."

FALSE HUMILITY.

What we think is humility, is, after all, frequently only pride turned wrong side out. You say, "I believe in Christ, but I am so unworthy, that I do not dare to believe that I am a saved man." Unworthy? Most assuredly you are. And if you live to be the veriest saint, you will be so still. And that is the reason why God has chosen to save you by One who is worthy. It is not a question of what you deserve, but what Christ deserves. And for you to refuse to take the place which God assigns you in redemption, because of a sense of unfitness, that is not humility, but unbelief. It is putting self in the place of the cross. And that is always to set aside Christ. I care not whether it be a proud self or an humble self; a self-righteous self, or a self-condemning self; the moment you put it in the way of the cross, you throw the atonement into eclipse, and Christ is made of no effect to you.

It is a fact that we are slow to comprehend that the Gospel is designed and just fitted to meet men at the lowest point of their moral degeneracy. It names no degree of improvement that we must attain before it can help us. It prescribes no dispensation of self-preparation; it has no betterment act which must be enforced, in order to get us ready for calling on Jesus. It stipulates to take men at their best. And it matters little which. It has to do the same work for both. It costs the government just as much to uniform a well-dressed recruit as it does a ragged one. In either case the recruit must put off his citizen's dress and put on the army suit. And so it is not worth while for a volunteer to spend his labor and pains to get a new suit to enlist in. There is likewise no necessity for a sinner's waiting to get a better moral garb; a more respectable wardrobe of frames and feelings, before he may come to Christ. For in any event he must put off the old man with his dress, and put on the Lord Jesus Christ, who of God is made unto him wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.—Selected.

"JESUS WEPT."

BY MRS. J. E. ROAD.

In the life of Jesus we read of but two weepings. Twice the Son of God shed tears, but in neither case were they shed for himself. Not in Gethsemane, not on the cross did Jesus weep, but for our sakes he wept. The one weeping was for human guilt, the other was for human sorrow. When he drew near Jerusalem where his precious blood was about to be shed, he wept over the city. This marks his divine compassion for that city in its sins, and for the whole world. How incomprehensible is his love and sympathy as exhibited toward fallen man! He speaks forth the anguish of his heart in his memorable lamentations over that doomed city: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not."

A day or two before Jesus had wept over her, now he sighed and groaned as in anticipation he beheld her who had been the "joy of the whole earth," soon to be shattered and ruined, and abandoned to the spoil and the robbers.

"Enthroned on her hills sits Jerusalem yet,
But with dust on her forehead and chains on her feet,
For the crown of her pride to the mocker hath gone,
And the holy Shechina is dark where it shone."

O Jerusalem, how has thy glory departed! Now thou art reaping the fruits of disobedience in the rejection of thy King, whose love for thee caused bitter tears to flow "from eyes unused to weep." How sacred those tears, shed not only for the sins of that proud city but for the sins of the whole world. He felt for the woes of mankind. His compassion for sinners, as manifested in his tears shed over Jerusalem, is a link in the chain by which we are saved. His love for us as sinners shows that he is great and good. His weeping with and over us shows that his goodness and greatness is within our reach.

Oh, who can witness all the manifestations of a Savior's love, as bestowed upon us, and not feel that language is too weak to express our gratitude? He left the shining courts of heaven, and came down to this sinful world to suffer, weep and die, to gain for us an admittance into the blissful realms where there is no more sin nor sorrow, no more weeping nor dying, "for the former things shall have passed away."

Jesus wept also at the grave of Lazarus. He mingled his tears with those of the bereaved sisters who were mourning the death of a beloved brother. This marks his sympathy with the suffering of all ages. A loved friend and disciple of his had fallen. The sisters and Jewish friends were weeping, and would not be comforted. Jesus came in their midst, saw their tears, heard their lamentations, groaned in spirit and became troubled. They led him to Lazarus' resting place, and the sight of his eyes affected his heart and "he wept." "Then said the Jews, behold how he loved him." His was a love without dissimulation. Those tears were indicative of his particular love for Lazarus, also a tender sympathy with his afflicted friends. Jesus himself was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, and he knew full well how to sympathize with those sorrow-stricken ones. We do not read that he ever laughed, but he groaned, he was troubled, he wept. How solemn and impressive the scene. The Son of God in tears!

"Jesus wept." He at whose advent all heaven was moved, while upon the night air rang out the joyful acclamations of the herald angels, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will to men." He wept! at whose death the pillars of the earth were shaken, and the sun refused to give her light. The sweet anthems of heaven ceased, while angels looked down on the wondrous exhibition. And when again the choral symphonies pealed along the golden streets and around the throne of God, methinks the melodies were sweeter and the emotions of the angelic host higher in their fulness of love on account of beholding the "Son of God in tears."

There is a sacredness in tears, also something divine than all are the blest tears which our Savior shed. Methinks I see them now bedimming his lustrous eyes as he gazes on that mournful group, and then upon the new made grave of his loved friend. Ah! those sacred tears that coursed his cheek were like the workings of his miraculous power, so many silent yet powerful witnesses, incontestibly proving that he was from heaven, and divine. How full of instruction is this thrilling record of the past! The griefs of the sons and daughters of men are fitly represented in the tears of the two sisters and their friends. What an emblem of this vale of tears!

Now, as then, the dead are everywhere, and the "mourners go about the streets." The enemy death o'ershadows the household and makes a fatal thrust at the heart of a loved one. We have no power to stay his hand and must submit. Tears may ease the burdened heart, and the sympathy of kind friends do much to assuage our grief, but nothing can bind up the broken spirit like the words and sympathy of Jesus. How blessed then, to trust him who is ever ready to succor the tried and suffering ones of earth, who could weep for humanity's sake, and who can at all times be "touched with the feeling of our infirmities."

Happy are they who put their trust in this blessed Jesus. He will be to them in all life's trials like the "shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

RESURRECTION AND RESTITUTION.

These subjects are directly connected in the divine plan of salvation, and should ever be kept on the foreground of faith and hope. We believe that Divine Revelation and true science agree in their testimony upon the subjects. Every part of this fallen world, animate and inanimate, give signs of being in an abnormal state, manifesting a desire and tendency to change, as if a higher and more permanent condition was lost and may everywhere manifests symptoms of disease, as if under the influence of potent forces tending to the dissolution of its combined elements and the destruction of its animal and vegetable life. The whole earthly system is like the human body with deadly poison infused, which makes every nerve twinge and every limb convulse. The earth and all things, having earthly life, travail in pain for the birth of a new earth and heavens, where all life will be blissful and eternal.

The celebrated Joseph Cook has said some interesting things upon these subjects, although he has connected some ideas which we think are not quite in harmony with the Scriptures. On the resurrection he says:

"The souls of the departed will be clothed with glorified bodies. There will be brought to the soul, out of the transfigured world, materials analogous to the substance of its previous body, and upon these materials the soul will then impress the traits of its germinate body, so as thus to attain to full objective expression. In the case of those still living at the second coming of Christ, the process will be that of a simple transformation. Thus, even as Christ arose with the buried body, so such persons will then appear in the same body which was laid in the grave. And this identity holds of the whole essence of the body, both its primary features and form, and also its substance.

Upon the subject of the renewal or restitution of the earth he quotes as expressing his own sentiments the great German scholar, Schoberlein, who says:

"Christ, by the spiritualization of his body, as taken out of the bosom of nature, has already consecrated nature itself to an ultimate transfiguration. On the basis of this beginning, therefore, will the Holy Ghost bring forth out of the bosom of the perishing world a new world—not another, but the same world in a transfigured form, even as the raised body of Christ was not another, but the same, in a transfigured condition. . . And nature, as thus renewed, will exist under the antithesis of heaven and earth, a 'new heaven and a new earth.' And the whole circle of natural objects will, also, come forth from death as integral parts of the new eternal state of things.

"Do you say this is not definite enough, and do you wish more perfect information concerning the transfiguring of forms of life not human? In a passage which I have before me, Schoberlein asserts, . . .

"As with nature in general, so with natural objects in particular. There will be nothing desert or waste; but the Divine breath will pervade all things. Vegetation will exist in ideal beauty. Greed and hostility will find no place in the animate realm; the wolf will 'lie down with the lamb' in unbroken peace. In general all primitive forms of existence will reappear in ideal perfection. Man will enjoy nature through all of his senses. The paradise that existed before will be restored after redemption. We are sown in weakness, but we rise in power."

In speaking of the associated condition of the resurrected saints in the new earth, he says:

"Even as the church of Christ here forms but one body with many members, thus, also, hereafter saved humanity will form but one organic body, whereof we shall all be members, each in his place. And of this organic whole, the head, the focal point, the sun, will be Christ himself. As our souls will eternally live of his life, so our bodies will eternally shine in the radiance of his glorified body.

"Our bodies are not mere caducous husks, to be thrown off when the soul is ripe. But nature and the kingdom of God, the rational soul and the human body, belong normally and essentially together. When the one is transfigured, the other is transfigured. And when, at the goal of moral development, they are risen to integral unity, then they persist, through eternity, as intimately united as form and substance, light and color."

We are very glad, in these days of scepticism, to have a few men who exercise a controlling influence over the public faith, and hope, express confidence in the final accomplishment of all God has promised to do for our world and his people. The literal resurrection of the body out of the grave is a glorious Bible doctrine, and should be defended by every lover of Christ and his Gospel. The final dissolving, cleansing, reorganizing and glorifying of our earth from the pollution and curse of sin, is another fundamental truth of the Scriptures, which should always be kept on the foreground of all gospel teaching.

Wherever these truths are kept distinctly before the mind, and impress the heart, mystical interpretations and spiritualism is excluded. Our fathers firmly believed them, and taught them without fear of contradiction; but the present generation has widely departed from the old paths, into the dark regions of human speculation. There is a sad lack of confidence in God that he can and will do all that he has promised in his Word. A multitude of modern religious teachers first determine in their minds what God can and will do, and then so mystify and change the Word as to make it prove their standard to be correct. This gives us a human standard for revealed truth, by changing God's standard, so that it may harmonize with man's standard. This is like merchants changing government weights and measures to suit their interests, and then prove their own right by their agreeing with those they had changed.

The doctrine of the resurrection of the organic bodies of men out of their graves is in harmony with God's standard of truth, as it reads, and every theory which denies such a resurrection rests upon interpretations of those passages made by changing them from their legitimate meaning. A doctrine that cannot be proven by direct passages literally interpreted should be held in great doubt, or entirely rejected.

When the perfect Teacher sent from God says "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth," (John 5: 28) we should BELIEVE that "all that are in the GRAVES shall hear his voice and come forth." If this passage is not to be literally interpreted we know of no rule by which we can prove that any passage be so understood. If the words do not mean what they legitimately signify, who can tell us what they do mean? and if we are told, we get only human authority for the meaning, and no divine proof unless the terms are metaphorically used, which must be shown from the text and its parallels.

Christ did many miraculous things at his first advent to show what things he could and would do at his second advent. He healed all sicknesses, opened blind eyes, controlled the winds and waves, and made the dead relive, and called them forth out of their graves, thus showing his power and purpose to control and change earthly elements and beings at the restitution of all [illegible] when he says, "Verily, verily I say unto you, The hour [period] is coming and now is"—one period "is coming" and the other "now is"—"when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." John 5: 25. The hour that he said "now is" was at the first advent, and that which was "coming," but had not then come, will be at the second advent; for it is when the Lord descends from heaven that the dead are to rise first. The meaning of the words "all that are in the graves shall hear and shall come forth" were shown by their fulfilment at the first advent.

It was said of Lazarus' resurrection, "He [Christ] cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth! and he that was dead came forth." In this wonderful transaction we get positive proof of what Christ meant by his promise that the dead should "hear and come forth," and also a direct application of the words he used. The word dead means the condition Lazarus was in when Jesus went to Bethany. The word grave means the place where Lazarus was when dead. The word voice means the articulation of words by Jesus. To hear means to identify or understand the meaning of sounds. To "come forth" means to move out of the grave; to rise up from the position of the dead, as Lazarus did. We know that Inspiration uses them in these senses, and we should fear that we were wickedly wresting the Scriptures to make them mean one thing in one passage and another thing in another passage in the context.

J. C.

A WRITER in the Congregationalist says: "We are amazed that, in these days of imposters, any church should employ as its pastor and spiritual teacher, a minister whose character and record are not first ascertained beyond question. And the more eloquent and fascinating such a one may be, the greater the danger."

The above caution is important to all churches, and especially so to our people. We are not thoroughly organized as many are, and our churches have habituated themselves to receiving anybody who comes to them with the profession of being a preacher, without enquiring after his ministerial connections or his ordination credentials. If he is eloquent, he is accepted without hesitation, and old and faithful servants, who have fought the battles, are invited to vacate the highest seats to give place to the eloquent stranger. If he should be destitute of oratory and sound gospel arguments, but can appeal to the sympathies of the tender-hearted by a plaintive tone, or a representation of persecution or poverty, or can repeat some exciting anecdotes, his name will at once be written on the calander of the highest order of saints.

Many of these men are wolves in sheep's clothing, and when the veil is pierced by the penetrating eye of some of the more discreet members, and they attempt to rid the flock of the wolf, then those who had received him into full fellowship, without any knowledge of his former or private life, but only the charm of his tongue, will feel under the most sacred obligation to defend him even to the division and destruction of the once holy and happy church.

We have witnessed these things so many times in the last forty years, that our heart is pained with the sickening spectacle. We are more subject to these God-dishonoring experiences than many people, because we have no doors nor locks to keep out such vile intruders. The trouble is, our churches let everybody into their slips and pulpits, and bid them God-speed, if they can pronounce some shibboleth with a golden tongue, even if their hearts are as corrupt and black as the historic pit. Our exhortation to the churches is, Trust no one as a gospel teacher or leader until you get some satisfactory proof that he has a good report of christian character at home and is good at heart and sound in the faith.

SPECIAL MEETINGS.

Our church at Chelsea, Mass., has held a series of meetings for the last three weeks, which have been attended by God's blessing in strengthening the faith of the brethren, increasing their spirituality, and renewing their consecration to God. A n[illegible] backsliders have been reclaimed, an[illegible] have been converted. The meet[illegible] been very harmonious, sweet and powerful. The spirit of conviction has evidently been resting on the people and drawing many into the meetings, where deep solemnity and a thorough work of grace has been manifested. Bro. Leslie was with us at the commencement of the meetings and rendered efficient aid. The interest still continues, and we earnestly pray that many more may be prepared for acquittal at the approaching judgment.—ED.

A DELAY.

The second part of Bro. Cunningham's article on the "Midnight Cry" will be delayed one week on account of one page of the manuscript being lost.—ED.

CORRECTION.—In Bro. Cunningham's article of March 6th, second column, thirteenth line from the bottom, for "natural" read unnatural.

PROPHETIC NEWS.

The news columns of our dailies are filled with startling items, in perfect harmony with the pre-statement of the prophet, who said, "I [God] will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke." Joel 2: 30. The news writers of these days are constantly recording phenomenal appearances, movements and changes among the planets and in our atmosphere, producing threatening developments in the war of elements, showing a perturbed state and revolutionary condition of all things. In the social world we get but little news of anything but strife and preparations for the shedding of "blood," under the sanction of law and in defiance of law. "Fires" and dark "pillars of smoke" kindled by the incendiary's torch are every day being chronicled.

As a sample of this department of news we give the most important of fires received in the last two days: At Holyoke, Mass., loss $12,000; at Plymouth, N. H., loss $15,000; at Hot Springs, Ark., loss $300,000; at Spartansburg, Penn., loss $100,000; at Brockton, Mass., loss $150,000; at Panama loss $500,000; at Plainfield, N. J., loss $20,000. This is truly a sad picture of fire and pillars of smoke, when we consider that nearly all of them are reported as being incendiary, indicating a fearful increase of the moral turpitude of the age. The same kind of wickedness which lights these fires uses the murderer's knife and drives the nations to war. The earth is deluged with wickedness, and the manifestations of it are foretold signs that the day of the Lord is at hand, when the fires of his judgment shall cleanse the earth of its sinful pollutions.

THE INCREASE OF CRIME.—No. 5.

D. T. TAYLOR.

"Make a chain, for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence."—EZEK. 7: 23.

UNITED STATES. "Crime increases faster than population." So wrote the officers of the New York Prison Association in their Address to the electors of the State in December, 1876. Who can doubt it? In my last article monstrous criminals were cited, and the monstrosity of crime exhibited. Out from a mass of irrefutable testimony, I now select other figures, facts and data, a perusal of which obliterates all doubt respecting the alarming increase of crime.

Our readers have not forgotten how ten men were shot down in cold blood on July 13, 1876, in Newark in less than thirty minutes. True, justice speedily avenged this foul deed. But the murder of Judge Chisholm in Mississippi is not avenged; instead, a town, a county, a State, a whole community sanctioned the bloody act. If one says this was a political crime, I answer, the divine code makes no difference; it was out-and-out murder. Look again at the Bulliver-Russell feud in Williamson Co., Ill., where in a population of only 12,000, there were twenty-seven murdered in but two years—1873, '4, '5—of whom no less than sixteen of the victims were butchered in the space of eighteen months. And remember that this wholesale slaughter of ten in one place and twenty-seven in another was not in Bulgaria, but in New Jersey and Illinois!—Toronto Globe, Aug. 9th, 1875.

I have shown England to be bad enough, when in one day (Jan. 1—8), in 1874, four men were hung for the crime of murder in that country. The Christian World styled the hanging "an unusual occurrence." But in Christian (?) America six men were hung in a row for murder, in one day. The day was Sept. 5, 1875; the place Fort Smith, Ark. And last year, as previously shown, eleven murderers were hung in one day in Pennsylvania. The gallows had its fill.

"Ten cold-blooded murders have occurred in Iowa since the abolition of capital punishment," said the journals in Jan., 1873. I know not the time it took to perpetrate these ten murders, but Judge Maxwell in his address to the Grand Jury of Polk Co., at Des Moines, in the fall of the succeeding year said: "During the twenty years I have lived in Iowa I have never known a time when the number and atrocity of capital crimes were so alarming. With all our watchfulness the disposition to commit crime appears to be greater than at any time during the past ten years. We do not know how many women and children have been killed in Des Moines; we only know that some of us have not been killed." Certainly such a witness is well qualified to testify of the increase of crime.

Liquor breeds crime. But even prohibition does not arrest murder. Maine erased capital punishment from her statutes March 24, 1876, and during the year that followed there were ten murders committed in the State where only two murderers were executed during the year preceding. So it seems that the dreadful gallows must still be hung up before men's eyes to deter them from blood; but even with it in full sight, the red hand is never stayed. The State of Maine is thrifty and temperate. The open sale of liquor does not invite to crime. Nevertheless, "Toby Candor's" letter from the State capital in 1873, under the head of "The Carnival of Crime," announced that eleven convicts for murder were incarcerated in the [illegible] Prison, along with four others who [illegible]mitted assault with intent to kill, [illegible] two more who were guilty of manslaughter. And he adds: "The frightful increase of crime in this State is attracting special attention; it is a subject of general conversation" (Boston Journal, July 19th). It is thus seen that even the prohibition of poisonous beverages fails to abolish the age of murder.

Is any other State in our boasted Union freer of bloodshed? Nay, verily. In 1871 the New York Evening Post declared Connecticut "to ha[illegible] a sort of murder-[illegible]ders and a case of poisoning was [illegible] not a single case was the murderer discovered. All was wrapped in mystery; no one was hung."

On April 12th, 1876, the convicts of Illinois State Prison numbered 1505. "It was scarcely expected that it would ever reach that figure. It will require another prison for the State if crime continues to increase as it has for the past six months." Thus read the telegram from Joliet to the New York Witness.

Chicago's murders for 1875 were 22, but for 1876 there were 31; an increase of full thirty per cent. in a single year. San Francisco had in the space of twenty-two years ending 1873 no less than 257 murders; only 187 of these were arrested, and of these but thirteen died on the gallows. In 1861 there were ten murders, in 1869 there were twenty-one murders, and in 1872 there were twenty-seven murders. "A dismal record" truly," as the Alta California called it. Yes, and a steady increase of crime.

New York City is an ocean of sin and crime, ever deepening, ever widening. Her cases of self-murder in 1871 were 108; in 1876 they rose to 150, an increase of some thirty per cent. in that five years. In 1870 she had fifty-seven cases of homicide, in 1872 there were sixty-three cases, while in but six months of the year 1876 she had twelve homicides, ninety-five murders, and twenty-four murderous attempts. Of the 281 homicides in five years, 1870–75, there were only thirty-one convictions. Judge E. D. Culver says that in three years, 1875, 1876, 1877, New York had 161 murders; among these, twelve wives killed by their drunken husbands, some of them thrown on red-hot stoves, and the brains of others beaten out—all mainly through rum. Yes, spell red rum backwards and behold its dreadful fruit!

How about Utah? Why, the Salt Lake Tribune estimates that since its settlement over 600 murders have been committed by order of the Mormon leaders. Only 600—no more. And Tennessee? She has sixty murderers at large, says the Witness (N. Y.) of Aug. 30, 1877. Only sixty unhung villains with hands red with blood, the blood of their fellows!

What about New York? She has an army of men and women within prison walls. They number nearly 18,000. Seventy per cent. are under thirty years of age. Every prison in the great State is overcrowded, every penitentiary full. "Crime is alarmingly on the increase in this State; there is a frightful increase of crime," writes the editor of the Plattsburgh Sentinel. Scores and hundreds of the convicts were slayers of men, women or children. These figures are for 1877, while State Reports show that during nine years from 1830 to 1838 inclusive there were less than three convictions per annum for murder. "Since then," said Governor Dix, who gave these facts in his Annual Message Jan. 7, 1873, "the number of cases in which life is taken has accumulated with fearful rapidity." And he again refers to "the alarming increase in frequency of the CRIME OF MURDER."

And New Hampshire? I reply,—In 1812 she had one convict in her State Prison; in 1817 she had 59 convicts; in 1843, 99; in 1852, 111; in 1861, 119; in 1875, 127; in 1876, 191; and in 1877, 212, the largest number in a single year. The prison is gorged with criminals. In the Boston Journal of Nov. 8, 1877, a Concord correspondent said there was a fearful increase of crime and vagrancy all over the State. "The rolls at the State Prison," he adds, "are incontestible proof of the alarming increase of crime. The number of convicts in that institution is almost double the average that were there from 18[illegible] to 1875."

And Massachusetts? A large increase in the number of prisoners in all the State Prisons is the Report of the Commissioner of Prisons made last January. The number was nearly thirty-three per cent. larger than for the previous year. Tramps and vagrants had largely increased. Minor offences had in three years greatly increased. In a single year there had been 246,599 prisoners. There was nearly thirty-three per cent. more than during 1876, and over two hundred per cent. more than during 1875. Compare the above with twenty years ago (1858), when the total prisoners in all the year was 13,466. The increase of convicts in twenty years is shown to be seventeen hundred per cent! If I am wrong in these figures will some one correct me?

The Independent Defender of San Francisco is responsible for the statement that suicides in our country increased one hundred per cent. from 1850 to 1860, and two hundred per cent. from 1860 to 1870; also that in 1850 there was one murder for every 102,167 persons. In 1860 there was one for every [illegible] persons; in 1873 one for every 18,745 persons! Also that the number of murders has quadrupled in ten years! Study these facts and figures, dear reader. Are they not frightful? Our country, what is it coming to? God's indignation will surely find out the sins of this nation. "The land is full of bloody crimes," and it is a marvel that the uplifted thunderbolts are not launched from the hand of Omnipotence.

THE U. States within the last ten years have sold $48,000,000 worth of arms and munitions of war to Europe.

THE PEACE AND SAFETY CRY.

"For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape."—1 THESS. 5: 3.

After the very much that has been written and spoken concerning this subject it is not now easy to determine just what the "peace and safety cry" is?

Is it political, following the cessation of military hostilities? Is it religious, relating to the doctrinal and spiritual conditions of Christendom? Is it not rather a feeling of relief and jubilation consequent upon an apparent failure of the evidences and indications that the "day of the Lord is at hand?" And this feeling and sentiment making haste to voice itself from the pulpit, through the press, in the marts of commerce, at the hearth-stone, and from lip to lip, everywhere; until along all the arteries of society runs and rings the cry, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

But of one thing we are quite sure: The coming of the Lord will occur under the peace and safety cry. We have not for a long time believed that Christ would appear in the midst of the clash of arms, when all the world is watching, with intense anxiety and alarm, the progress of a bloody struggle of great nations; and the "virgins" marking with thrilling concern each varying phase of the terrible conflict as likely to evolve the scenes of the last judgment; but rather when general quiet and universal apathy prevail in relation to the "end of all things."

For some time past the cry on every hand has been war, WAR. But the text affirms that when the Master comes the cry shall be peace, PEACE—"peace and safety." The virgins are not to be on a quiver of expectation and intense watching when the midnight cry is made, but all asleep.

"While the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

Does this lessen the significance of the present war? No, it greatly intensifies its meaning and solemnity. We are just entering into a period of trial such as we have never experienced. Of this we will speak next time.

DARK CLOUDS.

Dark clouds hang over this planet at the present time, threatening a storm of no ordinary character. This remark applies equally to the political, financial, commercial, social and religious aspect. Those noted for far-seeing can descry no sure sign of anything better. All proposed plans for improving society and the tone of business operations only seem to add a sinking weight, and leave a darker prospect for coming events. One thing is certain, all attempted reforms in which Christ is not the centre, will prove to be failures; but it is well known that he is left out of most of the proposed improvements of the day. His power is not sought, but only human aid. As well might dirty clothes attempt to wash themselves, as for human nature to purify itself without the aid of the divine. The true purifying process is by faith in the blood of the crucified Lamb of God, that died on the cross of Calvary.

A San Francisco correspondent writes: "Every thing in California at the present time is unsettled. The so-called working men have their meetings openly, and threaten to burn San Francisco, and hang capitalists who control great corporations, such as the Central Pacific R. R. Co., and others; and I believe this city is liable to be the scene of bloodshed and riot any day."

The same writer says: "I learn of no revivals in the city this winter." He says it is estimated that there are thirty thousand men out of employment in San Francisco.

Thus the waves of distress keep rolling in upon this wicked generation. They are but the precursors of the near approach of our coming King of kings. Dear reader are you ready to meet him at any moment?

WILMINGTON.

The good work in Wilmington is still going on. Sinners are coming to Christ, and the church is growing rapidly. A large number have decided to consecrate all to the Lord. Several have received the gift of the Spirit, and, as the result, are filled with perfect love and peace. They testify that their present comfort and rest in Jesus far surpasses anything before enjoyed. They can truly say, "The half was never told." They wonder why they staid away so long from the all-healing stream. At times before, they had freshets of peace, but now it flows steadily like a deep river. Doubts and fears are all gone; impatience, fretfulness, and worrying are taken away, and they feel all ready to welcome the Prince of peace. The writer left this Monday morning, March 4th, for Brooklyn, but Bro. Kramer will continue the meetings every evening during the week. Members of various churches attend the meeting and are much pleased with what they see and hear. Much prejudice has been removed, and many see that we can have no immortality out of Christ, and that consequently the wicked must all be destroyed; and thus sin and misery will come to a perpetual end. So let it be. This puts the character of our Lord in a proper light, in harmony with justice, love and mercy, and leaves no one any room to find fault with his government. Bro. Kramer has received much cool treatment from his ministerial brethren for preaching these things, but he bears it all with christian patience. Doubtless he will soon have others by his side to help bear reproach for the sake of Christ and his Word. M. G.

LIGHT ADVANCING.

The time has come when many begin to see that some of their theological views are based on the opinions of men, instead of a "thus saith the Lord." This fact is leading them to examine the reasons of their hope. Among the points that have now come into much prominence, is the doctrine of future punishment. The belief in eternal misery is founded largely on the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. When they come to look in the Bible for proof that man in this life has any immortal nature, they cannot find such a thing taught by a single writer in the sacred Scriptures. When this is seen, they are then prepared to receive the harmonious teaching of the Bible on the subject of the future punishment of the wicked; which is, that they shall die the "second death," and never live again.

When in New York, a few days since, it was my privilege to have an interview with an able, devoted, and well-known pastor in that city, who has recently become settled in the belief that the Lord means what he says, when he declares he will preserve the righteous, but all the wicked will he destroy. Ps. 145: 20. This minister has preached plainly on the subject, and seen good fruits as the result. He says there are many others who are believing the same things, who have not yet declared their faith publicly. A very little pressure will bring them to the front. May the Lord bless them and give them much courage to declare the whole truth. M. G.

A DARK LOOK.

The tidal wave of distress continues to dash on the nations with increased fury. The outlook is a gloomy one. Various means and measures have been proposed and adopted to bring relief, but none comes. Just at the time when hope began to dawn, a higher wave of distress comes sweeping over them, leaving them prostrate and helpless, with no prospect of any permanent improvement. The following shows the condition of the Jews in the Holy Land:

SUFFERING IN PALESTINE.—It is said that the Jews in the Holy Land are reduced to a state bordering on starvation. Under the most favorable circumstances the Jews of Palestine can only make a precarious living. Intense misery now exists in Jerusalem, Tiberias, Safed and other localities, owing to various causes, prominent among which is the drain which the war has made in money, men and provisions on every portion of the Ottoman dominions. The war has produced a stagnation of trade, and the long continued drouth has raised the necessaries of life to famine prices. Turkish rule has reduced Palestine to a wretched condition. The Southern part of it is desolated by marauding bands of Arabs; there is no safety outside the large towns; the valley of the Jordan is an uninhabited waste; many of the streams have dried up in consequence of the cutting down of the forest; most of the reservoirs constructed by Solomon and the Hebrew kings have from neglect become useless, and this in a country which, without irrigation, becomes dry and withers up. Sir Moses Montefiore has made an appeal to his fellow-countrymen in behalf of his suffering race in Palestine. Christian governments should also use their influence with the Sultan to check the increasing depopulation and ruining of a land which ought to be dear to all Christians and Hebrews, and even Moslems, from its sacred associations.

It is certain the Mohammedan power has been treading down Jerusalem for about 1260 years. It is also generally conceded that its supremacy is near its end; but Jerusalem is to be trodden under foot till the close of the Gentile times. M. G.

THOSE who write to me, will please address me at Boston, as usual, and their letters will be forwarded to me immediately. Please say Private on the envelope. M. G.

GOD'S TRUTH.

MRS. M. A. BROWER.

This winter, as I have been watching the drift of the current on the question of future punishment, agitated by Plymouth pulpit, I have thought to myself, how men will grasp at anything coming from a prominent quarter of the world, and give it their respect and attention; but let a meek, humble follower of Jesus come along advocating piercing burning truths that cannot be gainsayed, and it is next to impossible to get any hold on the minds of the people.

The fact is, we are a nation of hero worshipers. It is these acknowledged heroes the people unconsciously worship, instead of absolute, intrinsic truth; but let one of them advocate an idea out of the usual order of things, and it flashes over the land with lightning speed, meeting with attention and respect from the press, pulpit, and social circle,—the same truths that have been pressed upon the people by a less favored class, in the world's estimation, unceasingly during a part of this century with comparatively little effect. Although there has been a great work done by the good old veterans of our cause, and many have been led from the bonds of error (myself among them), yet how little has been done in comparison to what might have been, had these truths met with but half the consideration that worldly things receive and that accepted religious opinions have.

I do praise the Lord continually that he has ever brought me into the light, and my aim and purpose above everything else is to serve him all the rest of my days. I believe we should keep the Savior's commands to the letter, after we have been chosen heirs of salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth. Our daily test of acceptance should be, Are we living in strict obedience to the commands of Him who hath chosen us and has saved us by his blood.

Brownville, Neb., Feb. 22nd, 1878.

WHO WAS RESPONSIBLE?

Some time ago the following facts occurred. A young man of excellent character came to one of our cities seeking a situation. His rural home had its beneficent effect upon his views of life and duty. He had from childhood been a member of the church and an attendant at Sabbath school. He had grown up to manhood free from every vicious habit, and left his pure happy home, with the benedictions of parents and friends. He had a thirst for reading, and employed much of his leisure hours in perusing what he supposed were good books. They were however works of fiction. The first he found in his Sabbath-school library.

The taste for that kind of reading grew and strengthened, and each succeeding book was of a deeper tinge. On and on he went, and finally needed something rather stronger than reading to gratify his desire for the ideal. So he went to the theatre, and in his rapid downward career soon reached the mournful consequences of his estrangement. The barriers of virtue once broken down left him exposed, forsaken, and ultimately ruined. From the theatre to the saloon, and thence to the brothel, and soon to a drunkard's grave. He was murdered. Who was responsible for it all? The agents who furnished his mental aliment resulting in the vitiated taste, and the parties who furnished the means for carrying on the business, which led to the final issue, each had their share. Individuals and society must have a fearful reckoning.—Christian Standard.

A Critical Greek and English Concordance.

A PRICELESS BOOK FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament. Prepared by Charles F. Hudson, under the direction of H. L. Hastings, editor of The Christian. Revised and completed by Ezra Abbott, D.D. LL. D., of Harvard University. Pp. 532. This is the first Greek and English Concordance prepared and published in America and in some respects the most valuable ever published anywhere. It contains: 1 References to all places where every Greek word in the New Testament may be found,—four or five constantly recurring particles excepted. 2 All the English words and phrases by which these Greek words are rendered, both in the text and in the margin of the Authorized Version. 3. All the various readings derived from hundreds of ancient manuscripts, written before the discovery of printing, and embodied in the four best editions of the Greek New Testament,—those of Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles—to which are added the confirmatory readings of the very ancient, but recently discovered, Sinaitic Manuscript. 4. An Index of English words, by means of which persons entirely unacquainted with the Greek language can find the original for any English word in any passage, and can trace and ascertain its usage and the manner of its translation throughout the entire New Testament, and can also detect any various readings occurring in the four critical editions above named.

This is a work of intrinsic and standard value. It has already attained to a wide circulation. Many students of the Bible, who are unacquainted with the original, desire to know for themselves the exact meaning of important words in the sacred text. For this purpose this work is certainly among the best—perhaps the very best—at present available. Its price is so low as to place it within the reach of nearly all critical Bible readers. Price: Cloth $2.50; leather, $3.00, postpaid. Ten copies in cloth, postpaid, for $20.00. For sale at the Crisis Office. AGENT.

Bible Readings.

This is a new work just published, of real and very rare merit. It is designed to aid in the study of the Bible, and the development of personal piety, and Christian teaching and work. It is difficult to give any description of it which would do justice to its value. It is equally adapted to the learned and unlearned. All subjects have their proper place in its arrangement, the coming of the Lord not excepted. Among its many distinguished contributors are D. L. Moody and Miss Smiley. It is very cheap. We earnestly advise every lover and student of the Holy Word to secure it without delay. We have never seen (outside of the Bible) so much value in so small a compass. Price; paper covers 50 cts.; cloth 75 cts. postpaid. For sale at the Crisis Office. AGENT.

NEW TRACTS.

Misunderstood Passages of Scripture.

This is a Tract of 52 pages, and is taken from Prof. Ives' work, "Bible Doctrine of the Soul." It considers disputed passages of Scripture as follows: "The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus"—"Thief on the Cross"—"The Transfiguration"—"To Die is Gain"—"To Depart and be with Christ"—"Absent from the Body"—"Spirits in Prison," etc etc. It gives great light upon these points, and passages of Scripture. It should be circulated largely, and we hope our friends will do so. We put the price very low, so that all can have it. 7 cts. single; 65 cts per dozen; $5.00 per hundred postpaid, or $4.50 per hundred by express. AGENT.

Immortality Conditional.

A BIBLE VIEW.

BY C. M. WILLARD—A CONGREGATIONALIST.

This is a well written, able and important Tract of 16 pages. It brings out the truth of God in such a plain light that all must see that the position is Biblical. We hope our friends will order in large quantities, and circulate freely. Price 3 cts. single; 25 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred postpaid, or $1.25 per hundred by express.

Libraries.

We have made arrangements whereby we think we can furnish Sabbath Schools with good books for Libraries; and if any School wanting a Library, will write us giving a description, as near as they can of the number and kind of books wanted, we will do our best to give satisfaction. AGENT.

New Tract.

QUESTIONS ON THE COMING OF THE LORD.

This is a new Tract of four pages, by Geo. Tilley, Bristol R. I. It is a good Tract, and should be circulated extensively. Price 2 cents single; 10 cts. per dozen; or 60 cts. per hundred by mail, postpaid.

AGENT.

Smith's Bible Dictionary.

For preachers, and all religious teachers, next to a reliable Concordance, no other book is so helpful, and in fact so indispensable to a ready and right understanding of God's Word, as a good BIBLE DICTIONARY. A few years since Dr. Wm. Smith, of the University of London, prepared a complete Dictionary of the Bible, in three volumes, containing more than 3000 pages. This Dictionary is, almost, a library in itself; a condensation of an immense amount of historic and other matter, illustrating the Bible and Bible scenes, customs and manners, to an extent never before done. These three large volumes are now condensed into one volume, in a "new edition," containing, in its condensed form, nearly one thousand pages; beautifully illustrated by more than one hundred wood cuts.

It is now for sale at the Crisis Office, at the very low price of $3.50 postpaid. We are sure that if our people understood its value, hundreds of volumes would be purchased at once. AGENT.

New Hymn Book.

Our new Hymn Book is now ready. It is strongly bound in cloth, bevel edged, and the title, "Christian Hymns and Songs," in large gilt letters on the side and back. We purpose to sell it very low, so that all can have it. Cloth, bound as above described, 80 cts. single; postage 8 cts. $8.00 per dozen by express. Also, we have our new Hymns and Music bound as above, without No. 2 Gospel Hymns. Price 55 cents single, $5.00 per dozen. Also, we have all our new Hymns and Music bound in flexible covers, in nice style, separate from No 2 Gospel Hymns. Price 40 cts. single; postage 5 cts., or $4.25 per dozen by express. Also, we have a few bound in leather, with gilt edge, an extra nice book. Price $2.00. We have also bound Nos. 1 and 2 of Gospel Hymns with our new Hymn Book. Price $1.00 by mail, postage 10 cts; $10.00 per dozen by express. AGENT.

Commentaries.

We have now on hand JAMISON, FAUSSET and BROWN'S Commentary of the Old and New Testaments in two volumes. This is, we think, the best Commentary, as it is more in accordance with the literal Scripture rendering than any other work of this kind. We recommend it to all. Price $5.00 postpaid, for the two volumes. AGENT.

To Sabbath Schools.

We have now, and intend to keep on hand, a good assortment of Sabbath School Cards and will be glad to furnish all of our friends; and any kinds we may be out of we will get and forward at once. When you order, please give a description of Cards wanted.

AGENT.

"Curiosities of the Bible."

This book contains some 3000 Prize Questions, Enigmas, Acrostic Anagrams, Puzzles, etc. Every Sabbath School should have one, as it contains a great amount of very valuable information. Price $1.50. AGENT.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of Two Thousand Dollars for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Eld. C. E. Hurd.

To the Brn. and Sisters scattered abroad, Greeting:—A word from the seashore may interest you. We have passed two years in pastoral labor pleasantly, and, we think, profitably, with the church and people in Rye; and although we are unable to chronicle a single conversion (which thing we deeply regret), yet we can report progress. We have not only been able, by divine help, to hold in check the combined forces of the enemy, but we have assumed the aggressive and made signal advancement. A goodly number of our brethren and sisters have reached a point in their christian experiences, by living faith, grasping that essential keeping power whereby they rest continually in the blessed hope. Our church is free from all side issues and the many unwarranted doctrines that have made such fearful strides by invasion in our churches. Therefore it is clean from the pollution consequent upon such evils; for which we thank God.

We have prayer-meetings on Tuesday and Friday evenings (the latter having been added the past year), and they are generally quite well attended, and are interesting and profitable. Some special interest has been felt; at times quite an interest among the young people. Some have made a start to seek the Lord; others have taken some steps to return from their backslidings; and we did cherish a hope that the bright cloud of sovereign mercy would rest on us, and some at least be safely gathered to the fold of Christ; but in this we have been disappointed hitherto.

And shall we pause here and ask, Why such general results? We frequently see unmistakable tokens of reformation,—the church marshaling, the way nearly clear, the rumbling of the chariot wheels obviously heard, like a cloud rising indicating abundance of rain; we look again, and it begins to recede and finally disappears and no rain. Perhaps we can partially answer this question. First, by words of Inspiration, as in Matt. 13: 3–8. The seed is sown; and some "fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up. Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth, and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth; and when the sun was up, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away. And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up, and choked them. But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit." There are so many things to pre-occupy the mind.

Again, there is such a general manifestation of pleasure-loving religion. Is it any wonder that the tide of pure, devout piety is tending rapidly downward, when pulpits unqualifiedly endorse church fairs, levees, the wheel of fortune, fish-ponds, the post-office containing fictitious, immoral literature; grab-bags, guess and ring cakes, silver pitchers, etc.?

A church fair was held in our town. A young man of moral habits came out from it saying, The ball-room is respectable to it. And do we continue to ask why sinners are not converted to God now, as formerly? The reasons are obvious. The wheels are clogged, the cable is severed, the stream is polluted, the church is infected with disease, is wasting, becoming impotent. No wonder her children are thus feeble and fall out by the way to perish by the destroyer. But I forbear, though my heart is full, and will resume my report.

Our public services are well sustained, both in point of numbers and financially. We have as good a chapel as I have seen in the State. At the Annual Meeting of the society, a proposition was made by one of its members to paint it (stating a liberal contribution), the rest fully concurring therein; and the house is now painted, we not having appealed to any other than their own resources to pay the bill.

Permit me to state here, however, that Mr. Lougee, proprietor of the popular Sea View House at the beach, voluntarily furnished material and painted one broad side of the house. Another man (not a christian) stood waiting a chance to lend a helping hand, but the painters were so many that he contented himself with the promise that he should have a chance the next coating. Also Mr. Chesley (the trader) contributed liberally to the enterprise. Thus you see how signally God favors a church having the element of brotherly love and christian harmony, which does not unlawfully appeal to the adversary and the world for support.

Having received a repeated call by the church to continue my present relation with them, and having prayerfully sought for the path of duty, we think to remain, and by the blessing of God hold the fort another year, should time continue. My present convictions are, however, to extend my labor, having received repeated calls to do so. Therefore we open our doors to all of our ministering brethren, who have no hobbies to ride or false doctrines to promulgate, and invite them to come over and help us, either by appointment or exchange, as the Lord shall direct. Bro. J. W. White has preached to us the first Sunday in each month, agreeable to pre-arrangement, and will continue to do so. Other brethren have labored some with us to general acceptance and profit, we trust. At the request of the church in Hampton, we have supplied their pulpit the first Sunday in each month with few exceptions. We expect to continue as long as it seems duty to do so. Pray for us.

Rye, N. H., Jan. 2nd, 1878.

From Bro. D. Crouch.

Bro. Couch:—I have often thought I would write some for the Crisis, but I see so many able and valuable articles from abler pens and other interesting matter in each number, I have hesitated, being uncertain if I could add anything to its interest. Yet, all points considered, I cannot help commending it as the best medium we have of spreading light and warning on the momentous issues before us, not detracting from the value of others that are devoted to the closing scenes of earth.

The Crisis has come to me regularly from the fall of '67, and from every number I have derived some individual benefit; and by some numbers been greatly benefitted, edified and strengthened. The talent and ability with which it is made up are a guarantee of its continued usefulness. At present I do not see how it could be much improved as an "alarm-bell" in these degenerate and "perilous times."

The interest in this city is alive yet, though we have no Advent meetings except occasionally and among colored people. But the ominous aspect of all nations and governments and every-day occurrences are so fearful, that many are alarmed to believe that the end may be near, and that we may be right in our view of it. After reading, I give the most of them to those who have never had any Advent papers, and they are silently doing good work. One man, to whom I gave a Crisis five years ago, reckless at the time, recently told me it was the means of his conversion—genuine, and not superficial. If I had funds I would scatter tracts and papers by the million.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb., 1878.

From Bro. Otis King.

Dear Editor:—I will again pen a few lines for your blessed paper, the Crisis, for I always get refreshed by the many good things it contains for our spiritual good. Oh, that I could pen something that might reach some sinner's heart, that would be the means of saving one from the wrath to come. The truth of God's revealed Word condemns the sinner, but proves to be a lamp to the feet of the righteous. Bless God, all we need is faith in God's Word which is able to make us wise unto salvation. It cheers my heart to hear of so many that are striving for the kingdom.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ, it does seem as though there never was a time when so great a sacrifice was needed as now. It is my desire to keep down in that humble and blessed place where we can learn the Master's will, and drink of the fountain of his love, that will constrain us to do any and every work he may require of us, for Jesus has done great things for a fallen world. For greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends; therefore, whether we had five talents or one, let us prove faithful, so when the Master comes we may hear the heavenly words, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Obituaries.

Latham. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Oshkosh, Wis., Feb. 23d, 1878, Rev. Thomas M. Latham, aged seventy-one years.

He was among the first who in 1813 embraced the Advent faith, at which time he was preaching for the Protestant Methodists in Ware, Mass. Many of the dear readers of the Crisis will remember him, as he was an earnest, efficient laborer in the cause. For several months before his death he was a great sufferer, but in all his pain and affliction Jesus was his comforter. The cause of his death was disease of the liver. His mind was not affected in the least all through his sickness, nor in the hour of death. At 3 o'clock on Saturday, the 23d, quite a number of friends gathered around him to pray that Jesus would give him a peaceful hour in which to die. We sang his favorite hymn, "Savior, more than life to me," after which several prayers were offered by the brethren and sisters. Then our dear father in Israel addressed us for about ten minutes from his dying bed, exhorting us who had so long kept up our meetings and kept together in the unity of christian love to continue to strive earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. He then folded his arms, closed his eyes, and peacefully breathed out his last without a struggle. He went to sleep like a child on the bosom of Jesus. He leaves a great many friends to mourn his loss, among whom is his faithful wife, who, notwithstanding her age and infirmities, constantly watched him during all his suffering, and with the aid of her children administered to all his wants. But his time had come, and God was glorified in his death. About a week before he died he requested the writer to let his friends know through the Crisis of his death.

The funeral services were held in the M. E. Church, conducted by Rev. Chas. Vessey, assisted by Rev. Mr. Holcolm (Wesleyan) and Rev. Mr. Woodroffe. A large concourse of people assembled and listened attentively to a discourse by Rev. Chas. Vessey, from the text given him by the deceased—Rev. 14: 13.

We laid him away in his dusty bed,
No more his sweet voice to hear;
In words of comfort he often spake,
Our sorrowing hearts to cheer.

Fletcher. In Stewartstown, N. H., Jan. 31st, 1878, Eliza, wife of M. Fletcher, aged eighty yrs. She leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. She lived with her husband fifty-three years, who died four years since. She longed to be at rest. D. M. Chadbey.

Wilson. At South Boston, Feb. 24th, 1878, Charlotte H. Wilson.

Elder Grant baptized her, I think twenty years ago. She loved the Savior, and fell asleep in Jesus without a sigh, expecting he will come again soon.

We shall meet, we shall sing, we shall reign,
In the land where the saved never die;
We shall rest, free from sorrow and pain,
Safe at home in the sweet bye and bye.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, March 7. A dispatch to the Daily News from Rome states that the Swiss Guard of the Vatican Wednesday demanded three months pay, usual on the death of a Pope. Upon refusal they loaded their muskets and brandished their halberds, but were quieted by concessions.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says the belief gains ground that if Bismarck presides over the Conference, Beaconsfield will represent England. It is exceedingly improbable that the English delegate, whoever he may be, will remain in the conference if it becomes apparent that the object of a majority of the Powers is simply to indorse the Russo-Turkish bargain. But if the conference means to do more than ratify foregone conclusions there will be some important proposals affecting British interests in the Mediterranean and the safety of the Suez Canal.

A special to the Standard from Gallipoli reports that the Russians are actively constructing intrenchments from Kadikoi to Sharkoi, on the Sea of Marmora. They have now about 18 000 men, with cannon, in these lines, which confront the Turkish lines across the neck of the Gallipoli peninsula

The Telegraph's dispatch from Pera says Russia and Persia are negotiating for an exchange of the district of Bayazid for certain Persian territory.

The News states that Government has taken measures to establish direct telegraphic communication with Besika Bay by way of Alexandria.

After the 9th inst. a police regulation comes into force by which the police may enter houses in Turkey occupied by foreigners without the authority of Consuls.

The Daily Telegraph's Vienna dispatch says: "Count Andrassy's statement to the delegations will be to the effect that peace can only be brought about by an understanding between all the Powers. Austria cannot look to this or that power for a settlement. She will defend the interests of Europe with Europe, and her own interests, if necessary, alone."

The Times' Vienna correspondent confirms the report that Count Andrassy yesterday told the Hungarian delegation that the Government had no intention to annex or occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that the Powers had now accepted the proposal for the Congress at Berlin. France, however, has also expressed a wish that the Congress be confined to the Eastern question. This wish arises from the fear that the Congress may claim the right to sanction all the recent territorial changes. There is little doubt that France will receive reassurances.

Prince Auersperg stated in the Reichstag today that every question but the Eastern would be excluded from the scope of Congress. England also, although accepting the Congress, seems to be averse to the introduction of questions not directly raised by the war, such as the Greek question, the final settlement of which is not yet imperative.

Lord Derby, in his reply to Lord Granville in the House of Lords yesterday, said that the Government had stated their opinion that not merely a part but the whole of the treaty between Russia and Turkey should be submitted to a Congress.

It is reported, that the last clause is that Russia and Turkey will regard the treaty as solidaire, implying that they will not recognize the right of any power to interfere with its terms, except as regards the question of the Straits and a settlement of the boundaries of Montenegro

Vienna, March 10. The Political Correspondence asserts that if Russia persists in not submitting the whole treaty to the Congress war is certain

Vienna, March 7. At the Russian headquarters it is positively stated that when the British fleet passed the Dardanelles peremptory orders came from St. Petersburg to march into Constantinople, but the Grand Duke Nicholas took upon himself to disobey the command, and only moved forward in the direction of Constantinople, sending at the same time to St. Petersburg a statement of his reasons for his course.

Cologne, March 8. A letter to the Cologne Gazette from Pera states that Suleiman Pasha is doomed. His papers proved that he was contemplating a conspiracy for the overthrow of the Sultan.

London, March 10. A special to the Standard from Constantinople states that 700 Circassians perished on the steamer Sphinx, burned near Cape Elia.

Rome, March 3. Crowds broke the windows which were illuminated for the Pope's coronation, but were dispersed by the troops without casualty.

The prospects of the Pope in Italy are not improved by the death of King Victor Emanuel King Humbert, his successor, is an atheist, and a firm disbeliever in the temporal sovereignty of the Pope.

Athens, March 8. By advice of foreign consuls the Cretan insurgents have accepted the armistice offered by the Turks. Thessalian advices state that the insurgents hold all of the province except the towns.

The bank of England has issued 94,000,000 notes in the last seven years. The notes placed in a pile would be eight miles high. If they were joined end to end, they would extend 15,000 miles

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon), to insure insertion for the coming week.

In accordance with the direction of the A. C. P. Society, the Secretary called the attention of the Association to the matter of not publishing certain appointments in the Crisis, whereupon Bro. Wellcome offered the following resolution:

Whereas, the doctrines of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, trine immersion, and probation for sinners after the second advent of Christ, savor largely of heresy, and their influence has, in our judgment, done much injury to the cause of true faith and piety by undermining in the minds of those brought under their influence the scriptural doctrine of the wages of sin, the atonement and judgment; therefore

Resolved, That we cannot lend our influence, either directly or indirectly, to the promulgation of these doctrines, or views on which they depend; and we hereby instruct those having charge of the columns of our paper not to allow any appointments or notices of meetings held by such men as declare themselves believers in said doctrines to be published therein.

The resolution was adopted.

Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent, unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, they be instructed to notify such minister or ministers of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal.

☞ All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—Ozias Goodrich, Boston, Mass.

D. L. MOODY'S SERMONS.

Sowing and Reaping.—A strong gospel admonition and warning from Gal. 6 7, 8.

The Great Question—Where art thou? A thorough appeal to the unconverted and wanderers.

How to walk with God—Separation from the world, and a thorough Christianity. All Christians should read it.

That Gospel Sermon on the Blessed Hope. A grand discourse on the second coming of Christ.

Salvation in Christ—Showing how the blood of Christ saves us. Excellent for seekers and doubters.

Worldly Christians' Fate—A thorough warning in the case of Lot. A great admonition.

The prices of each of the above are $1.25 per 100, or 25 cts. per dozen, by mail.

What think ye of Christ?—Christ in the Old and New Testaments. Two Sermons in one Tract. The foundation of faith.

Redeemed by the Precious Blood—Blood redemption of the Old and New Testaments. Two Sermons in one Tract. The fountain of life.

Prices of each (last two), $2.00 per 100, or 50 cts. per dozen, by mail.

☞ The above ten Sermons, neatly bound in pamphlet paper covers, we sell, postpaid, for 25 cts. For sale by I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.; also at World's Crisis Office.

ANOTHER PAMPHLET.

We have just published an able and thorough work on the order of the Millennium as related to Christ's Second Advent, by Daniel D. Buck, D. D., member of the Genesee Conference of the M. E. Church. One man in Penn. orders four hundred copies to circulate at a Methodist Campmeeting. Who will do likewise? Bro. Moody's Sermon on the Second Advent is bound up with it. A neat Pamphlet. Price $6 50 per hundred; 10 cents single. Address I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me. Sold also at the Crisis Office.

Circulate Widely.

What? The selected Sermons we have published in tract form, by D. L. Moody. They contain many of the best, clearest, most direct and pointed doctrinal and practical Bible thoughts that can be found in any human teacher's language Nothing ever published among us so well adapted to meet the condition of the masses, and benefit them as these sermons. Because Bro. Moody is popular among the masses, his words and Bible teachings will be accepted by many.

I. C. Wellcome.

MORMONISM EXAMINED: Or, was Joseph Smith a Divinely-Inspired Prophet?

A thorough refutation of Mormonism, containing over 100 proofs of its fallacy, deduced from its so-called inspired books, such as "The Book of Mormon," the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants," and "The Inspired Translation of the Bible." This work is a very interesting book of 184 pages. Every one who knows anything of Mormonism should have one. It searches to the very root of doctrine of the so-called Latter Day Saints. Price, in paper, 50 cents single; $4 00 per dozen Address this Office, or Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis.

N. B. It will be sent at half price (25 cts.) to all ministers and Mormons, provided orders are sent to the author, Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

This is now a large, eight-page, weekly paper, ably conducted, beautifully printed, and devoted to the promotion of Bible Christianity in all its features and parts—doctrinal, prophetical, and practical. It is the aim of the publishers to make a well-balanced and thoroughly scriptural paper, free from special hobbies and side issues. A. A Phelps, A. M., Editor. A. A. Hoyt, Business Agent. Terms: $2 00 a year, in advance, postage paid. On trial, six months for $1.00, or three months for 50 cts. Sample copy free. Agents wanted. Address The Bible Banner, 15 North Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Judgment Message."

Numbers 5 and 6 of the Judgment Message are now published for free distribution to all who desire to read and learn the reasons of our hope, and the evidences that the judgment of "the great day of God Almighty" impends. I have yet some back numbers of Nos. 2, 3, and 4. Send orders to the Crisis Office, or to L. T. Cunningham, Newton Upper Falls, Mass.

BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.

It is more than an Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?" Or, Man's Nature and Destiny, as Revealed.

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Late Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

Some few years ago Professor Ives thought that special interest was attached to the discussion of the nature and destiny of man, so he published a book entitled as above, with 119 pages, in which he discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner, showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the soul; a future immortality to be the special portion of the righteous; what the Bible teaches as to the future of the wicked; the intermediate state; the resurrection; that of the righteous and of the wicked, etc.

The author claims that the doctrine set forth "honors God, exalts the Bible, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in works of Missions, rightly values the body, brings christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

The author has now re-written and enlarged this work to 334 pages, and we now consider it a superior work, and is just what should be in the hands of all ministers, Bible teachers and students, and every one should have a copy. So to put it in the reach of all, we offer it at the very low price, by mail,—cloth 75 cents, postpaid. Paper 50 cts., postpaid.

We have the abridged edition, which we have sold for 25 and 30 cts. We have some two hundred left, and we will sell them as follows: Single copy by mail, postpaid, 18 cts.; or in lots of 25 copies by express at ~~rate of 15 cts.; or lots of 50 or 100 copies~~ by express, at 14 cts. Agent.

CHRIST THE RIGHTFUL RULER OF THIS WORLD.

This is a Sermon preached by Eld. E. A. Stockman at Alton Bay, which we have put in a Tract of 24 pages. It shows the present disordered condition of our world and of the human race. It also shows us the remedy, and that Christ is the rightful ruler of this world, and will soon take his kingdom and reign forever and ever. It is one of the most comprehensive and instructive Tracts that we have ever published. It is full of live, soul-saving information. It is what all should have, and just the thing to circulate among the different denominations. We have plenty of them on hand. Let the friends order freely. Price 3 cts. single; 25 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per 100. Agent.

Truth and Error Contrasted.

HIS COMING.

BY MRS. W. H. BAILEY.

Yes, we thought we heard the rattle
Of thy chariot wheels, O Lord,
In the din and strife of battle
So predicted in thy Word.

And our hearts stood still with gladness,—
Can this be our coming King?
Will he come and banish sadness?
Will he back our loved ones bring?

Hark! the rumbling's nearer, nearer,
Every token seemed to say;
We could scarce restrain hosannah
Till the breaking of the day.

But the sounds are ceasing, ceasing;
Doth thy chariot wheels stand still?
Oh, my God, what means this silence?
Wilt thou not thy word fulfill?

Pity, pity us, O Shepherd!
Waiting for thee in the cold;
All the long and dreary night time
Pining for thy sheltering fold.

See the lambs are fainting, dying,
'Neath earth's withering, biting blast;
O how long, dear tender Shepherd,
Will this awful silence last?

Every ear is bent to listen,
Every eye is strained to see;
Jesus, king in regal beauty,
O we long to be with thee!

Watchman, watchman, listen closely,
Echo forth the faintest sound
That the chariot wheels are moving,
Let it shake the solid ground.

Earth is groaning for redemption,
And our hearts with waiting break;
Let thy kingdom come, O Father,
For our blessed Savior's sake.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

BY W. KELLAWAY.

The public religious mind of England has been definitely and finally stirred upon the question of life eternal through Christ alone. You were of course aware that here and there one had embraced the Divine teaching upon future destiny; but it remained for the last few weeks to develop the inquiry, so as to extend it through the length and breadth of the country. Dr. Pope, the President of the Wesleyan body, has been playing the part of an old sectarian once and again, warning the youthful ministry of that denomination against deviation from the Wesleyan standards, under threat of pains and penalties should they leave the beaten path of their predecessors. Then again the very learned and silver-tongued author and preacher, Canon Farrar, has in Westminster Abbey torn up the dogma that God will eternally hate and everlastingly torment the lost soul. I have sent you his discourse printed in full, so that I need not make any comments thereon. Perhaps it may please you to publish some parts of them. They are in the direction of restorationism, described by Dr. Pope as a "more generous error" than what he terms "annihilationism." Canon Farrar has deviated from the truth by not listening to texts, but to his own heart. Of course it is not right to ignore the heart altogether, and be cold and loveless; on the other hand, to throw away the eternal principles of justice for a mere sentiment is equally unwise. "The heart is deceitful above all things"; and "he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." It is surely wiser far to abide by the statements of God—"texts"—which are no lie, but "truth, truth."

I am happy also to be able to tell you that a movement has been started by a few friends and myself to open a chapel in London for the earnest preaching of the saving Gospel of God. You very kindly published a notice in the Crisis not long ago to say that I intended coming to the States, and should be glad to hear of a sphere of labor. So I had; but when I mentioned it to one or two here, and saw how things stood, I "assuredly gathered" that I ought to remain in this country at any and every cost, and endeavor now by word of mouth to help complete what has been done through the press. I had been invited to speak in a little room, and a series of addresses resulted in the conviction of some ten or a dozen of the soundness and goodness of our faith and hope. Another dear brother said he wished I could remain; and after prayer to God, I consulted them all, to see if they would unite in one, and procure a more public and respectable building, and promised to stay, leaving my sustenance in the hands of our Father, who certainly will not let us perish. The result of that consultation was an appeal to the scattered believers as follows:—

"Dear Friend:—An opportunity offers to secure a MISSION CHAPEL, situate in the main street of a densely populated district of London, the cost of which, including repairs and seating, will not exceed £300. This sum we wish to raise at once. We have therefore decided to make this APPEAL, and we hope all who love the gospel of the kingdom of God and of Jesus Christ will not be slow to respond. Attached is a collecting sheet, which, if you would make an effort to get filled up, and send it to any name and address below, we should be glad. Where pounds cannot be given, shillings or pence will be acceptable. A list of subscribers, of amounts of 2s. 6d. and upwards, will be published in Bible Echo. Sums received before the 10th of December will appear in the first list. Collectors' names will be printed as such. No bazaars, teas, entertainments, musical recitals, rafflings, etc., will be used to raise any part of the money, and friends who approve this are asked to contribute their utmost without these devices. Loving the Lord Jesus, and seeking to make him and his Gospel known in the earth, we are, yours truly,

R. BLYTH, The Elms, Stratford Green, E., Treasurer.
H. B. VANE, 20 Bromley St., Commercial Road, E.
R. J. BIRD, 58 Fairfoot Road, Campbell Road, Bow.
W. KELLAWAY, Editor of Bible Echo, Hauken Villa, Birkbeck Road, Lytonstone, E.

Some of our friends were holding back, saying they would help as soon as the project had become an undertaking; so we have paid the deposit, and have to complete the purchase by the 25th of March. We shall be under the necessity of taking up £100 towards the building, unless the friends help liberally. The present amount subscribed is £64. 7s. 6d. We shall no doubt have all our work in raising the balance of the two hundred pounds, and if our brethren in America would like to assist us with a contribution—"having a brick or two in the building" as the Methodists put it—their help will be very gratefully received.

I think it will be for the glory of God and the good of his people and truth if this place can be successfully opened and maintained. It will be the first in London separate from all denominational interests. There are two or three others, but they are bound to systems in which they are anomalies, and are unable to be centres such as we hope ours may be. Surely, great London ought to have such a building; and I hope, for the encouragement of my brethren, who are zealous in this work, there will be some sympathy shown from "over the ocean." It will, I am convinced, be but the beginning of an active dissemination of the truth. There will be special opening services, and I am asked to give six addresses on Conditional Immortality.* This move will also drive me to the completion of a project long entertained—the preparation of a Hymn Book, embodying our faith and hope.

May all things be under God's prompting and help, without which our best intentions and endeavors are fruitless.

A FEW THOUGHTS AND QUESTIONS.

BY B. MATHEWSON.

What a bright galaxy of names of our transatlantic Christian divines are appended to that call (in the Crisis of Feb. 20th) for a Conference of no common moment. Notice one or two items specified for the said Conference in their own language: "Let us gird our loins; let us trim our lamps; let us, as one man, beseech Him whom having not seen we love, to tarry no longer, but to come quickly.

It is proposed that with the view of affording an opportunity for such united prayer, and for bearing testimony to the second coming of our blessed Lord, as the proper hope of the church, a three days' conference should be held on the 26th, 27th, and 28th of February. I am glad to see such a frank, noble acknowledgement of culpability for their reticence on this subject in the past, and now manifesting a desire to redeem the time. O that other portions of the church may soon extricate themselves from that apparent apathy so long resting upon her, relative to this the grand consummation of her hope, by the Bridegroom's return.

But verily there is a cause. What is it? Why have the professed church throughout the length and breadth of Christendom been so reserved upon this subject? Has it come about by the teaching, so contrary to Christ's declaration to his disciples in John 13: 33? "As I said to the Jews, whither I go, ye cannot come; so, now I say to you." Or is it in consequence of their affections being transferred to other lovers? Hosea 2: 13.

God complains of his affianced bride decking herself in a manner to attract other lovers. Does she now court the honor of the world, by building gorgeous houses of worship, employing human eloquence in its desk instead of godliness, a few trained opera singers to do the praising, which is only comely for the upright? Does she not eat and drink with the drunken in a manner never thought of fifty years ago? Scarce a house of worship built now, of much consideration, but a kitchen and parlors, and all the paraphernalia for cooking and eating is attached. Does the Bridegroom mean anything when he warns his bride about this peculiar eating and drinking after the signs, just prior to his coming? Does it not look as if the bride had forgotten her calling and portion, and seeking for ease and glory, where her Lord is not?

Can any explain why many of the professed bride are even farther in the background than mere indifference? That they even heap contempt upon those who love his appearing, and are waiting with anxious heart for his return? Why does a blush mantle their cheek when approached on this subject? Look into the popular religious papers, and listen as they demur, relative to the great Evangelist's preaching upon the second coming of the Master: "Many of us thought it would have been better if Mr. Moody had let that subject entirely alone." Why so, my professed brother, when Inspiration brings it to view more times than any other one subject in the New Testament? If all that Scripture is useless, better cut it right out, for the Word of God was to thoroughly furnish the bride, and we do not wish to have any useless furniture to lumber up our house. No, no. So out with it.

I can furnish you a precedent in the person of a king, in cutting from the Word, and burning what was not in harmony with his proclivities. It was a prophecy exceedingly disagreeable to Jehoiakim, but he let Jehudi read it to him, surrounded by his courtly princes who (some of them, at least), begged he would not burn it, but he would only allow Jehudi to read, and then cut it out, and then cast it into the fire upon the hearth, until it was all consumed. Better turn to Jer. chap. 36, and read the whole account, and see how Jehoiakim fared, ere undertaking to take from the Word of the Lord. In Ezek. chap. 34, it is quite apparent there is food for God's flock that somebody is not pleased with; but instead of cutting it out and burning it, they put it under their feet and foul it.

God declares that his flock eat and drink that which others have trodden upon and fouled with their feet. Do not God's flock live by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God? Is it not apparent then that somebody has adopted a course that will bring some part of the Word of God into contempt? If their foot is upon it, perhaps it will be partially concealed, and held in contempt; and if fouled, that is, covered with noxious and offensive matter, it will be rendered odious, so that a young convert may almost fear to partake, unless they have a thoroughly spiritual appetite. Is there now any part of God's Word that is scarcely mentioned, except it be to reproach and ridicule, by the great mass of professed Christendom? If so, what part is it except it be the eschatology of the Scriptures? Is there any one doctrine so despised as the second coming of Christ, and its kindred doctrines? Well, God's flock eat and drink it with a relish, notwithstanding some of their dearest earthly friends contemptuously scorn it. Yes, this food they will have in spite of the devil. We can easily determine whether this food is palatable.

Castleton, Feb. 18th.

P. S. May God bless the Conference that is so soon to convene to welcome Jesus back to take the diadem of earth and reign without a rival. Shall hope to hear of the outpouring of the Spirit upon them. B. M.

I HAVE heard of a good woman, who asked her husband, "My dear, do you think you will know me when you and I get to heaven?" "Shall I know you?" he said. "Why, I have always known you while I have been here, and do you think I shall be a greater fool when I get to heaven?" I think it was an apt answer. If we have known one another here, we shall know one another there.—Spurgeon.

A HEART-MEMORY is better than a mere head-memory. Better to carry away a little of the life of God in our souls, than if we were able to repeat every word of every sermon we ever heard.

BROKEN NETS.

BY O. R. COPP.

If we were to go a fishing expecting to catch anything, we should examine our net first of all, and constantly while in use, to see whether it was whole or not. If not, our first business should be to mend it; for we could not expect success with rents in the net. Indeed, if there were but one break in it, the best fish of the lot, and the very one we wanted, might escape.

Mending nets constitutes a part of a good fisherman's duties. James and John were doing this when summoned into a higher order of fishing by Him who knew the fishing boats of Galilee contained men with larger hearts and quicker perception than the halls of Jewish literature.

"Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men," said Jesus to Simon and Andrew "as they were casting a net into the sea; for they were fishers." And it may be said of us all that we are "fishers of men," if we are following Jesus. For as soon as one gets fished out of the devil's slough-pond and his feet established on the Rock, he begins to realize the necessity and importance of fishing out somebody else. He could not fish out anybody else and be all over himself in this slough-pond. But having got fished out, and mended his own net, he is ready to scoop up his nearest associate.

We must certainly mend ou[illegible] they are not whole, if we expect to take a fish. What about a christian corresponds to the fisherman's net? Why, it is his influence as such. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." In other words, we must possess an unbroken christian character, or influence, if we are to draw men into the kingdom of God.

We have seen men lay out their net with much calculation, and pull in with equal zeal, expecting a "great draught," but the fish knew too much for them; they saw the holes in the net and made good their escape. An unsullied christian life, daily supplemented with strenuous efforts, seldom fails of bringing in the desired fish.

A broken net can be mended (it is better that they should not break), and it can quickly be accomplished with a little painstaking humility. When fishermen break their nets they do not sew on more twine where it is whole, but take the trouble to find the break and and go there and fix it. Christians are not always as true to their interests. It is not uncommon to see them very persistent in sewing on the twine where it does not need it until it is very strong there, but a little inspection would reveal a rent elsewhere large enough to let the largest fish through. Mend the breaks. Never mind the part that is whole.

If you have injured or otherwise lost the confidence of your neighbor, go mend it there, and perhaps you will easily scoop him in. Do not expect to mend it by confessing to the priest or in public hearing; that is sewing on where it is whole. If you are all right to human ears, but have sinned against heaven, arise and go to your Father, confessing to him.

Breaks in your net of a public character must be mended publicly, and of a private character privately. In all cases, be sure and find out whether your net is whole or not. If not, ascertain the exact spot where the break is and fix it, and you are whole and fit for "a fisher of men."

Lawrence, Mass., Dec. 25th, 1878.

THE CRY OF THE POOR.

BY H. T. PAGE.

"Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard."

The command to us is to listen to the cry of the poor, yet do we obey the divine injunction in this particular? are we thoughtful of those about us who are in want and cry to us for help, or do we stop our ears to all such appeals and turn the poor away empty? If we are unmindful of such as are hungry, and who have not sufficient clothing to keep them warm, are we not stopping our ears to the cry of the unfortunate for help, and will not God turn a deaf ear to our appeals to him for mercy when our turn comes? And come it surely will in due season.

We do not know that a more appropriate time could be selected than the present in which to call the attention of the truly good and philanthropic to the need of the poor and unfortunate in our midst, who may possibly be suffering with hunger and for want of clothing to keep them warm this cold weather.

How can we better serve God than to do good unto those about us, remembering that the poor are as much the children of God as those who are wealthy. If we refuse to aid the poor in this world and do what we can to relieve their suffering, God will hold us accountable for such neglect at the judgment day.

But how shall we know who is poor? The poor have hearts and sympathies as well as those who are in more comfortable circumstances. They have pride and do not like to beg. This is a proper pride, and a pride that should be respected. This being true, what is our duty to the unfortunate poor and to God? Shall we turn a deaf ear to the cry of the poor? Shall we look upon such with a coolness that will make their hearts sink within them, and shall they be made to feel that Christianity is a sham and a delusion? Shall we wrap our cloaks of morality about us and thank God that we are not like that publican, because we have the means to live in what is called a respectable manner?

Go and administer unto the wants of those who may want, and in this way great good may be accomplished. Lay aside sectarianism, and do not stop to inquire which church people attend, or if they ever go inside of any church. That is a matter of no consequence. We are to open our eyes to the cry of the poor. What wealthy lady who resides in Loudon, will lead in such matters? What lady in every town will step to the front and lead off in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked?

What the poor want is sympathy. They feel that, to a certain extent, they are outcasts, and have no friends; and, in their despair, they may commit crime, which they would not do if they were assured that the so-called upper classes were mindful of them, and took an interest in their temporal affairs.

One great difficulty in the way of improving the condition of the poor is the cold shoulder which they receive from those about them, and from those of their class. But this is no fault of theirs, for they have not had the advantages of an education, and do not understand that kindness and gentleness are essential to their well being and happiness. This great truth must be taught them. If the upper classes are refined and gentle, and if they will mingle with the poor and lowly, they will do much to soften down all asperity of feeling in their minds, which exclusiveness engenders, and which makes them look upon others more fortunate than themselves in possession of this world's goods, as their enemies. This is not true to any extent, to be sure, but selfishness must be rooted out of our hearts, and we must all of us, rich and poor, remember that God is just, and that he will render exact justice to his children, and mete out to them rewards and punishments as they may deserve.

A HOMEWARD LOOK.

BY J. ALBERT LIBBY.

Ask me not whither I have come,
The stormy past I would forget,
And o'er my wayward ways be dumb,
So often mourned with deep regret.

But ask me whither I would go,
Then hope hath not within me died;
I'll haste to tell, it charms me so
To speak of things the other side.

[illegible]l that the sweet word home contains,
[illegible]ansions, fair lands, and all the good,
[illegible]ng in victor choral strains
[illegible] sang across the flood.

[illegible]ife always! and we then shall find
The hand that undertook to save,
Hath purged from out the flesh and mind
Each sad remembrance of the grave.

Fullness of joy! the tides of grief
That rolled like Marah's bitter stream,
Have dried, and endless sweet relief
From every ill brings joy supreme.

Bright home, long life, and lasting bliss!
With eyes and heart intent on these,
What wonder that earth's vanities
With tinsel glitter, fail to please.

OMENS OF THE TIMES.

It is an oft-quoted axiom, that "coming events cast their shadows before." There always seems to be a preparation for any marvelous visitation about to occur. The hearts of good and true men are moved, and the wicked become more God-forgetting than ever. At no period in the history of Christianity, have the enemies of the Gospel been as bold and determined as at present. They may have been more blasphemous, but they never have been so defiant. The devil is truly "among men in great wrath." We trust it may be, "because he knoweth he hath but a short time. There is a mighty "noise and shaking" in the valley of vision. Tumultuous elements are at work, and antagonistic forces are colliding, and everything indicates that something is coming." It may be well for all of us to see that our garments are unspotted by the world, and that we are prepared to "walk with him in white."

There is a kind of "solemn midnight cry" in the souls of those who live near to God. They hear from afar the announcement: "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." What is the import of much that is transpiring about us, we may not be able to define. The time for testing men's work "as by fire," is at hand. Whoever has built of "wood, hay or stubble," will find his work perishing about him, though he himself may be saved. Some have built splendid structures in the way of ecclesiastical systems. These cannot stand the "fiery ordeal" through which they are now passing. Those whose energies have been spent in efforts to establish some particular mode of church government, or partizan view of doctrine, will find out they have used material for erecting a building, which in these times is only adapted to destruction.

Those most interested in these matters, cannot discern the signs of the times. If there should be a tendency to tardiness in their approaching overthrow, it only needs for their deluded votaries to be let alone, who for the want of something to do, if for no other reason, will themselves effect the work of destruction. The uneasiness of certain representative minds, who, because their craft is in danger, are sensitive at any intimation of their estrangement from the simplicity of the Gospel is significant and ominous. The slightest allusion to the true state of things, makes them feel that they are in a sense "tormented before the time." But our God is coming, and coming with a recompense. He will mete out to every man according to his work and character.

True holiness through the blood of the Lamb, is the only thing that will stand the "wreck" of plans and the "crash" of systems. The Lord help all who read these words to be "up and doing." Work while the day lasts, for the night cometh, and a night this will be, in which "no man can work." What our hands now find to do, "let us do it with our might." Eternity is at hand. The day is far spent. We must soon give account of our stewardship. Let every reader propound to himself this inquiry: Am I ready?—Christian Standard.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The first Tri-Annual Session of the A. C. Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern N. Y. was held at Little Marsh, Pa., commencing Jan. 11th, 1878, and continuing over Sunday.

We had a fair representation of ministers and delegates, taking into consideration all the circumstances, and especially the fact that the snow was going off so rapidly. We had a very good time, and the utmost harmony prevailed throughout the business, preaching and social meetings. It was really gratifying to witness the good feeling manifested by all classes of people in the place.

There seems to be a great change taking place in the minds of the people all over the country as the end approaches. They seem to be more willing to listen to the truth, to be more anxious to investigate. The words of our Savior are surely coming true, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth." It seems as though we all ought to feel as Bro. Moody said he did, when asked why he started out to hold meetings (after his return to this country from England). He replied, "I cannot sleep nights for thinking of the many all about me going down to ruin and perdition."

It is indeed fearful to think we are so near the end of all things, and yet the mass of the people so utterly unconscious of the fact—eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, as it was in the days of Noah. It behooves us all to redouble our diligence, and to watch and pray more and more earnestly, if possible, as we see the day approaching. May God help us to be faithful. R. KELSEY, Secretary.

DRESS AND ORNAMENTS.

My Dear Sisters:—In my early christian experience, before I came into that liberty in Christ which gives great joy to do the least of his will, I did not have a spirit of love about dress. I know I often grieved God more by the unloving judgment I passed upon others who dressed differently from myself, because he says, "Love is the fulfilling of the law," than if I had dressed contrary to his Word. But now, when I see them it only gives me grief and a longing desire to see them sanctified through his truth.

In John 8: 47, it says, "He that is of God, heareth God's words." This is a mark of God's children—that they hear his word. God prefers obedience rather than sacrifice, and that we should purify our hearts through obedience to his truth. In 1 Peter 3: 3 and 4, he makes a simple command as to how women should dress, and objects to three things: The adorning themselves with putting on of apparel, wearing of gold, and plaiting of hair. Then the Holy Ghost speaks of the ornaments "which in the sight of God are of great price,"—viz.: "the hidden man of the heart," and "a meek and quiet spirit." God foresaw what a test it would be to woman and deigned to tell his mind concerning it. In 1 Tim. 2: 9, is a similar command, defining the "putting on of apparel," to be "costly array." This passage is usually interpreted that woman should adorn herself with modest apparel. But it does not say so. It says adorn themselves in modest apparel with "shamefacedness and sobriety."

There were reasons in God's mind for giving the command, and since laboring among the heathen women of India, they have become more apparent to me. A heathen woman delights in her gay-colored clothing and jewels. I have seen them loaded with the latter, and when they become christians, it is one of their greatest tests to give them up. Can we tell them to leave off eleven pair of their bracelets, and give them permission to wear one? Can we tell them it is not right to wear two or three rings in their ears, but it is to wear one? She delights more in her nose jewel, especially if it be a handsome one, than in her ear-rings; —so how can we explain the difference? No. We can give no explanation to them, but that it is one of God's commands, and ask, "Do you love Christ better than these?"

In reproving a native christian for replacing her nose jewel—not a large ring, but a tiny green stone with brass tip—I said to her, "You are breaking God's command, and now you look like a heathen woman." "But all christian women wear them." "No," said I confidently. "Well," naming two or three children among us, "these wear them on their hands, neck and breasts." And as the vision of their jewelry came up to me, I was dumb, and my heart was sorrowful. When I go to the Bazaar to visit the women in their huts, if I should wear the least superfluous clothing, it would catch the eye of these dress-loving creatures, and my message of God's love fall upon a divided attention. Said a dear sister to me the other day: "I was so reproved to-day in the bazaar by a native watching my hat all the time I was talking." Then, if native christians by resuming their jewelry, look like heathen women, does it not put God's child on a level with the woman of the world?

"But it makes us peculiar." Ah, that is it. That is the badge of God's people,—they are a "peculiar people." Why should you shrink from his own mark? "But it gives me more power with worldly people." It may win them more to yourself, and you may have less of reproach to bear, but by disobeying God's Word, we are only shorn of real power to win souls to Christ and deep consecration. We never gain anything as influence for Christ by ceasing to be faithful to his word. A sensible man or woman inwardly despises our inconsistency. Not dressing like the women of the world frees us from the snares of the world. This little departure of his Word is a little leak in our power.

Plain dress, too, is a safe-guard to a woman's virtue. Many a poor girl has laid herself open to the power of some designing man, who was attracted by her showy dress. Her vanity made her weak. Have we influenced her by our own beautiful and costly dress,—we, who should have given her a moral support by our obedience to God's Word? It seems as if we could do nothing to lessen the evil, and only succeed in making ourselves singular. But are we expected to reap before we sow? A faithful witness for Christ is like one touching a key that will vibrate through all eternity.

And lastly, ornaments and costly apparel use money that was only intrusted in our hands. They will rise up in judgment with the cry: "We kept you from feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, sending the gospel to the heathen, and influenced many a woman to follow your example." And as we see the hundreds of souls leaving God's presence forever, because the gold glittered on our breasts and fingers, the costly apparel—plain, perhaps, but costly, adorned our persons, and carried not to them "the pearl of great price," or the "robe of righteousness," will it seem a little or peculiar thing? Would not ruffles and trimming that added dollars to the cost of a dress, mock you if you were to step in among the Bulgarian sufferers who perish for necessaries? or among the starving men and women in India who would give you their lives just for the cost of one ruffle? Then the millions of heathen who perish without the Word of God, because no one has gone to them! If you are not called to go to them as a steward of God, can you not send a substitute? If the price of the costly dress and ornaments of the christian women alone were given, it would send fifty thousand missionaries forth.

But if there were no other reasons to be given, the fact that God has given us his command "who has exalted his Word above all his name," shall in turn be honored by God. Let us exalt the word of God, because it is his word. Your Sister in our Lord Jesus Christ. JENNIE A. FROW.

LOW as the grave is, faith can climb high enough to see beyond it.

SERMONS ON DEMAND.

A few Sabbaths ago a distinguished clergyman of Boston, on ascending his pulpit after the conclusion of the preliminary service, was seen suddenly to lay aside the manuscript he held, to turn, and descend to the reading desk, where he spent a moment examining the leaves of the Bible. Resuming the pulpit after a moment of only slightly awkward delay, he proceeded to deliver an extemporaneous discourse upon the text: "What must I do to be saved?" The discourse is spoken of as having been one of unusual power.

Of this rather singular proceeding the explanation proved to be that the minister had brought the wrong manuscript with him to church and into the pulpit, and did not discover his mistake until he rose to its delivery. It was then entirely too late for the mistake to be rectified, and the only thing to be done was to substitute an extemporaneous sermon in place of the written one. Hence the sudden searching of the Bible for a text, and what followed. Whether the preacher actually extemporised an entirely new sermon, or whether by effort of a well-trained mind and long practiced memory, he simply recalled the one that had been written whose manuscript he had left behind, or whether he resorted to some often used and hence familiar train of thought upon a rather trite theme, we are unable to say. But, in either event, the incident was a suggestive one.

The occasions must be frequent in every preacher's experience when, either by accident or emergency, the solid footing of manuscript is knocked away from under him, and an extemporized sermon furnishes his only way of meeting the necessity that is upon him. Herein is found one of the strongest of reasons why preachers should cultivate the power of extemporaneous speech, even if they seldom use it. They should drill themselves in those qualities of mind which will enable them to furnish sermons on demand, even if ordinarily they are quite able to take a full advantage of the ample notice usually afforded in the routine of labor. We know of a good minister of this vicinity who makes it a rule always "to keep one extemporaneous sermon on hand."

More and more we are impressed with the fact that the secret of preparation for the pulpit lies in the steady acquisition of knowledge, first Biblical, and second general, and in the faithful discipline of all the powers whose healthful exercise contributes to oratorical success, rather than in the elaborate study and finish of special sermons. We know this view is a heresy with some professors of homiletics, but it may be the true one, nevertheless.

Let the minister, like the shop-keeper, keep his shelves full of goods, then when occasion, like a customer, calls for a given article, he can lay his hand at once upon it, and not need to send out to have it made up.—Congregationalist.

WEST CORNWALL, CT.

Elder Potter has been laboring with the dear people at this place. His first and second discourses were on the origin, nature, and destiny of man, and were very ably delivered. His third and fourth were on the signs of the times, the prophetic periods, and the necessity of watching for the sign of the coming of the son of man; as that, and the shaking of the powers of the heavens are to be the first thing in order, the other signs being considered in the past. His fifth and last discourse was on the inheritance of the saints, and the glories of God's everlasting kingdom to be established here upon the earth.

The attendance was large, and perfect order reigned throughout the entire meeting. There were none that manifested any desire to become christians, but all gave evident marks of interest and excellent attention. People of all denominations came out to hear the great cardinal truths of the Gospel as laid down in divine authority. May God continue to give our brother his all-sustaining grace.

God has a few chosen ones here and there, in this part of his moral heritage, who attended the meeting, and were much profited and strengthened in their purposes to serve God. May the good Lord continue to keep us by his almighty power, that at last we may be brought to share the glories of that eternal day so soon to dawn on all God's waiting people. A. J. S.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

According to adjournment, the Quarterly Conference of the Northwestern Evangelical District No. 2 of the State of Kansas met at Spring Hill school-house, Republic Co., Feb. 18th, 1878. Bro. T. R. Comstock, District Evangelist, called the meeting to order. Prayer by Bro. A. Henry.

Ministers present: T. R. Comstock, Jas. Page, N. T. Case, W. H. Shriner, and Sr. S. Shriner. The Secretary being absent, Bro. W. H. Shriner was chosen Secretary pro tem. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted. Delegates present: Bro. J. Stryker, Spring Hill; Sr. J. E. Comstock, Salem; Bro. A. Henry, Marsh Valley; Bro. Guy Porter, White Creek Valley; Bro. W. H. Shriner, Greenleaf; Sr. S. Shriner, Cole school-house.

Churches reported by letter: Sherman Centre and Oak Creek. Preachers reported their labors. Report of District Evangelist accepted and approved. A motion was made and carried that the license granted to Bro. W. H. Shriner, by the Washington Co. Quarterly Conference, be accepted. A resolution was presented and adopted unanimously that the words "contribution box" be stricken out of Art. 7 of our By-laws, and insert the words "and others" after the word ministers.

A resolution was adopted that the Elders of the churches be requested to solicit funds, to be forwarded to H. H. Klock, Ottumwa, Coffey Co., Kansas, to defray the expenses of publishing the revised Constitution of the State Conference.

It was suggested by the members present that Bro. Guy Porter be requested to go to work in the vineyard, as laborers are few, but the harvest is great.

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to send a copy of the minutes of this meeting to the Crisis and Times for publication.

Owing to the condition of the roads, many who were expected were prevented from coming to this meeting; nevertheless, the few who were present worked with a will for the Master's cause, and peace and harmony prevailed throughout. Many saw the need of the Savior's return to the earth to complete our salvation, and may God enable them to fully appreciate the plan of redemption and accept of offered mercy. "Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase."

Adjourned to meet on the 9th of May, 1878, with the church at White Creek Valley, Cloud Co., Kansas.

MISSION SCENES.

BY A. S. BURNHAM.

Some of the first ladies of the city called at my house to know if I knew of any American families who were needy. But shall I make a distinction? Would Jesus? I asked myself. No, he would not, nor shall I.

I was out the other day, and a girl in rags says, "Please, sir, will you come to my house? We have nothing to eat." I went with food, provided by a brother, and found a father, mother, and five children; the father out of work. At another time I went, and the father was locked up, with a badly sprained limb, having been drinking and fighting. Shall I leave them now? Jesus says, No.

I went again; the mother was weeping, and the children. The father had been taken to the House of Correction for drunkenness. He is now at home, penitent enough, promising never to drink again. I left some papers and talked with them about the picture in one of Dr. Cullis' papers of the Ascension, and told them that just as sure as he went away he will come again, and that soon. The girl wanted a Bible, and if the little readers could have seen her joy when she got one! Will such small work do any good?

LIGHT AND RESPIRATION.

Dr. Pettenkofer, an eminent European physician, has, by an extended series of observations, ascertained that sunlight has a direct effect upon respiration. While in complete darkness the respiratory movements become greatly diminished, so that the breathing is superficial and slow; exposure to sunlight speedily quickens the movements of the chest, and produces a corresponding quickening of all the vital forces.

In this interesting fact we have another argument for the free admittance of sunlight into our dwellings. Respiration is one of the most important of all the vital functions. One lives just in proportion as he breathes. The vital forces of the person who breathes little are always at a low ebb. He will be quite likely to be weak, nervous, spiritless, and possessed of little vitality. An abundance of sunshine brings, through a quickened respiration, a quickened pulse, a stronger heart-beat, a more vigorous and equable circulation, a more perfect digestion, firmer muscles, stronger nerves, and a general renovation and vitalization of the entire system.

If parents wish their little ones to grow and develop into perfect manhood and womanhood, they should allow and encourage them to bathe in the sunshine like the birds, the squirrels, the frisking lambs, and most others of nature's happy and healthy creatures. Darkened rooms are excellent to preserve the brilliancy of the colors in Turkish tapestry and damask curtains, and the lustre of polished mahogany furniture; but they are sure to fade out the roses from the cheeks of mothers and little ones, and the light and joy from bright eyes. Thousands of children have faded quite away under the deadly influence of the darkness and dampness of fashionable drawing-rooms.—Health Reformer.

MAY God hasten the time when war shall be buried—that grim old breaker of hearts. Carry him out on a rusted shield. Put him down in the most desolate part of all the earth. Bury his sword with him. Heap on his grave-stone broken chariot wheels. Let widowhood and orphanage clap their hands over his burial and the winds howl for requiem.—Talmage.

PROPER FOOD.—The importance of proper food is almost universally under-estimated. It is a subject worthy of the most careful attention. If the material taken into the body as food is of poor quality, then the brain, bone, blood, and muscle made of it will most certainly be of poor quality also; just as poor leather makes poor shoes, and rotten timber poor ships.—Selected.

THE DEAREST NAME.

BY W. KELLAWAY.

There's no name so dear to us
As the name of Jesus;
For no other name than this
From defilement frees us.

There are heroes' names that speak
Bravest of behavior;
But what's that beside the thought,
Jesus is our Savior?

Names of kings and councillors,
Wreathed with earthly glory,
Are not grand to us as His
Of the Bible story.

No, no name so dear to us
As the name of Jesus;
From our guilt and shame and sin
Blessedly it frees us.

PREREQUISITES FOR EFFECTIVE PREACHING.

BY C. R. BARNES.

What are the essential conditions necessary to result in a successful ministry?

First, there must be the Divine call to preach. This lacking, a man's efforts will not accomplish any permanent good. "How shall they preach except they be sent?" asked a man well qualified to speak on the subject. The question implies its own answer. They cannot preach. They may talk, they may reason, they may sermonize; but to preach, that is, to proclaim the gospel with saving efficacy, they cannot, except they be sent for that purpose by the Lord of the harvest. Better to be an useful layman, accomplishing duties providentially provided, than to be preaching with no blessing from God upon your work. Better it is to be engaged in a private and humble capacity in work for God, carrying sunshine into desolate homes, and inspiring hope into desponding hearts, than to be toiling in vain in the pulpit unbidden by the Lord. Many lives are almost wasted by mistaking the right calling, and laboring in departments of activity for which they are unsuited. Many a man who, in some profession, is eking out a scanty living, might have been enjoying comfort if he had turned his attention to some mechanical pursuit for which he is better adapted. In all professions the sad sight is continually presented of men neglecting duties for which they are fitted, and toiling to accomplish ends for which they are quite unqualified. The ministerial ranks present no exception to this statement, for all around us is unblessed labor, spiritual vineyards running to decline under the injudicious and unwise direction of those who have, indeed, a capacity for usefulness, but who are in the wrong field of labor. Let not love of fame tempt you to enter the gospel ministry. Let not the few dollars which may thereby be gained be an incentive to take up the work. Let not the desire to make known some cherished theory induce you to take the step. Move not in this matter until you are moved with a power outside of yourself, and which you dare not resist. Move not until you can no longer with a quiet conscience keep still; for remember that the very first fact necessary for a successful ministry is the call to it by the Head of the church.

Second, there must be a clear apprehension of the object for which the gospel was given, and a wise choice of means to accomplish that end. The object of the gospel is not to convince men that the dead are unconscious, that sinners will be destroyed, that the earth shall be redeemed; nor was it given for the express purpose of disproving any of the various errors which men hold. Its object is higher and grander than this. Its aim is to lead men to reconciliation with God; to turn them from sin and the love of it to a hearty loyalty to Him who hath made them, and redeemed them. He who preaches merely to circulate his theory, to lead men to adopt this creed or the other, who is laboring chiefly to build up his sect, is preaching for unworthy ends; and however he may succeed in that for which he is striving, his ministry will not be a success as it regards the accomplishment of the legitimate end for which the ministry was instituted. The preaching of truth is not itself the ultimate object of the ministry, but proclaiming the truth is merely the means by which the end—the conversion of sinners—is to be attained. Is your ministry barren? Are no sinners led to Christ by your preaching? Examine yourself; ascertain the precise object for which you have been working, and see whether it, after all, has been for such an end you have been toiling. Perhaps you have been zealous to prove your doctrine, to build up your cause, when you should have been more anxious to lead souls to Christ, and point out the way of salvation to those who sit in darkness. How can the marksman hope to win the prize except he clearly sees the target, and deliberately aims at that, and nothing else?

Third, a prayerful study of the Word of God. The ministry of to-day are not to preach a gospel revealed unto them, but a message originally committed to others, and contained in the Scriptures. An extensive acquaintance with other literature and learning, in the various departments of human knowledge, will be aids to the minister, but not essentials. The one Book of which he should know more than all others is the Bible; and this book, studied with prayer, and made familiar to the mind, its spirit permeating his being, and its facts stored in his memory, will cause him to be so equipped for his work that he will be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth." But this absorption of Holy Writ cannot be accomplished simply by reading it, nor by study only. Prayer must be one of the steps. As wax needs the heat of fire to make it impressible, so our minds, our hearts need to be softened by the influence of prayer; and then coming to the Word of God in such a mood, and continuing its study in that mood, the thoughts of God will be stamped into our minds, and their gracious imprint will not be soon effaced. Do we thus study? Do we often come to the throne of grace for this purpose? If we do not, we are making ourselves weak when we might be strong. The work of the ministry is one of no common responsibility. It is a service for which an account is yet to be given. "They watch for your souls, as they that must give account." Well might Paul ask, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

Brethren, let us be encouraged, for "our sufficiency is of God." If he has called us to this work, then he will not leave us helpless in our toil. He is with us, helping us do that for which he has called us. While we preach the various truths of his Word, let us always regard them only as the means he has given us to lead men to reconciliation with himself; and let us never labor for any object other than this in telling the story of the cross. Let no study draw our minds away from the Divine store-house, but keep the words of God ever in our thoughts, and make them our meditation day and night. If thus we do, we may lack many other qualifications, but in these three we shall find the essentials of success, and our labor will not be unfruitful, nor in vain in the Lord.

MIRACLES REASONABLE.

"When Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language, Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion. The sea saw it, and fled; Jordan was driven back. The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs. What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest? thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back? Ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams; and, ye little hills, like lambs? Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob; which turned the rock into a standing water, the flint into a fountain of waters."—Ps. 114.

This most majestic Psalm is but the rehearsal of the miracles wrought by Israel's God for their deliverance from their bondage in Egypt. They seem to have been noted here to inspire faith in his yet future deliverance; when, in consummating his promise and oath to Abraham, he will shake not the earth only, but also heaven; that those things that cannot be shaken may remain. Hag. 2: 6; Heb. 12: 26, 27. The past deliverances are but so many pledges and precursors of the crowning glory of the final, universal deliverance that awaits our groaning creation.

There seems the highest reason for believing that the earth, with all its elemental forces for good, should be subservient to human welfare. For man was enthroned to have dominion; and though now "subject to vanity" by reason of sin, yet in the unfolding plan of redemption all things should concur, on occasion, to promote that end. The world was made for man (like the Sabbath), not man for the world. It was his servant, and never designed, except by Satan, to be his master.

The miraculous history of Israel and of Jesus and his gospel of salvation is reasonable, because God is good. He delighteth not in the death of the sinner, that he die; but rather that he "turn and live." Hence the call of mercy: "Turn ye, turn ye; for why will ye die?" Hence his intervention to arrest the prevailing idolatry by the call of Abraham, the exode of Israel, the promised Messiah, and the good news of "the restitution of all things spoken by all the prophets."

As unbelief in God and his gospel of Jesus Christ is but another word for trust in nature, the creature, or self, so every miracle arrests the course of nature (so far as it goes), confounds the creature, and humbles the pride of self. Note king Saul, Jeroboam and Ahab; nay, the Jews in their prolonged dispersion.

The final shaking—God's setting his hand "the second time"—will be but the consummation of his one grand purpose of mercy to man and earth. It will restore from sin and death, and from him that has the power of death—the devil. Then all will be again good, for ever and ever. Amen. Ps. 72; Heb. 2: 14; Rev. 21.

This sublime series of miracles to instruct, deliver and bless, which is to ultimate in complete redemption, is but one of the many that illustrate and establish it beyond all reasonable question. They are all in accord with the loving character and goodness of God; but based on the moral and responsible constitution of man, and that with reference to the great ends of moral government over the universe.

"The great day of God"—the year of recompense for the controversy of Zion—is here brought into view. "Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the God of Jacob." This scene opens "the second time" of Israel's deliverance. Isa. 11: 11. All prophecy announces the power of that coming day, when the second advent will surprise the world as the Divine presence did the seas and the hills, described here. This, taken in the light of revelation and its facts, commends itself to our understanding. For God made the day. He set its limits, and he has ordered its various changes so that there is a change daily, and that change goes on through about every day in the year from nine to fifteen hours. Hence, on occasion, his presence and power lengthen the day, as to Joshua, and to confirm his promise to Hezekiah. Josh. 10; 2 Chron. 32: 24–31. These facts give us the secret of this trembling. God's presence will be felt through all creation for its crowning miracle in the regeneration—the second genesis—in his day.

The popular drift is away from the doctrine of this crisis—this turning-point in the affairs of the world. But this ignores the most profound facts in human experience. Every age and nation has had its crisis, as it gave place to that which succeeded. "Thus it is written, and thus it must be" at the consummation of "the times of the Gentiles," and at the opening of "His times, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." Every human judicature, from the Court of Common Pleas to that of the Czar, the Pope, and the Grand Turk, pronounce judgment in their sphere.

Thus man, made upright, in "the image of God," exercises the prerogative which unbelief denies to his Creator—God. But as fallen man has abused his prerogatives in his administration of affairs, God has proclaimed the judgment—the crisis—the end of this world, and the inauguration of "that which is to come." Matt. 12: 31; Heb. 2: 5; Rev. 11: 15. But as some ask, "Where is the promise of his coming, and of the day of God?" I answer by rehearsing this impressive Psalm; the mountains have beaved, the rivers and seas have turned back, or fled, and all creation has bowed trembling at the presence of its God.

Take the trembling of the earth under the march of the foretold earthquake, from the days of Uzziah, the king of Judah, to that of the five hundred successive shocks in our day. What is human pride, pomp or power? What are cities, armies, emperors, in the presence of Him who has called on the earth to "tremble at his presence" in righteous judgment? They are as the feather to the tempest.

Thus there are varied lines of light that shine through all history, and demonstrate that miracles are as reasonable as creation. Man cares for the labor of his hands. Why should not God? Is it not from sheer blindness of mind to all history that any doubt "the judgment to come"? The command to repent sounds out to all men everywhere, in view of the coming judgment. It is not arbitrary, but in great mercy, that we may "flee from the wrath to come," come unto Christ—into his precious name, as a strong tower, where we may be safe. Acts 2: 38; 17: 31; Gal. 3: 26–29. The Christian is called to "the church of the first born"—to the honors of a crown in the coming kingdom. Amen.

SUPPLEMENT.—The following facts as to earthquakes may interest the reader, as given from careful writers:

Four destructive earthquakes prior to the Christian Era are on record. Fifty-three of like character are recorded through the first nine hundred years of our Era. Sixty more from the year 900 to 1500. One hundred from the year 1500 to 1800. Thence from 1800 to 1850 more than eight thousand are recorded of all grades.

In Matt. 24: 7, we find the prophecy of "earthquakes in divers places"; and its advancing and amplified verification is seen in the occurrence of an earthquake for every month from the year 1850 to 1868. Baron Von Humboldt says in his "Cosmos" that "if we could get all the intelligence daily, we should probably arrive at the conviction that the surface of the earth is always shaking at some point"! But a greater than he has told us that "we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain," awaiting deliverance. Rom. 8: 22. "Because the creature [the very creation—same word] itself also shall be DELIVERED from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

Our world awaits the regenesis—the regeneration. Matt. 19: 38. Hence, "the times of refreshing [re-animation] from the PRESENCE of the Lord," or the second coming of Christ at "the times of restitution [restoring] of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." Acts 3: 19–21.

Well does our text teach us to turn from the overwhelming impression made on the mountains, on the nations and on the waters by "the presence of God" to deliver Israel, to the crowning consummation of his promise—"Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob; who turned the rock into a standing water, the flint into a fountain of waters."

IT is a perilous thing to try to stand still in our consecration, and to think that because we "gave up" all once in our religious experience, we need not continue to give up all. Let us beware how we tie up our pound in a napkin, as did the unprofitable servant. And if the pound intrusted to us is gaining five pounds or ten pounds, still let us remember to say to the Lord, "Thy pound hath gained," and give all back to him. Thus doing, we may become fitted for greater things; God will be glorified, and we shall receive the blessed "Well done!" from the Lord.—Christian Advocate.

IF there are unobserved flowers in our path, the humblest eyes are most likely to find them, and the most prayerful knees to press out their perfume.

A SCRIPTURE DISCOURSE ON THE DESTRUCTION OF THE WICKED.

BY WM. [illegible]

"God is not the God of the dead, but of the living."—MATT. 22: 32.

This text is chosen as illustrative of the nature of death, for we read that "the wages of sin is death;" and if the text teaches the utter unconsciousness of the dead, it will illustrate the destruction of the wicked as complete and total. For if the first death is the penalty of Adamic sin, and is destructive of conscious existence, the second death being the final penalty of personal sin, must eternally obliterate the consciousness of being. And this is infinitely preferable to the doctrine of endless misery.

But let us consider the text: "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." These words were used by our Lord by way of argument to refute the Sadducean disbelief in the resurrection. The Sadducees could not dispute the truthfulness of these words, because they perceived a truism therein in harmony with their own view of death. But it may be asked, Wherein does the truism consist? And the only obvious answer is, that God is not the God of the dead, because they are utterly unconscious. For if they possessed the least consciousness, they would be living, and God would be their God, because "he is the God of the living."

To infer because God is not the God of the dead, and yet said to Moses, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," that they were not therefore dead, is a very [illegible]. For if it follows that they were not [dead], it would be fallacious to teach he is not the God of the dead, if they were more alive than dead. Besides, it contradicts Paul, who declared that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, with certain other Old Testament saints, all died in the faith; and if they died, they have remained dead ever since, or else had a resurrection. But this cannot be, because the apostle also declared that "they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. 11: 13–40. So they could not have been raised since they died, and therefore are numbered among the dead still. Therefore the text teaches the utter unconsciousness of the dead, and it is impossible to prove anything contrary thereto by it.

The argument of Christ with the Sadducees started with this proposition: "Now that the dead are raised"—not now that the dead are not dead! And then in proof thereof he said: "Even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." He then made the argument turn on the evident truthfulness of the statement, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." And the argument was so effective as proof of the future resurrection of the dead, that they were effectually silenced thereby.

The Sadducees believed in the unconsciousness of the dead, and so knew that God could not have spoken with reference to the dead condition of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for that would teach that he was the God of the dead. Hence it followed that as he could not have referred to their dead condition, that he used the present tense for the future, and referred to their future revival when he said: "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." So the force of the argument turned on the absolute unconsciousness of the dead, for otherwise their resurrection would not follow as a logical inference from the words offered in proof. For the point in dispute had no reference to the intermediate state, but to a future resurrection of the dead. The argument, therefore, turned on the fact admitted by the Sadducees and endorsed by Christ, that the dead are utterly unconscious, for any other view makes the argument fail to prove the proposition stated. Solomon defines the state of death where he says, "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything: neither have they any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love and their hatred and their envy are now perished, neither have they any more a portion forever in anything done under the sun." Eccl. 9: 4–6. And in verse 10, we read: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor nor wisdom, nor knowledge, in the grave [Heb., sheol; Greek, hades,] whither thou goest." This particular definition of death includes the attributes of the soul, and fully explains why God is not the God of the dead, because they are non-existent, or asleep in death. But we are met here by some with the cry of "soul-sleepers!" Well, if the friends of endless misery are reduced to such futile arguments, let them prove that man never loses his consciousness in natural sleep, for Inspiration has used sleep as a type of death.

Sneers, to have any force in argument, should not react against the sneerer. Because man is said to have no prominence above a beast, in the article of death, and we believe it, shall this be profanely stigmatized as a "beastly doctrine"? Such should not hypocritically profess to believe in the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, for said the preacher, "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath, so that man hath no preeminence above a beast. All go unto one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" Eccl. 3: 18–21.

Solomon is not alone in this estimate of the complete mortality of man, for the apostle Peter quotes Isaiah as saying, "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass." But if a man had an immortal soul, that would be his chief glory. But no; all the glory of man is as grass; transient, perishable, fleeting, dying. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. [illegible] 20. Beastly doctrine is it? But the opposite of this was what the serpent of the garden of Eden taught to Eve. "He said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die: [illegible] doth know that in the day [illegible] then your eyes [illegible] be as gods knowing good and evil." Did he tell the truth? Christ said "he was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar, and the father of it." John 8: 44.

If the penalty of sin was physical death, then the serpent, by tempting mother Eve by his gilded lie, became a murderer by bringing death upon mankind, but not if spiritual death was the penalty. But the penalty was not to be inflicted in the day they ate of "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil," for in that case the adverb then would have been used thus: "For in the day that thou eatest thereof then thou shalt surely die." But it not being used, it only signifies that the penalty was to be incurred in the day they ate thereof, for Adam did not die till he was "nine hundred and thirty years" [old]. Gen. 5: 5. And if he died then actually [and] utterly, his death proved that the [serpent lied], and was the author of the beastly [li]e, "Thou shalt not surely die." And [this wi]ll account for the fact that so many [are dece]ived by the doctrine of the natural [immort]ality of the human soul, the deception being implanted in human nature, when mother Eve was deceived thereby.

Sheol, hades and hell are synonyms for the general receptacle of the dead, for the Greek rendering of the Hebrew word sheol is hades, which the Lexicon defines as "the unseen;" and hell means that which is hidden or covered. The dead are hidden in the invisible sleep of death; they sleep in the dust of the earth, destined to awake again. "The rich man died and was buried." Luke 16. But while dying he was partially "in hades" or hell, and while under the somnambulic condition that attends death, he could have held that seeming conversation with Abraham [illegible] in vision "Lazarus in his bosom." But this he could not have done after he was dead, "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything." "For there is no work nor device nor wisdom nor knowledge in hades whither thou goest." And as this was where the rich man went, if he had knowledge when he was entering in, he must have lost it all when he got there, so that his experience must have preceded instead of followed death.

Paul speaks of being "absent from the body" and "present with the Lord." 2 Cor. 5: 8. But the connection shows that he had reference to the body that he was "at home in," which was this mortal body. So he simply wanted to vacate that corruptible tenement he was born with and move into the new one, and so be present with the Lord in the incorruptible and resurrected body. For he says in that connection, "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." To be unclothed or have the body divested of its mortal life, was not therefore what he desired, but to be clothed upon with immortality, which he himself hath shown is not to be accomplished until the last trump. 1 Cor. 15: 50–57. 1 Thess. 4: 13–18.

Paul said, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour; yet what I shall choose I wot not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." Phil. 1: 21–24. But the words "to depart" are from the original "to analusia," literally "the unloosing." He desired the unloosing from the mortal condition and to be with Christ in the future resurrection body, and death would obliterate the intervening time, and so be gain to him.

The souls under the altar cried, "How long, O Lord!" etc. Rev. 6: 10. Well, the blood of Abel cried to God from the ground. Gen. 5: 10. If the souls under the altar were conscious for that reason, then by parity of reasoning the blood of Abel was conscious. But if this does not follow, neither does the other. Did not Job say that in the grave "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary be at rest"? Did he not say that man giveth up the ghost and where is he? Did he not say that man lieth down in death, and riseth not, till the heavens be no more; they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep?" Chap. 14. Does he not say also, "If a man die, shall he live again?" How can he live again unless death puts a period to his existence first? And how can he speak of the dead being raised out of their sleep if their soul is not unconscious? The body does not sleep, for that moulders back to dust. Then it is the soul that sleeps the unconscious sleep of death. Therefore, as death is real, God is not the God of the dead, because they are unconscious.

A SMILE costs the giver nothing, yet it is beyond price to the erring and repenting, the sad and cheerless, the lost and forsaken. It disarms malice, subdues temper, turns enmity to love, revenge to kindness, and paves the darkest paths with gems of sunlight.

In the wilderness of sorrow, temptation and care, Jesus often goes forth to meet and converse with his people; and when he meets with them, he speaks to their hearts.

THE IRON AND CLAY.

BY FRANK BURR.

In examining the description of the image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, as given in Dan. 2, it will be seen that the portions which form the different elements of the [illegible] are each intact, or unmingled. [illegible] the silver was separate [illegible] there was no silver in the [illegible]. So in the iron and [illegible], there was [illegible] commingled, or [illegible] of the territory of the iron portion in order to bring in the additional element of clay. No protuberance upon the feet, as formed by clay fastened upon the iron, but rather the iron is displaced in portions in order to make place for the clay. This is undoubtedly the territory of the old Roman kingdom divided into parts, yet intact to the extent that the various governments within its boundaries are united in their various national operations, which has been the case from the time the division took place until now. The iron and clay represent actual governments on the old Roman territory, and these governments clinging together in one common interest and combining to overthrow revolutions, and preserve the old Roman boundaries from being possessed by any foreign powers. This was the case in the Napoleonic revolution, when they combined to overthrow his ambitious designs.

The present crisis also shows the same unity of purpose, as was also shown in the Crimean war. The various powers of Europe that occupy the ground of the old Roman boundaries, are combined to prevent Russia, a power outside of these boundaries, from slicing off a piece of the territory and causing it to become more particularly under her own patronage. The iron and clay governments seem yet to agree in their understanding with regard to Russia, and the English government is a leader among them. It is very probable that Russia will not be permitted to obtain any foothold which will give her a possession of a portion of Europe that was included within the old Roman boundaries, nor will she be permitted to so fasten herself upon the feet of iron and clay as to become an excresence, or an enlargement thereof.

The iron and clay must remain intact and without protuberances, until the stone strikes them. Then, and not until then, are they to be broken in pieces.

THE JUDGMENT.

BY O. S. MERRILL.

Reader, do you realize the fact that the judgment is impending? Are you living as those that must give an account? "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in the body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

Reader, Christ will come; the judgment will set, and the books will be opened. Are you ready for the solemn hour? Are you ready to hail with sweet delight the coming of the Son of man? If not, make haste to meet thy God; prepare for that grand, that glorious, yet awful day.

"That fearful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste,
When you must stand before the Judge,
And pass the solemn test."

But now, while time lasts and mercy lingers, you have the opportunity to prepare for the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Soon, very soon, he will rise up and shut to the door, and then mercy is clean gone forever. Think of it! Mercy gone, the day of probation ended! No "age to come," no salvation for man—rebellious, unrepentant human souls. This life, this age. No other.

Reader, friend, precious one, I invite you thus because of the words of Jesus, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." O, then, come; accept the blessed invitation. Come, enter rest through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Come this day, this hour, this moment. No matter what you are, or what you have been; none have been so low in sin but the dear Lord with his arm of strength and heart of love can reach you, and bring you up on high and holy ground; can wash and make you clean, every whit whole, "as white as wool." "The blood of Jesus Christ his [God's] Son cleanseth us from all sin." "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Confess, forsake, be clean, be righteous. Be ready for the judgment, all ready to meet Jesus at his coming and kingdom.

FAITH IN CHRIST.

It is blessed to have faith in any being who is worthy of confidence, and the riches of the experience of faith will correspond to the perceived excellence, the benevolence, and the ability of that being. The promises of God pledge to believers eternal and exhaustless good, as great as their natures will enable them to receive. They are all "yea and amen in Christ," and can bring in them to us no more of divinity than we apprehend in him. With the eye of our faith open upon God revealed to us in Jesus, we dwell in that light which can come only from the Divine Mind; with our hearts stayed on him, "the peace of God which passeth understanding, keeps our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus;" anchoring our being in him by faith, we outride all the storms of earth, and are nearest heaven when on the crest of the topmost wave; with our ear open to him, his word is a sword which cleaves down every foe, or a fountain whose living waters well up and lave and refresh our whole being, and cool the fever of sin; walking with him, we are in ways of pleasantness and paths of peace; sitting at his feet, our pride is consumed by the glory of his meekness and lowliness of mind; seeing in our duty his will, it is the very elixir of privilege to do it; casting the burden of our sins upon his mercy, they are gone forever. But alas! if our faith does not find him manifested, all this is lost; the frosts of sin are not dissolved, and the vibrations of heavenly joy cannot reach our hearts.—Rev. Wm. L. [illegible]

[illegible] YOUR HEARTS.

BY [illegible]

Not upon human opinion merely; that is subject to great shrinkage. Not upon error, for mercy's sake; enough are glued there already. Then upon what? The Word of the Lord—the Bible—nothing else.

Among the "perilous times" of these last days—the shifting sands of human thought; the breakers of unbelief, right and left; the many false lights here and there; and that mirage of the devil where everything appears the reverse of what it means—God keeps the old beacon light burning. My soul, what could we do without it? That light you may reckon on with entire safety for guidance into the eternal port. By making observations with the Spirit's compass, which you will take good care to have on board, minding also that no foreign metal is contained in the cargo, there are no fogs in existence that you need to slacken your speed for, for the chart contains the "sure word of prophecy" giving us due warning of every danger on the course. Who does not want to "ship" under such safe and heavenly regulations?

Yet how hard it appears for some to make the Bible their guide in precept and doctrine; they are looking in all directions for something that is more according to reason. Well, it is not surprising; if a man has no faith, he will be likely to need something to stand on. But if a person is full of God-given faith, it makes the best foundation by far. There is nothing that can shake it. Forked lightnings of persecution may dance with devilish glee around it; the billows of affliction may submerge it and chill it with even a crust of ice, yet when Jehovah brushes away the storm, and the rays of the Everlasting Sun touch it, all these things melt away and reveal the same old "Solid Rock," unscattered!

Not so of brain work. Alas! how sandy the foundation. They appear strong enough in fair weather, but how great the fall when the sand goes out!

Friends, do not hearken too much to fair-weather preachers. Never mind the Ingersolls. Steal down beside the dying bed of an old saintly woman. Bend low. Catch the whispers, and let them sink into your soul, and act! Better to listen there than in the halls of fair-weather orators. Look not for better evidences of the genuineness of Christianity than these circumstances and the Bible affords. No more revelation to come until he—the Son of man—is revealed from heaven. Think well, act better.

APPROVED OF GOD.—2 Tim. 2: 15.

BY S. W. LEMON.

It is a great thing to be humble enough to be taught by the Spirit of God; to find the narrow way, and then to travel onward with steady step. We need an enlightened religion arising from conviction, so that we can listen to such teaching as the Spirit of God presses home to the teachable, humble soul.

The religion of the present time is an easy-minded religion, without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice, in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love; —a religion that may be marked by excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness that it is not approved of God.

How broad the commandments of the Lord are! Covetousness is idolatry. He that hateth his brother is a murderer. He that looketh with an evil eye is an adulterer. He that biddeth God-speed to the man that preacheth any other doctrine than that of Jesus Christ, is partaker of his evil deeds. Is it our only aim to please God? Christ should be our standard. We are only so far Christianized as we are like Christ. He says, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart." The life of Jesus is the model after which the Spirit works. It is to conform us to him. The true Christian's study is to be like Christ. Am I called to suffer? I must seek grace to suffer as he did. Am I called to work in his vineyard? Let me ask, How did Christ work?

We can be more like Jesus if we study to show ourselves approved of God. Of one thing we may be assured, this study will lead us to the cross. It will cause us to crucify self, and it will let the light of God's Word shine in our hearts, "teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." Let us get nearer God, and receive from him fresh supplies of grace every day, and let us watch more closely over our words and thoughts. Let us strive a little harder to overcome evil with good, exercising more faith. Then shall we receive a crown of life in that glad morning when the Son of God shall come. O, what joy will be ours when we stand on Mt. Zion's lofty heights among the redeemed of God! Our eyes will behold the King in his beauty, and we shall hear his voice and be led by his own loving hand; and we shall join in ascribing blessing and honor unto the Lamb who died that we, through him, might be approved unto God.

"SHADOWS ON THE NATION."

Shadows are evidently gathering over the nations of earth, sending a thrill of sorrow to the hearts of great and far-seeing politicians. The most intellectual and sober men in the political, ecclesiastical, financial, social and scientific world, who carefully view the progression of all things in these departments, express fearful forebodings of coming calamitous changes. Jesus expressed it, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." The men who exercise the most independent thought, and occupy the most advantageous positions for observation express these fears most boldly. The late Senator Sumner possessed a mind and occupied a position to make him as good a judge of the immediate future of this nation as any man living. He is reported by a Pennsylvania paper as saying to friends whom he met on a social occasion:

"'Ah, I won't live to see it, but you will, gentlemen; you will if you live to be as old as I am now; you will see the streets of our cities run with blood, and the blood will be the blood of our own people.' The special cause of Mr. Sumner's despondency is alleged to have been the evidences of political corruption which he discerned on every hand, and worst of all, in his own Massachusetts, which he said had always been so loyal to all that is good in a good Government."—Boston Journal.

We have been preaching and publishing such things for many years, but the world has looked upon us as visionary fanatics. We obtained our evidence from the prophetic Scriptures, and Mr. Sumner from the political situation. The prophecies, when in process of fulfillment, must agree with the circumstances foretold; therefore, two conclusions legitimately drawn from the prophecies and situation must agree.

The Word of God clearly teaches that a great slaughter of humanity will take place at the end of the Gospel, reaching "from one end of the earth unto the other end of the earth," when "every man's sword shall be against his brother." All nations must drink of this deadly cup. Such a war will not come causelessly, but events must gather around which will result in the terrible fray. Those events become the signs of the times to the prophetic expositor, and cause the hearts of worldly men to fail for fear. Senator Sumner only expressed of this nation what the wisest statesmen of all nations express in relation to their governments. Deep rooted corruption in human society is cropping out everywhere, from the mightiest empires to the smallest families. Jealousy and faction are becoming the ruling elements of this generation. Artful, intrigueing men, extortioners, libertines, blood-thirsty aristocrats and tyrants are everywhere striving to grasp the reins of government, and crush with heavy hand all who oppose them. A government is in the last stages of consumption when its principle offices are filled by intrigue and bribery.

Rome lost her liberty and government when the political element became so corrupted that her imperial and subordinate offices were purchased by money, or filled by the dictation of soldiers, or by the intrigue of factious parties. So it must be with all other governments. A nation is on the high road to ruin when it becomes fashionable or customary for its officers of trust to sell their official power to the highest bidders, so that the love of money becomes the ruling element of the nation. Then the monied corporations and aristocrats will so control the legislatures and courts, as to oppress the lower classes, who are always a large majority, and who will in an emergency count on their superior strength, and rise in bloody revolution to obtain their rights.

These principles have always been the leading cause of all internal war and revolution. No man in this nation understood these principles and their inevitable results better than did Mr. Sumner. He was unlike many of our legislators, who have had no particular training in the science of political economy; for he was thoroughly educated in that department, and comprehended well the principles which strengthen and those which destroy a government.

It is a painful thought that this great nation should so soon become so divided into factious parties, and its rulers so dishonest and corrupt, and its citizens so demoralized, that its wisest statesman and most enlightened people should forebode immediate bloodshed and revolution. But when we consider that the day of the Lord is at hand, when all the nations must be overwhelmed in the bloody conflicts of the last battle, it is not surprising that the youngest of the great nations should so early mature into ripened depravity.

The doom and destruction of all nations is evidently just before us, and may we have wisdom, so as not to be caught in any of their coils, depending upon, or engaged in any of their anti-gospel and fruitless sensational and spasmodic movements to reform society. Christ never sent scoffing worldly men to lead his people in any gospel work of reformation. Do not let Satan deceive you by thinking that you can do more good by going outside of the gospel with unbelievers than you can by the gospel with God's people. God has instituted the best possible means to save the world; and when those means become [illegible]ffectual to secure good society, and w[illegible] threatens to produce revolutio[illegible]ly try something new of [illegible] and sink in the trial.

If God scuttled the ship of State, and she is absolutely in a sinking condition and must go down, we only endanger the lives of the passengers when we make a show of putting in new pumps, and give encouragement that she can be saved. A true friend of humanity, under such circumstances, would faithfully give the alarm, and exhort all to immediately put on life-preservers and man the boats. So we would say to all that the old ship bearing humanity over the boisterous sea of time is fast sinking, while the storm is raging fearfully, and every moment adds to the danger of the awful position.

But amid the howling tempest and foaming waves, hope still lives; for there alongside of the sinking ship lays a life-boat, in which sits the virgin church, meek and calm, lifting her sweet voice in emphatic tones of assurance and invitation, beckoning all to come on board, and be safely carried to the stormless shore of the eternal Eden of rest. J. C.

"STRIVE NOT ABOUT WORDS."

There are two kinds of strife. One is to "strive lawfully," the other is to "strive about words to no profit." To strive is to make great efforts with earnestness,—"to labor hard"—"to struggle in opposition." We do not strive without some strong motive power propelling us in the exertion. This power comes from two sources, usually. It comes from either love and good-will, or from combativeness or enmity and hatred. Men in a state of nature are excited to earnest acts by an influence from the two sources. A father might earnestly labor to save his son from evil because he loved him, and strive just as earnestly to defame and injure his neighbor because he hated him. But when men become Christians, they are restricted from the earnest acts produced by the power of rivalry or contention, and are only allowed to be stimulated by love and a desire to benefit.

Men contend more about little things than great matters. They contend more about "words" than principles,—more about the manner of speaking, than the matter spoken of. One man has been trained to represent a subject in a certain way, another man describes the same thing differently, and they contend about the matter and become angry as if they were advocating radically different principles, when their difference is only in words and not in sentiments.

When Christians allow themselves to indulge in strife upon any subject with the spirit of rivalry, hatred or revenge, they violate a sacred principle of the Gospel, and commence a course of backsliding from God. When this strife about words is allowed in meetings of worship, their winning, saving influence is invariably lost. When a religious paper is made the medium of carnal strife about questions which angels could not settle, and abstractions which cause men to play on words and attempt to explain what they do not understand, producing alienation, contention and war, its usefulness in the cause of truth and salvation is destroyed.

Good articles are sometimes destroyed by a few sentences which are personal; other writer's words quoted and thrown into their faces in an unkind manner. Such things tend to alienate brethren, harden sinners, and defame Christ. A person holding an error (and who can say that he has none?) is much more easily convinced of it by showing him the truth upon the subject in its beauty, and in a loving, kind way, than by making his error appear hideous, and representing him as very foolish and wicked for holding it.

Let all who would do good study human nature, and understand that if we would save men, we must win and draw them as the "serpent" charms, and not attempt to drive and dictate them. If any speak, write, or do anything to others with a desire to injure their feelings or reputation, they are moved by a wrong spirit, and should rid themselves of it by earnest prayer and constant watchfulness to guard against it. The Spirit of Christ produces but one motive, and that is to benefit men in all we do in our associations with them. It never produces rivalry or retaliation.

May God grant us much of the divine Spirit and a fullness of heavenly love, which will conquer self, restrain from evil, and prompt us with a mighty energy to do good unto all men. J. C.

BRO. GEO. W. WRIGHT, Lexington, Mich., writes, June 5th:—"Dear Bro. Couch,—I have been making aggressive efforts in a new field for the past three weeks; and, although only ten miles from Lexington, in visiting from house to house one mother told me she had not heard a sermon for eleven years; and one young married woman, twenty-one years of age, never heard a sermon till she came to our meeting three weeks ago. We are having a glorious revival. I baptized eight last Sunday, as part of the fruit. I return to-day, and expect to organize a church of fifteen members, and still there are more to follow. We are looking forward with deep interest to our Campmeeting, commencing June 22nd."

THE I[illegible] OF CRIME.—No. 7.

[illegible]

The [illegible] says: "Very few persons [illegible] night, or wake in the night [illegible] without thinking of the bull[illegible]ssin. The whole country is in a state of apprehension and alarm." Aug. 10, 1876.

The Times (N. Y.), under the head of "Killing no Murder," refers to "the frightful increase in the number of violent crimes, etc.," and declares that "human life is as insecure in this boasted civilization of the nineteenth century as in semi-savage times." Jan. 26, 1876.

The Church Union says: "The recent Report of the Prison Association of New York (city) exhibits statistics showing the constant increase of crime among children since our civil war. During the past year over nine thousand were committed under twenty years of age." Sept. 22, 1877.

The Observer (N. Y.), writing of "American Banditti," says: "The atrocity, the brutal recklessness with which human life is sacrificed by the American brigands, exceeds that of the old-world villains, in all the annals of Italian and Greek brigandage." Sept. 14, 1875.

The Kemper Herald (Miss.) says: "From the Alabama line to the Mississippi River, and from the sea-coast to the Tennessee line, all kinds of crimes are being daily committed." Murder, torture, etc., are instanced. January, 1878.

Anthony Comstock says that in five years past twenty tons of obscene matter had been seized and destroyed, and that "the year past had yielded more evidence of this terrible evil in the highest institutions for the education of the young than any previous year." Boston Journal, March 28, 1878.

The Christian Advocate says: "The Carnival of blood seems to rage as fiercely as ever. We have a veritable dance of death in our midst. Everywhere it is blood,—a fearful state of affairs." January, 1878.

The Watchman and Reflector says: "The sea of crime, always beating and surging and roaring around us, has lifted itself to an unusual height, and is deepening its thunderings." 1875.

The Christian Union says: "It is not to be denied that corruption, both in private and public life, is lamentably frequent, an[d] crime of every grade abounds." Nov., 18[illegible]

The Post (N. Y.) says, under the [illegible] of "Bloody Days": "The rate at which [illegible] are running up a list of murders and assassinations is fearful. Every day brings a new recital more terrible than that of the day before, and no voice of power cries Hold." May 17, 1872.

Governor John Dix of New York says: "The alarming increase in frequency of the crime of murder in Albany and its environs demands serious attention. Scarcely a day passes without witnessing a brutal and in many instances a fatal assault upon unoffending individuals." Message, Jan., '72.

The Christian Statesman, in an article on "Barbarism or the Millennium," asserts that there is danger of our country relapsing into barbarism, rushing to it as the avalanche dashes down the mountain side. Nov., 1874.

The Times (N. Y.) says there is a growing lawlessness of our people, and a reckless disregard of human life, evidently increasing at a most fearful rate in every part of the land. "None can deny the fact that the vulgar crowd now govern the land." November, 1871.

The Herald (Boston) says: "Men tremble for themselves and the country; crime is sweeping through every avenue of society and making fearful wrecks in all ranks. The knife, the bullet, or the subtle poison of the assassin is at work day and night all over the land." February, 1872.

The Detroit Post says: "The city of New York is under the control of its dangerous classes." February, 1872.

The Louisville Ledger (Ky.) alleges the commission of forty or fifty murders, and as many more outrages in Southern Indiana, and says: "The devil seems to be having it pretty much his own way there, fulfilling the prophecy, 'Satan is loosed for a season.'"

The Chicago Tribune, Nov. 27th, 1871, calls attention to "the unusual prevalence of crime in the country, the daily perpetration of murders, assassinations, burglaries, and brutal assaults, and the lax administration of justice which permits crime to go unchecked. . . . Human life was never considered of so little value as now." 1872.

The Post (N. Y.) says: "Profanity is on the increase. The use of the most shocking profanity is more observable than it used to be; it pervades almost all classes." 1872.

A London letter writer to the Cincinnati Gazette quotes the homicides in our land in 1872 as numbering 2060, and says: "Every body here, in London, has made up his mind that our love of money has ruined us, and that we—the American people—are going straight to the devil." Jan. 11, 1872.

BURLEIGH, Sept. 25th, 1877, said: "One of the new and alarming features of the day is the resort to violence to redress personal wrongs. If a man has an altercation with a neighbor, somebody's barn is burned down. This virus has got into the churches." Boston Journal.

Of California TOBY CANDOR writes, Sept. 24, 1877: "Juvenile depravity is on the increase, and the army of hoodlums is gaining recruits every day." Journal.

The Witness (Montreal) says: "There is a painful feeling manifest in the community, that, in spite of all the efforts of the officers of the law, crimes of violence, in which a lust for blood and revenge appears to be the impelling motive, have multiplied rapidly since July, 1876." Nov. 15, 1877.

Judge C. D. McNamara, charging a Grand Jury in Carroll Co., Kentucky, last November, said: "The blood of the slain cries for justice everywhere. Human life in this State is not worth the snappings of a man's finger. The finger ends of many men who go unpunished are dripping with the gore of their victims. Acres of grass grow on the graves of the murdered men in my District." The Courier Journal declares the Judge does not exaggerate the situation in the least. Boston Journal, Nov. 10, 1877.

The North American declares "our cities are rapidly descending to the level of Sodom and Gomorrah." 1877.

The Scientific American says: "It is admitted by all parties that crimes of the most outrageous character abound throughout the country to a degree wholly unparalleled." Crisis, November, 1877.

The General Convention of the Episcopal Church (at Boston, Oct., 1877) "Resolved, Whereas, forgeries, and other equally glaring frauds now superabound in high places, extending even to the trusted ones in Church and State," etc. New York Witness, Oct. 24th, 1877.

In a speech at Augusta, Me., Jan. 22nd, 1878, Gen. James A. Hall said, "From the daily paper which he took, he learned that during the month of November, 1877, in nine States—Maine, N. H., Mass., Conn., N. Y., Penn., Ohio, Ind., and Ill.—thirteen wives were brutally murdered by drunken husbands, many of these cases being of a most revolting nature. In December, 1877, in the same nine States, there were seventeen murders, every one caused by rum."

The Grand Jury of Toronto, Ont., "refer to the fact that crime in its most atrocious aspect is fast developing itself in Canada." Attacking ladies and children, abortion, obscene literature, etc., are named. Witness, (N. Y.), Nov. 5, 1877.

In a county in New York, one Margaret, ninety years ago, became the mother, grandmother, etc., of six hundred and twenty-three criminals, lunatics, paupers, idiots, prostitutes, etc. In one generation of her descendants, out of seventeen children, nine served in the State's Prison. She bred two hundred hard[illegible]inals, and her criminal progeny had co[st th]e State $100,000.

In an article on the "Increase of Crime," Boston Journal, Dec. 27th, 1873, its editor said, "Crime has increased very much faster than population in New England, and the worst kinds of crime seem to have become particularly prolific. There has been a great change in New England." Even so, alas!

The Church Journal (N. Y.) said: "Our Centennial year has thus far been over the land a carnival of crime"! Feb. 17, 1876.

Rev. Mr. Dunn, of Boston, said Sunday, May 26th, in preaching on the Commune: "Vice and irreligion, in all our cities and large towns, are washing away the soil from beneath the lowest courses of the social fabric. Let this undermining process go on till a convulsion come, and no power on earth can keep the pyramid from toppling over, burying institutions, and altars, and homes in a common RUIN"! Journal, May 27, 1878.

Yes, and it will go on; there is no hope [illegible] of reform. I am done with [illegible] of crime. My readers have [illegible]ugh supped on horrors. All men [illegible] know and feel that our times grow worse and worse. The Lord is at the door. Make ready for the Judge of all the earth, who comes in wrath to punish all sin and crime.

THE CONGRESS OF NATIONS.

It is now pretty sure that there will be a Congress of Nations in Europe, commencing probably at Berlin, June 11th. Prospectively, one may be justified in saying it will be the most important gathering of political men that have been together since the Congress of Vienna, Sept. 26th, 1815, when the Holy Alliance was formed by Alexander I., Emperor of Russia, Francis of Austria, and king Frederick William III., of Prussia; and afterwards accepted by the other principal governments of Europe, except Rome, England and France. Then they made a new map of Europe, and now they propose to make another. The present aspect of things indicates that it will be very difficult to secure a harmonious arrangement of existing troubles. There is good reason to believe that Russia consents to the present Congress for the sake of securing more time to prepare for the war with England.

The Congress may occupy the summer so far that fresh hostilities may not be opened before autumn, and possibly not till another spring; but the probability that the Congress will secure permanent peace is very small. It is more likely to produce some new bone of contention, than to put an end to the bloody strife. It is expected that Bismarck, the great war lion, will preside at the Congress. Interests of great magnitude [illegible] involved. M. G.

CHICAGO.—Bro. D. Mathewson is now pastor of the church at 91 South Green St., Chicago, and has a fair prospect of good success. A new and healthy interest is being awakened, and some who have been like sheep frightened from the fold are returning and finding good pastures. Members of other churches are attending and becoming interested in the meetings. Bro. Mathewson is to baptize to-morrow, June 2d. Bro. M. Batchelor has been spending a few weeks with his son-in-law in Chicago, and is looking quite fresh. He fed the church with some excellent gospel preaching. He is all alive in the service of his divine Master, ardently longing to see him coming in all his glory, and hoping to live till the arrival of the hour when the sorrows of the saints will come to a perpetual end. LET US APPEAL TO THE BIBLE.

BY C. E. BARNES.

In The Watchman for May 16th, is a very readable editorial entitled, "Let us appeal to the Bible," in which the proclivity of Baptists to adhere to the plain teachings of the inspired Word is set forth by way of contrast to others who do not thus "appeal to the Bible." Upon reading the items in the next column, I was greatly surprised and somewhat amused to find the following instance of readiness to admit as Bible language what was not penned until a comparatively recent date. The item was as follows:

"We find in an exchange the following, quoted from the Rev. Robert Collyer:

'Solomon may slip in with his cruel maxim of 'Spare the rod, and spoil the child'; he has no business about my place while my children are tender. I can no more be hard on them than Jesus could. If I hurt them in this evil way, I hurt those who are of the kingdom of heaven. My gray hairs have brought me this wisdom (and woe is me I should be so wise!) that the unpardonable sin is to be hard on a tender child.'

For a Unitarian, with 'free and easy' views as to the divine inspiration of Scripture, it may be consistent to treat in such a way the words of 'holy men' who 'spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,' but evangelical editors should no more quote than they would originally utter such language."

Familiar as both Mr. Collyer and the editor of The Watchman are with English literature, and familiar with Biblical language as they ought to be, it seems strange that the one should quote as Solomon's words what he never said, and that the other should tacitly assent to the quotation as correct. The sentence, "Spare the rod, and spoil the child," is from the humorous poem of Samuel Butler, Esq., entitled "Hudibras," which was written some two centuries ago. The connection in which the sentence occurs is this:

"Love is a boy by poets styl'd,
Then spare the rod, and spoil the child."
Part 2, Canto 1, v. 843, 4.

The extract quoted from Mr. Collyer shows indeed the liberty he would have taken if Solomon had said what be imputed to him, and therefore the criticism of The Watchman is not out of place, but to ascribe to Solomon what was written by an English poet suggests the thought that before assenting to supposed Biblical quotations, it will be well to heed The Watchman's counsel, "Let us appeal to the Bible."

THE TRACT FUND.

It is a well known fact that we are living in perilous times, and it behooves us who are looking for the return of the Master to be up and doing.

This Society has been and is now publishing Tracts upon the coming of the Lord which are especially adapted to the times in which we live, and we wish to circulate them as extensively as we possibly can. We have now given away a larger amount in Tracts than our funds would warrant, and consequently we are out of funds for this object.

We now appeal to all who are able, to assist us by contributing to the Tract Fund, which will enable us to send out Tracts in new and poor places, thereby getting the truth before the people, and be the means of saving some before it is too late, and also gaining another star for the crown that awaits those who are accounted worthy to enter the kingdom.

Brethren and friends, let us be up and doing; let us attend to this matter without delay. Time is short, and what we do must be done quickly. Send all contributions to OZIAS GOODRICH, Box 5140, Boston, Mass.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS IN WISCONSIN.

As Bro. Miles Grant intends to be at the Campmeetings in Wisconsin in June, we want our subscribers who are owing for the Crisis to make extra efforts to pay their bills to him at these meetings. Also, all can renew, and new ones subscribe at the same time. Now, brethren and friends, we know these are hard times, but we want you to do the best you can, and if you will only do what you can, it will assist us very much. Also, all who owe for the Young Pilgrim, or wish to subscribe for it, can do so by paying it to Bro. Grant. You will be sure it will come all right, and you will not run the risk of losing it in the mails. AGENT.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS IN IOWA.

As Bro. John Couch, Editor of the World's Crisis, intends to be at the Campmeetings in Iowa, in June, we want our subscribers who are owing for the Crisis to make extra efforts to pay their bills to him at these meetings. Also all can renew, and new ones subscribe at the same time. Now, brethren and friends, we know it is hard times, but we want you to do the best you can, and if you will only do what you can, it will assist us very much. Also, all who owe for the Young Pilgrim, or wish to subscribe for it, can do so by paying it to Bro. Couch. You will be sure it will come all right, and you will not run the risk of losing it in the mails. AGENT.

ELDER A. W. SIBLEY will act as Agent for the World's Crisis at Beebe Plain Campmeeting. AGENT.

ELDER GEO. A. STREETER'S post office address until further notice will be Massena, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y.

FROM H. L. STEVENS.

Dear Bro. Couch:—Thinking that some of the dear ones in Christ would like to hear from this part of the Master's vineyard, and to hear of my faith, whether I have denied "the faith" or not, I write. I will give the points that I hold to be essential to true Christianity. 1. Repentance. 2. A holy walk. 3. To look for Jesus daily, who will accomplish his work on the earth. He will raise the dead saints, change the living saints, first; after which he will destroy the wicked. Then we shall witness the scene which John saw; a new earth surrounded by new heavens, where we shall be "forever with the Lord." I say, "Amen, so let it be."

Anything more? Please let me know. I am a truth-seeker? I am one of Africa's sons; served as a slave sixteen years; have had a poor chance to acquire an education since, being compelled to study at night, which has weakened my sight. But I thank God that it is as well with me as it is. I have my Bible, and can let it lie on an open shelf, or any other conspicuous place. Whereas, when I was a boy, there were nocturnal fellows (patrol guards) who went about at night to set things aright, who would take the Holy Bible from us, and sometime burn it up, and then whip us.

What a change! Glorious change! Have I not a right to serve God with gladness? Shall I ever deny the faith revealed to us in the Book which was kept from us for two hundred and forty-five years? (I mean to say that it was kept from my ancestors that that time.) I have no desire to go back into Egypt, to eat the fish, the cucumbers, the melons, the leeks, the onions and the garlic, and to work in the brick-yards for naught. I wish to press forward for the prize that will soon, I hope, be given to all of the faithful.

I have just read with much interest an article in the Crisis by Bro. L. T. Cunningham, denouncing the attempt to prove Antiochus Epiphanes to be the little horn of Dan. 8. I consider such an attempt to drift back into orthodoxy, to be seeking popularity. I think it better to preach, "Behold, he cometh." "Be ye also ready." It is well to search out the blessed prophecy, "but not to doubtful disputation." Education is good if used aright, but I think some of our band would be better off without any. We have none, comparatively speaking. Down here, we teach the people and they believe.

Bro. I. C. Wellcome often writes of the sacrifices made by ministers. I will state my case. I have to board myself at $9 per month, clothe and shoe myself, look after a dear old mother, and preach the gospel FREE. Pioneers don't make fortunes while preaching a doctrine that condemns the world. I don't see how I shall preach and bear up much longer, as I have lost my position of dependence. But I trust in Jehovah.

Aspinwall, Vt., June 4th.

A CHINESE paper states that Rev. T. Richard of Chefoo, owing to the kindness displayed by Christians during the famine last season, has over four hundred religious inquirers, none of whom were recipients of the bounty distributed, but who were led to think that the religion that prompted the charity must be more than human.

"THE TIMES OF REFRESHING."
Acts 3: 19.

BY A. W. SIBLEY.

This phrase, as found in this chapter, has been subjected to various criticisms and theological twistings, and no doubt cramped by many from the intended meaning of the inspired writer. Notwithstanding the phrase has been thus treated, and conclusions arrived at wholly unwarranted in the Word of God, yet it has not lost any of its original beauty, neither has its truth been obliterated or tarnished in the least degree; but it remains uncontaminated, and stands out as boldly as ever.

That we may clearly understand the idea of the divine writer in this phrase, allow me to call the attention of the reader to the definition of the term "refreshing" in the text, as given by standard authorities. Says a writer: "The term anapsuxis, from which we have 'refreshing' in English, occurs but once in the New Testament, and is defined as follows: 'A cooling, refreshing, respite, rest, recreation, reviving.'" Another writer says: "It is derived from ana, again, and psuzo, 'to breathe, to cool, to refresh.' Its primary meaning—'a breathing again'—is evidently its meaning in the case before us. It implies a recovering of breath—a breathing again; and, as this is a sign of life, A LIVING AGAIN."

That this is the true meaning of the term "refreshing," the following translations and authorities show:

Dr. E. Burton translates the passage as follows: "That you may see the times which which the Lord has appointed—the resurrection to eternal life."

Dr. Samuel Clarke—"The times when ye shall be cheered and revived, and abundantly satisfied with the presence and enjoyment of God at the last day."

Dr. Whitby says: "The expression refers to the time of Christ's second coming to give unto all his servants rest with him, which he will do by raising them from the dead."

Says Dean Alford: "No other meaning, it seems to me, will suit the words but that of the times of refreshment—the great season of joy and rest, which it was understood the coming of the Messiah in his glory was to bring with it."

Chrysostom, Olshausen and Meyer: "Of refreshing; the expression evidently refers to the second coming of the Lord."

Says Albert Barnes: "The word rendered 'refreshing' means properly the breathing or refreshment, after being heated with labor, running, etc. It hence denotes any kind of refreshment, as rest, or deliverance from evils of any kind."

The distinguished Matthew Henry says: "There is a future state, another life after this; those times will come from the presence of the Lord, from his glorious appearance at that day, his coming at the end of time. . . . The presence of the Lord will introduce (1) The restitution of all things, the new heavens and the new earth, which will be the product of the dissolution of all things (Rev. 21: 1), the renovation of the whole creation. (2) With this will come the times of refreshing, of consolation to the Lord's people, like a cool shade to those that that have borne the burthen and heat of the day. All Christians look for 'a rest that remains for the people of God,' after the travels and toils of their present state, and with the prospect of that they are borne up under their present sufferings. . . . The refreshing that then comes from the presence of the Lord will continue eternally in the presence of the Lord."

This text clearly teaches (1) A rest and refreshing at the coming of Christ, when all the sanctified hosts of God of every age will be brought to share in the great blessing of immortality. (2) A deliverance from all the moral and physical evils of this world. (3) A rest from political evils and disturbances, such as characterize earthly governments. Wars, bloodshed and carnage will eternally cease, when the Divine Administrator shall take to himself his great power and shall reign, or when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. May the glad hour soon arrive. Amen.

Obituaries.

ATKINSON. In Shipton, May 14th, 1878, Sister Prudence, wife of Wm. Atkinson, aged sixty-three years.

Sister Atkinson with her husband were among the first in Shipton to welcome the news of the coming of Jesus. And when she fell asleep it was with strong assurance that a glorious awakening awaited her. In the death of this pilgrim the husband has lost a faithful companion of forty years of life's journey. The children, who are widely scattered, have lost a tender mother. Some of them are living with reference to a future meeting. The daughter who cared for her during her last illness has since given her heart to the Lord. May we all meet her. Words of comfort by the writer. G. H. WALLACE.

ADAMS. In Fingsey, P. Q., April 24th, 1878, Alvah, son of Wm. and Sarah Adams, aged eighteen years.

In life he was beloved by all who knew him. He sweetly sleeps in Jesus. In the morning of eternity the voice of the Life-giver will awaken him to share the glories of the immortalized saints. He was a member of the Congregationalist church, and an interested member of their Sabbath-school. May the rich blessings of God abide with the mourning family. Funeral attended by the writer. G. H. WALLACE.

ADAMS. In Kingsey, P. Q., little Mary, daughter of Lyman and Ellen Adams, aged four years.

The early frosts have nipped the tender bud, but the flower will yet unfold its silken leaves in a richer soil beneath more congenial skies. May mourning parents follow the Great Shepherd closely, that the little one may be restored to them finally. Sermon by G. H. Wallace.

WENTWORTH. In Belgrade, Maine, May 4th, 1878, of dropsy, Bro. Reuben Wentworth, aged seventy-one years.

Bro. W. was converted some forty years ago, was baptized by the writer, and joined the Christian Church in Rome. He was a great sufferer in his last days, but he bore it with Christian fortitude, and would often say, "All is right." In his last hours he said, "Jesus will soon come, and I shall wake again at the first resurrection." He left a widow and eight children to mourn his loss. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer. L. ELDRIDGE.

MOULTON. In Lyman, Me., May 20th, 1878, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Moulton, wife of Jefferson Moulton, aged sixty-seven years.

Her last sickness was long and distressing, not being able to walk without help for nearly a year; yet she was perfectly resigned to the will of God. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn her loss; but they have the blessed satisfaction that their loss is her gain. May God sanctify this great affliction to us all, and prepare us to meet her in the blessed kingdom when Jesus comes. J. M.

ALLARD. At his residence in Waterloo, May 24th, 1878, of kidney disease, Jonathan Allard, in the seventy-first year of his age.

Our beloved brother has fallen with the gospel armor on. The last few months of his life were characterized with devout and humble trust, after years of firm and patient adherence to the only gospel hope of life eternal. Smitten with pain, in the sight of kind and faithful friends, while sleepless eyes watched o'er him, and loving hands wiped the death damp from his brow, he sank to rest. So the righteous die. A large and sympathizing audience was addressed by the writer at the Universalist Church, which was kindly offered for the service, from 1 Thess. 4: 13–18. C. P. DOW.

SMITH. At Granby, Mass., May 19th, 1878, Edwin P. Smith, aged ten years.

Eddie was sick but a few days. Strange and unknown diseases are slaying the loved ones; but he who holds the keys of death can undo the work of the strangest disease. Bro. and Sr. Smith are much comforted with the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus, when the loved one will awake to suffer or sorrow no more. Funeral sermon by the writer. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

Married.

CONVERSE—JOSEPH. At the residence of the officiating clergyman in Westfield, Pa., May 25th, 1878, by Elder E. C. Cowles, Mr. MATTHIAS CONVERSE and Miss LIBBIE JOSEPH, both of Brookfield, Pa.

SHAW—JONES. At the residence of the officiating clergyman in Westfield, Pa., June 2d, 1878, by Elder E. C. Cowles, Mr. CHARLES S. SHAW, of Austerlitz, N. Y., and Miss ALMIRA H. JONES, of Harrison, Pa.

HURD—COOK. In Freedom, N. H., June 5th, 1878, by Eld. Mark Stevens, Mr. JOHN HURD, of Freedom, and Mrs. BETSEY COOK, of Porter, Me.

WARDSWORTH—NASON. In West Parsonsfield, Feb. 18th, 1878, by Eld. Mark Stevens, Mr. PELEG T. WARDSWORTH and Miss EVTLINE NASON, both of Hiram, Me.

SMITH—BROWN. In Newport, R. I., May 18th, 1878, by Rev. Edgar M. Smith, Mr. GEORGE T. BROWN, of Westerly, and Miss ELLA A. GARDNER, daughter of Sylvester S. and Lizzie A. Gardner, of Wyoming, R. I.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Belgrade, June 7. The Servians continue with energy their military preparations, while at the same time they are making efforts to obtain admission to the Congress.

Vienna, June 7. The Lower House of the Reichsrath has finally passed the bill providing means for realizing the 60,000,000 florins credit. The Austrian and Hungarian delegations have arrived at an agreement on the points of the budget on which they have hitherto differed. The session of the Austrian delegation has closed.

Constantinople, June 7. Difficulties are renewed with regard to the Turkish and Montenegrin forces in the neighborhood of Scutari. They mutually accuse each other of menacing movements. Prince of Montenegro disclaims all responsibility for a possible collision.

A Bucharest dispatch to the Times says that the execution of the Topola rioters was a cold-blooded murder, intended to terrorize the Servian people, and it succeeded in producing that effect. The rioters were not revolutionists. They only made some noisy public demonstration against the Cabinet's policy in going to war without summoning the Skupschina. There was no question of a Karageorgevitch conspiracy.

Rome, June 6. The Pope has sent an appeal to the Powers to protect the interests of the Roman Catholics while they are regulating the affairs of Turkey.

Berlin, June 3. The attempted assassination of the Emperor created the most intense excitement. Vast crowds assembled in front of the palace. When the first shot was fired the Emperor rose in his carriage, but immediately fell back into his seat, bleeding copiously from a wound in the face. Numerous telegrams have been received from all parts of Europe, expressing the most profound sympathy.

London, June 3. The outbreak of public feeling went far beyond the manifestations made on the previous occasions, as Dr Nobeling's attempt exceeded that of Hoedel in the seriousness of its results. Dr. Nobeling came to Berlin a few weeks ago from Halle. He hired a room on the second floor of No 18 Unter-den-Linden from the window of which the shots were fired.

London, June 7. It is stated that the Berlin Criminal Court has received several letters threatening the assassination of all the sovereigns if Nobeling is harshly treated. The number of arrests in Prussia for disloyal utterances are increasing significantly.

June 9. The Standard's special from Berlin states that the correct report of the only judicial examination of Nobeling before he became unconscious shows that he said he himself offered to undertake the work, and discussed the plan with several persons who approved it.

Dr. Nobeling's younger brother has been arrested. A professed accomplice of Nobeling writes anonymously to the North German Gazette that ten persons, four of whom belonged to the Berlin University, with whom Nobeling drew lots, have quitted Berlin. The writer professes that his object is to prevent the arrest of innocent persons, as those he mentions are alone implicated.

Berlin, June 8. Several houses in this city were searched by the police yesterday, and a number of persons were arrested. Herr Most, a Socialist member of the Reichstag, was sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment for persisting in addressing a meeting at Chemnitz, after the police declared it closed. Eight persons were tried to-day for using disloyal language in speaking of the Emperor. Seven were sentenced from five years to eighteen months' imprisonment.

The attempted assassination of Trepoff, the Czar's chief of police, by Vera Sassoulitch, has created a great and apparently lasting impression on the Emperor. Letters from St Petersburg represent him as most melancholy and nervous; so much so, indeed, that whenever he leaves the palace he has a foreboding that he may never return. Charlotte Corday did a good deal to stop the reign of terror; it may turn out that Vera Sassoulitch has played no inconsiderable part in preventing a European war.

The Post's Berlin dispatch says Prince Bismarck's nervousness has so increased since the attempt on the life of the Emperor that it is expected it will be necessary to appoint a colleague.

London, June 7. The explosion in the coal pit at Haydock to-day shook the earth for miles. The first explorer descended the shaft five minutes after the explosion, and others followed. Ten men were rescued alive and sent to the surface, when one died almost immediately, and the others suffered much. Eight other men are alive and have taken refuge in a working of the mine. Two hundred and thirty-two men are dead. The explorers state that they found bodies decapitated, reduced to shapeless masses and some blown to pieces. It is expected the corpses will be brought up by midnight. A large crowd of men, women and children surround the mouth of the pit. The cause of the explosion is unknown, as blasting with naked lights is prohibited.

CALMNESS IN DANGER.—The ill-fated ship London sailed from the Thames with a large number of emigrant passengers. She was too heavily laden, and in the Bay of Biscay it was evident that she would founder. At such a time, when sudden death stares men full in the face, without the excitement of a great accident, when death has to be quietly waited for, a great demand is made for moral courage, such courage as we only find in its noblest forms in those who realize the comforting presence of a living Savior. On board the London was a Wesleyan minister, Rev. Mr. Draper; a gentleman who had won the love and esteem of many friends while visiting England, and was returning to his beloved work in the colonies. Those who survived tell a touching story of his calmness and self-sacrifice, going from one to another, telling them of the present Savior, and praying with them; he was engaged in this work when the mighty waters overwhelmed the vessel.—Selected.

MR. MOODY emphasizes temperance in his recent sermons as never before. It is made prominent. Pastors are everywhere engaged heart and hand in helping the liquor captives—drinkers, sellers, and manufacturers—into liberty. While a few pledged men fall, the vast majority stand. May the present revival intensity more and more, until the dreadful destroyer, Intemperance, shall be utterly destroyed!—Sel.

NEVER in modern times has there been such a period of famine as in the last five years. First in Anatolia (Turkey), then in India, and now in China and Brazil. Tens of thousands have died from sheer starvation. Last month the deaths from this cause in Brazil were reported to be as many as one hundred in a day. Government and individuals have done what they can, but are powerless to deal adequately with the calamity.—Sel.

SECOND ADVENT CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The Annual Meeting of this body will be held in Chelsea, Mass., at the Advent Chapel, commencing TUESDAY, AUGUST 20th, at two o'clock P. M. Conferences entitled to representation in this body will please take timely action in electing their delegates. A full attendance of delegates is specially desired, as matters of great importance to the Advent cause will be brought before the meeting.

E. A. STOCKMAN, President.
C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

NOTICE.—Those who wish to sell, buy, let, or hire tents or rooms on Alton Bay camp-ground, can correspond with J. G. Smith, Farmington, N. H. Also, all who have had lots booked to build on, should notify him by the first of July, whether they build or not, that if any do not build, others can have the lots to build on. Bro. E. G. Osgood lives upon the ground, and is ready to do any building or repairing; and any one wishing his services can address him at Alton Bay, N. H.; and any desiring to go to the camp-ground before the meeting can have their baggage taken to the ground by addressing a card to John L. Ricker, Alton Bay, N. H. He will do it for a reasonable compensation. J. COUCH.

NOTICE.—To let upon Springfield camp-ground three cloth Tents, 12×15, water proof. Price, $4.50 each Tent for one week. Also four rooms in a house upon the ground. Address Eld. Jas. HEMENWAY, Athol, Mass. For the Committee.

CAMPMEETING.—The Alton Bay Campmeeting will commence TUESDAY, AUG. 27th, and close Thursday, Sept. 5th.

☞ It is decided to have the Springfield Campmeeting commence SATURDAY, AUG. 10TH, and continue to the 19th.
MILES GRANT, Sec. C. M. Committee.

THE Campmeeting at Coventry Centre, R. I., will commence Wednesday, Sept. 4th. Particulars hereafter.

NOTICE.—The Tremont Campmeeting will commence Wednesday, July 17th, and continue over the following Sunday, closing the following Friday. Brn. Hemenway, Ross, Batchelor and Stockman are expected to be present and preach the Word.
H. V. DAVIS, for the Committee.

NOTICE.—The Hoosic Valley Conference will hold its next Quarterly Session with the Church at North Shrewsbury, Vt., commencing Wednesday, July 3d, at 7½ o'clock P. M. Buy your tickets for Cuttingsville. Teams will be in readiness to meet the train from Rutland at 12.29; and also the train from Bellows Falls at 1.45, and convey passengers to the meeting, four miles. The meeting will be held in the Christian Church. If further information is wanted, write to Willard Guild, North Shrewsbury, Vt.
S. G. MATHEWSON, President.
GEO. STREETER, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The California Advent Christian Conference will be held in Petaluma the last week in June, under the Tent. Labors commenced in the Tent June 1st. The Campmeeting will commence on the 20th of June. We shall have a supply of small family tents for the accommodation of any who may desire, which will be rented as low as they can be afforded. Friends attending will provide their own bedding and provision. The Tent will be a short distance away from Petaluma City, where all the necessaries of life can be easily obtained. We expect a general rallying from all parts of the Union to attend this State Campmeeting and Conference. A. J. YOUNG, Secretary.

Minnesota Campmeeting.

The Minnesota A. C. Campmeeting will be held near the city of Owatonna, Minn., on grounds immediately adjoining the celebrated "Mineral Springs" grounds, commencing Wednesday, June 12th, and holding over Sunday.

The State Conference will be held in connection with this meeting, and will be called on Friday, June 14th, at nine o'clock A. M.

The State Mission Society will also be held in connection with this meeting, and will be called on Saturday, June 15th, at nine o'clock A. M.

It is proposed not to have any regular boarding tent on the ground, nor is it expected that a collection will be taken to pay the travelling expenses of preachers. Churches should make provision for the necessary expenses incurred by their preachers in attending this, our annual gathering. We expect to have two large tents pitched on the ground, one fifty feet in diameter, and one forty feet by sixty. This is a new field, and we want a general attendance from all parts of the State and adjoining States. Let all come so as to be here at the commencement of the meeting, for it will be short. Correspondence should be directed to the undersigned, at Owatonna, Minn.

☞ Reduction of Fare.—Persons wishing to attend this Camp-meeting by way of the Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R. will pay full fare to reach here, and pay one fifth fare to return.

In behalf of a majority of the Committee,
E. K. SMITH, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The fourth session of the Oxford County Quarterly Conference will be held at West Poland, Me., commencing Thursday, June 13th, at two o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Brethren and sisters, lay aside the cares of life for a little season, and come up to the house of the Lord, praying for a meeting that shall make us all feel that the Lord is soon coming.
JARED WHITMAN, President.
JOSHUA HOWARD, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The second Quarterly Session of the North Western Michigan Advent Christian Conference will be held with the church at Sylvester, Mecosta Co., commencing on Friday evening, June 14th, and continue over the following Sabbath. All in this district who love the appearing of our dear Lord should endeavor to attend this meeting, as business of importance is likely to come before it. Homes will be provided for all who come.
DANIEL WEAVER, Pres.
T. P. S. HAMPSON, Sec.

NOTICE.—The next session of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern New York will be held at Westfield, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, June 14th, and continue over the following Sunday. A cordial invitation is given to all. Let every church belonging to the Conference send their delegates.
A. H. BRIGGS, President.

NOTICE.—There will be a Campmeeting held near Perryville, in Cecil Co., Maryland, under the auspices of the "Household of Faith," commencing July 25th, to continue ten days. For particulars write to Oliver Currier, Corresponding Secretary, Perryville, Cecil Co., Maryland.

Committee: Jacob Elliott, Frank Burr, Geo R. Kramer.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Conference of Nova Scotia will meet this year at Bear River on Thursday, June 20th. A cordial invitation is extended to all God's dear children, especially all who are looking for the sublime fulfillment of the divine Word. These are blessed seasons. Come, dear children, make a little sacrifice, and all our hearts will be made glad. By order of the President, John J. Woodworth.
JAMES MORRISON, Secretary.

NOTICE.—There will be a Dedication and Basket Meeting in Jay, Me. (Bean's Corner), commencing Sunday, June 30th, at 10½ o'clock A. M., and continue as long as thought best. The meeting will be held in a vestry recently fitted up by Bro Lewis Bean. A general invitation is extended to ministers and friends to come, to do good and get good. E. M. HAGGETT.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Conference of New Brunswick will meet at Middle Simonds on Thursday, June 20th, and hold over the following Lord's day. A cordial invitation is extended to all. J. M. TOZIER.

NOTICE.—There will be a Basket Meeting in the grove near Bro. R. G. Patterson's farm, Range 6, Town 4, Sec. 1, Jewell Co., Kan., commencing Friday evening, June 21st, and continue over the Lord's day, and as long as thought best. There will be several of our preaching brethren and sisters present to preach the Word. E. N. BLISS.

NOTICE.—There will be a Fourth of July meeting in the grove near the Glidden school-house in Somerville, Maine, to commence evening of July 3d. We extend a cordial invitation to all. Call on Bro. Dodge. GEO W. WEEKS.

☞ CHANGE.—The Second Advent Church formerly worshiping at 246 Bridge Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., have removed to the Church of our Mission, 416 Adelphi Street, near Fulton Avenue. Preaching every Sunday at 10½ A. M. and 7½ P. M. Prayer meeting Wednesday and Friday evenings.

For the Church: G. W. Libby, M. C. Cogswell, A. S. Munger.

NOTICE.—So far as my age and infirmities, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, will allow, I am anxious to preach the glad tidings of the soon coming One. Address S. S. BREWER, care of W. Ellis, 123 Pleasant Street, New Bedford, Mass.

The Beebe Plain Campmeeting.

The Third Annual Session of the Beebe Plain Campmeeting will be held on the Camp-Ground, commencing SATURDAY, JUNE 22ND, and holding over two Sabbaths.

The following are the arrangements with all the Rail Roads over which we have reduced fares:

The Passumpsic, as usual, will sell half-fare tickets, good from June 18th to July 5th to go and return; sold at all points on the road between White River Junction and Sherbrooke, and special excursion rates on much lower terms, for particular days, between St. Johnsbury and Sherbrooke.

The Grand Trunk Railway will sell through coupon tickets from Montreal via. Sherbrooke, Acton, Richmond, Danville, Quebec, Winsor Mills, Waterville, Coaticook, Island Pond, North Stratford, and Groveton Junction. Inquire for Campmeeting Tickets to Stanstead.

The Vermont Division of the Portland and Ogdensburg Rail Road will sell through tickets to Stanstead Junction from all stations, good from June 18th till July 5th, at half-rates.

The Quebec Central and the International Rail Roads will this year sell through coupon tickets to Stanstead Junction, good the same as the others.

The Boston, Concord and Montreal Road will (it is expected) sell tickets from Concord and way tickets through and return for fare one way. These tickets are issued specially for accommodation by special request, that the few who attend from Concord, and places south and other stations, may be accommodated; and it is hoped that enough will come over the Road this year to make it an object. All parties coming from places below Concord must purchase regular tickets to Concord, and there call for Stanstead Junction Campmeeting Tickets.

The Central Vermont Road. Passengers coming over this Road will purchase regular tickets to points where they strike the Passumpsic or other Roads, and at such stations follow the directions given for those Roads, purchasing either Campmeeting or regular tickets for points on the Passumpsic, and free return checks will be given, without regard to the numbers who come. We hope there will be fifty at least.

The Portland and Ogdensburg Road between Portland and the Connecticut River will issue free return checks. At Lunenburg purchase Campmeeting Tickets. Parties coming from Whitefield must pay full fare both ways between Whitefield and Scott's Mills.

See that all baggage is checked through (when possible to check it through) to 300. C. M. If to be re-checked, see that it is finally checked thus. Point out baggage to Custom Officers at Newport. We shall endeavor to have better facilities for passing customs than usual. Baggage may be checked through over Roads which issue through tickets. Come, all who can, and the Lord bless you all in coming. Good low-rate board at the Boarding House and in private families.

Committee: Eld. T. E. Lang, President; Eld. D. E. Chadsey, Vice President; Eld. L. C. McKinstry, Secretary; Eld. C. L. Percival, Treasurer; J. H. Carbee, John Elliott, G. H. Clark, Lewis Bergoine, I. M. Colby.

Pittsfield, Me., Campmeeting.

This meeting will commence Wednesday evening, Aug. 14th, if the Lord will, and close Friday, Aug. 23d. Particulars hereafter.

E. O DINSMORE, } For the JER. CARR, } Committee.

NOTICE.—The Lord willing, we purpose to hold a Campmeeting near Lexington, Sanilac County, Michigan, commencing June 22d, and holding over two Sundays. The time has come when we think such a meeting can be sustained in this Eastern District. The Starr Line of Steamers arrive here daily from the South about seven o'clock P. M. On their way here from Detroit they touch at Port Huron about 4½ P. M., at which point the Grand Trunk R. R. crosses the River St Clair from the East, and the Chicago and Lake Huron R. R. terminates here from the West. A ride of two hours on our beautiful Lake Huron, and you arrive at our pleasant village of Lexington, where conveyances will meet the boat to convey all to the campground. We cordially invite all of like precious faith in Michigan and Ontario to meet with us. Come, and bring your unconverted friends. Eld. Miles Grant of Boston will be with us. This will be a rare chance for isolated ones to hear our dear brother and other successful laborers in the Lord's vineyard. A Boarding Tent will be on the ground to supply all at reasonable rates. Let us have a grand rally in the name of the Lord. For additional particulars address Eld. Geo. W. Wright, Orin Avery, Wm H. Dawson, Lexington, Mich.
GEO. W. WRIGHT, Campmeeting Committee.

NOTICE.—Providence permitting, a Fourth of July meeting is proposed to be held at West Levant, Me., in the grove of Bro. J. F. Emerson, to commence June 30th and hold over the Fourth. It is desired that as many as can will bring their family tents and remain on the ground. We hope to enjoy a sort of old-fashioned Campmeeting. It may be our last ere peace forever leave our earth, to be restored never until the blessed Prince of Peace comes. Those who may not be able to bring tents, bring what you can in the Camping line. The necessities of the meeting will be cared for by the brethren in the place. We heartily invite all who are looking for and expecting speedy deliverance to participate with us at this annual feast; and those of the servants giving meat in due season—the immediate coming of the Lord, with an entire preparation to meet him—to come and labor with us for the good of all.
J. F. EMERSON.
I. DAMMAN.

N. Y. STATE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—The Annual Meeting of the above A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Ontario, Wayne Co., commencing Wednesday evening, June 12th, and hold through the week and over the next Sabbath. The Semi-Annual Meeting voted that the Annual Session be held one day earlier, as business of importance will come before this meeting; therefore it is earnestly desired that all the preachers and delegates be present at the beginning. Every church should send delegates and quarterly collections. We desire that every church in the Conference report their standing for the last year—number of members, number baptized, number added and excluded, number of pupils in Sunday School and volumes in library, also valuation of church property. Ontario is on the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburgh R. R. (Ontario Div.), twenty-five miles east from Rochester. Now, brethren, let us have a grand rally from Western N. Y. Come praying that we may have the very best meeting ever held in this State. Homes provided for all who come.
C. W. LOW, Pres.
JAS. E. WELLS, Sec.

CAMPMEETING.—The Seabrook Advent Campmeeting will be held on the camp-ground in Beckman's Grove, near the depot in Seabrook, N. H., commencing Saturday, June 29th, and continuing over two Sundays to July 7th. Fare will be reduced as usual on the Eastern R. R. and all its branches one half, with ten cts. added. All desirous of building or renting tents on the ground, or renting rooms in the neighborhood, or for information relative to the meeting, will please address the Secretary at Seabrook, N. H.; and all orders will be promptly attended to. The Com. will spare no pains for the advancement of the interests of the meeting. Further particulars hereafter. C. A. BARTON, Secretary.

DISTRICT CAMPMEETING.—There will be a Campmeeting near West Salem, La Crosse Co., Wis., commencing Saturday, June 15th, and holding over two Sundays. Eld. Miles Grant is expected to be with us. The resident ministers of the State who can come are also cordially invited to attend. Many who are not able to be present at the State Campmeeting can perhaps attend this. Come in the Spirit of the divine Master to work for the salvation of the lost. We shall expect one or more tents from each of the following places, and others if possible: Sparta, Salem, Burns, Burnham Valley, Mendora, Springville, Malvina, Mt. Vernon. The following brethren will act as Committee, for either of whom strangers may inquire: L. W. Wood, H. F. Bowles, Geo. Leavitt, James Hewitt, A. Mosher, J. Lowrie, D. W. Favor.
PHILO HITCHCOCK, State Evangelist.

NOTICE.—A Conference will be held at Deer Isle, Stinson's Neck, commencing June 27th, and holding over the Lord's day. We cordially invite all the ministering brethren to come and help in the work of the Lord in saving the perishing. The little church there is in a prosperous state. There are several to be baptized. Brethren coming from Rockland will call on Bro. G. Macomber to find out the way of conveyance. Those coming by the way of Bangor can go in the Steamer May Field, and stop at Brooklyn, to be set across to Stinson's Neck. Those from Indian River, or Beals Isle, can go in the Steamer Lewiston. She will touch at the head of the Isle. There will be teams to meet them at the boat. We hope to have a large gathering, that good may be done in the name of the Lord. N. SMITH.

NOTICE.—The Mechanic Falls Campmeeting Committee will meet on the ground Monday, June 17th, to make arrangements for the contemplated meeting, and also such repairs as are needful. All interested are invited. We want to do all that will add to the interest of the meeting, that we may enjoy another like the one that was enjoyed last year. J. WHITMAN, for Com.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon), to insure insertion for the coming week.

In accordance with the direction of the A. C. P. Society, the Secretary called the attention of the Association to the matter of not publishing certain appointments in the Crisis, whereupon Bro. Wellcome offered the following resolution:

Whereas, the doctrines of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, trine immersion, and probation for sinners after the second advent of Christ, savor largely of heresy, and their influence has, in our judgment, done much injury to the cause of true faith and piety by undermining in the minds of those brought under their influence the scriptural doctrine of the wages of sin, the atonement and judgment; therefore

Resolved, That we cannot lend our influence, either directly or indirectly, to the promulgation of these doctrines, or views on which they depend; and we hereby instruct those having charge of the columns of our paper not to allow any appointments or notices of meetings held by such men as declare themselves believers in said doctrines to be published therein.

The resolution was adopted.

Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent, unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister or ministers of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquital.

☞ All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—OZIAS GOODRICH, Boston, Mass.

EIGHT NEW TRACTS.

We have now ready EIGHT NEW TRACTS upon the Coming of the Lord.

One by C. E. Barnes, entitled "The Second Personal Coming of Christ. 12 pages.

Three by Miles Grant, entitled "Prophetic Symbols," Nos. 1, 2, and 3; each 16 pages.

One by E. A. Stockman, entitled "The Moral Signs of Christ's Coming." 16 pages.

Two by J. Hemenway. One entitled "The Expectation of the Church"; and one "Signs in the Heavens of the Second Advent Near." 12 pages each.

Price of the above Tracts, 3 cts. single; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.25 per hundred.

One by J. Couch, entitled "The Present Financial Disturbances. Its Causes and Results." 24 pages. Price 3 cts. single; 25 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred. AGENT.

NEW TRACT.

We have published in Tract form a Sermon preached by E. A. Stockman at the Annual Session of the Mass. A. C. Conference, April 11th, 1878, upon "THE TRANSFIGURATION." It is pronounced by those who heard it one of the very best Sermons that has been [illegible]hed. We would advise all to have it. 16 pages. Price 3 cts. single copy; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.25 per hundred. AGENT.

YOUNG PILGRIM STORIES.

We have a lot of these books, and we think they should be out doing good, but we cannot afford to give them away. There are two volumes—Nos. 1 and 2. Each volume contains 192 pages. No. 1 has eight Illustrations; No. 2 has twelve. They are especially calculated for children from five to fifteen years of age. We now offer them single copy, postpaid, for 40 cts.; 2 copies, Nos. 1 and 2, 75 cts., postpaid, or $3.60 per dozen by express. Former price has been 50 cts. single; $4.00 per dozen. AGENT.

TESTAMENTS.

We have some very nice Testaments in flexible covers, the right size to carry in the pocket; and we offer them very low, so that no one can have any excuse for not owning one. Price, single copy, 10 cts., or $1.00 per dozen postpaid. AGENT.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH,
ENTITLED
THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT.

[Cont]aining the ORIGINAL GREEK TEXT OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, with an Interlineary Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the VATICAN MANUSCRIPTS, together with Illustrative and Explanatory Foot Notes, and a copious selection of References.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up, with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers. One vol., 884 pages. Price, extra Cloth, $4.00; Library Binding, $5.00 postpaid. For sale at Crisis Office. AGENT.

THE GOSPEL AWAKENING.

This is a book of nearly 800 pages, and contains the Sermons, Addresses and Bible Readings delivered by D. L. Moody in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston; also Sketches of the Lives of D. L. Moody, I. D. Sankey, P. P. Bliss, Joseph Cook, D. W. Whittle, G. F. Pentecost and F. E. Willard. We think it a valuable book, and one of much merit, and should be widely circulated. In order that it may be within the reach of all, we offer it very low. Price $2.00 postpaid. For sale at the Crisis Office.

ALSO, we have a work by Wm. W. Patton, D. D., entitled "Prayer, and its Remarkable Answers." This is a work of great value. It gives authentic accounts of answers to prayer in temporal wants, healing the sick and lame; also conversions, etc. It is just what every professed christian should have for daily reading. It contains over 400 pages. Price $2.00 postpaid. For sale at the Crisis Office. AGENT.

MATERIALISM.

This Tract was published by the Western Association, and the edition is exhausted; so we shall not have any more to sell. AGENT.

We are out of LLOYD'S WAR MAP, and probably shall not have any more, as the kind we have been selling has run out. If we should learn of any that would be just the right thing, and that would be instructive, we shall give notice in Crisis. AGENT.

We have sold ALL of the old edition of Professor Ives on the Soul, and now shall have only the late edition. Price in cloth, 75 cts.; in paper, 50 cts. postpaid. AGENT.

ANOTHER GOOD BOOK.
"THE SEVEN GOLDEN CANDLESTICKS."
BY ELD. H. F. HILL.

We have read several works on this part of the book of Revelation on a similar plan, but this far surpasses all we have seen for evidence, argument and practical excellence. We think no candid, intelligent reader can go through this book faithfully, noting the epistles in their practical bearing, the names of these churches and their definitions, the characters given them by our Lord, the warnings and promises he gives them, without feeling strongly impressed with the great fact that the church has lived out all these prophetic features, and is now in the very last stage of her mortal history as given in the epistle to the Laodicean church.

This is a book which gives conclusive evidence that our Lord must soon appear in his glory, and celebrate the marriage supper with his bride. Buy the book and read it. You will enjoy a feast.

For sale at the Crisis Office. Price by mail, $1.25. I. C. WELLCOME.

ANOTHER PAMPHLET.

We have just published an able and thorough work on the order of the Millennium as related to Christ's Second Advent, by Daniel D. Buck, D. D., member of the Genesee Conference of the M. E. Church. Bro. Moody's Sermon on the Second Advent is bound up with it. A neat Pamphlet. Price $6.50 per hundred; 10 cents single. Address I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me. Sold also at the Crisis Office.

ALL WILL LIVE AGAIN!
ANOTHER NEW TRACT NOW READY.
BY I. C. WELLCOME.

Its chief aim is to bring out the plain Bible statements that all the race of Adam "shall come forth" to receive judgment, and that all the dead will be raised from death for that purpose. It is a tract much needed. It will bring the subject so into the consciences of true seekers for truth that they cannot reject its conclusions. One brother takes 1000 copies before it is advertised. Price 75 cts. per 100; 15 cts. per dozen, by mail.

I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me. Sold also at the Crisis Office.

German Tracts Free.

Any persons desiring a number of German Tracts for free distribution can be furnished by sending their address to L. Reimer, 639 No. 8th St., Philadelphia, Pa., and enclosing money or stamps for postage, at the rate of 5 cts. a dozen. These tracts are well worthy of circulation, and can be recommended by all. FRANK BURR.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

C. E. BARNES, Sec. Adv. Chris. Pub. Soc.

☞ Remittances should be sent to the Treasurer, OZIAS GOODRICH, Boston, Mass., or they may be enclosed with remittances to the Crisis Office.

MORMONISM EXAMINED: Or, was Joseph Smith a Divinely-Inspired Prophet?

A thorough refutation of Mormonism, containing over 100 proofs of its fallacy, deduced from its so-called inspired books, such as "The Book of Mormon," the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants," and "The Inspired Translation of the Bible." This work is a very interesting book of 184 pages. Every one who knows anything of Mormonism should have one. It searches to the very root of doctrine of the so-called Latter Day Saints. Price, in paper, 50 cents single; $4.00 per dozen. Address this Office, or Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis.

N. B. It will be sent at half price (25 cts.) to all ministers and Mormons, provided orders are sent to the author, Wm. SHELDON, Brodhead, Wis.

WAITING AND WATCHING FOR JESUS.

BY W. A. BURCH.

"And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him."—LUKE 8: 40.
"And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and into the patient waiting for Christ."—2 THESS. 3: 5.

In his beauty and glory our King will appear,
Fulfilling the promise he gave,
That he would come back to this earth yet again,
Where once he did suffer to save;
And when the glad hour of his advent is nigh—
That advent which all eyes shall see—
Will his people then, all in readiness, cry,
"We've been waiting and watching for thee"?

E'en as shineth the lightning from east to the west
The Son of man's coming shall be;
Be ye also ready, for when you think not,
The Bridegroom appearing you'll see.
And since you know not of the hour or the day,
With lamps filled, you watching must be.
Take heed! be not sleeping, but ready to say,
"We've been waiting and watching for thee."

Though the signs of his coming we see in the past;
Though the vision to tarry has seemed;
Yet still wait for it, for of patience you've need
Till the Master his bride has redeemed.
Hold fast to your confidence; great recompense
Of reward to the just soon shall be.
If any draw back, the glad welcome they'll lack—
"We've been waiting and watching for thee."

While the Bridegroom now tarries, your talents improve;
Till he comes you must occupy.
If your portion be small, yet one talent you have—
Let that not in idleness lie.
Then the Master will say, "Well and faithfully done!"
Thus the joy of your Lord you may see;
And, work all completed, with others exclaim,
"We've been waiting and watching for thee."

When with voice of archangel and trumpet of God,
Thus Jesus himself shall descend;
When the sleeping ones rise and the living are changed,
With theirs may our glad voices blend.
Saying, 'This is our God, we have waited for him;
We glad and rejoicing will be;
Dear Savior, 'mid trial, temptation and pain,
We've been waiting and watching for thee."

MIDNIGHT IN THE PRISON AF PHILIPPI.

BY DANIEL MARCH, D. D.

Praise and prayer were strange sounds to be heard at midnight in the heathen prison at Phillippi. And the two men whose voices broke the silence of the hour were in a sad condition to sing. But their song swelled loud from the deepest and darkest dungeon of the prison where they had been confined as if of all criminals they were the worst, and they kept on singing until all the prisoners waked and wondered at the sound. Shrieks and groans and execrations had many times been heard in that dark abode. Never before had the unhappy inmates been disturbed at midnight by the sound of praise and prayer.

Who were the men that drew the attention of all the prisoners at that solitary hour? And how came they to be in such a place? The day before they had been down by the river's bank, in a quiet place outside of the city walls, talking with the company that came and went about Jesus and the way of salvation. They were doing nothing to excite the people or to disturb the peace of the city. They were only ministering comfort and rest to sorrowing and weary hearts. They were only answering for others the most solemn and important question that can ever engage the human mind: "What must I do to be saved?"

While thus employed they were frequently interrupted by the cries of a poor slave girl who was held in double bondage by her human masters and by the demons of darkness. One of the two men, Paul, by virtue of the divine power given unto him in the name of Jesus Christ, delivered the unhappy slave from her spiritual tormentors, and so her masters could no longer make gain of her pretended inspiration. They were greatly incensed because their fraud and cruelty were now exposed, and their opportunity to profit by imposture was lost. In their rage and excitement they laid hands upon the two peaceful strangers, hurried them back into the city, gathered a crowd about them in the market-place, and vehemently charged them with causing the tumult which themselves alone had excited.

The rude idlers of the town ran together from every quarter, and cries were lifted up from many voices. No opportunity was given to the two defenceless men to speak or explain what they had done. The attention of the magistrates was drawn to the tumult. The officers of the Roman government were great sticklers for order, and they sometimes restored quiet by the most cruel and hasty process. In this case, seeing that Paul and Silas were set upon and denounced by all the rest, they took it for granted, without delay or inquiry, that they were the guilty cause of the disturbance. They accordingly commanded them to be taken from the hands of the rabble and stripped and scourged by the public executioner in the market-place. Their garments were torn off, they were thrown violently upon their faces to the ground, their hands and feet were held down by strong and cruel men, while others beat with blow after blow upon their naked backs with tough and flexible rods of elm, that tore the flesh and drew blood at every stroke. If they tried to speak or to ask a hearing of the magistrates, they were seized by the hair of the head and their faces ground into the dust. The heartless rabble looked on with eager eyes, and shouted savage applause, while the blows fell thick and fast upon the quivering flesh. The sight of blood and the writhings of the victims only roused the brutal passions of the crowd to a wilder pitch of excitement, and made them encourage the cruel lictors to strike with the greater force and upon the part where the blow would cause the greatest suffering. Such exhibitions were always witnessed with fiendish delight by the rabble in Roman towns, and many times the leading motive of the magistrate in condemning the accused was to please the people with the sight of torture and blood.

When the executioner was weary with giving many blows, and their heavy rods were dripping with blood, the poor men were lifted up from the ground and taken away to prison. The rabble went hooting after them —the magistrates sent the solemn charge to the jailor at the peril of his life to keep his captives safely. Being taken in at the main gate, they were led through the crowd of prisoners in the outer court. They were seen by all, bruised and bleeding, and their lacerated bodies covered with dust. A more secure and horrible place was sought for these men than for the common criminals. And they were accordingly taken into the deepest recesses of the prison and let down into a damp, cold, pestilential dungeon. The jailor descended after them, laid them upon their inflamed and tortured backs on the stone floor, stretched out their feet and hands and pinioned them down between strong timbers, so that they could not rise or relieve themselves by changing their position. Thus bound and secured, the jailor left them, neither giving them water to assuage their burning thirst, nor anything to alleviate their painful wounds. He climbed up out of the dungeon, and the iron covering crashed down behind him upon the stone floor over their heads like the fall of a millstone upon the pavement. And there they were for the night, suffering hunger and thirst and cold and torture, in darkness so deep that they could not tell the day from the night.

Such was the reception given to the first missionaries of the cross who passed over to Europe from the Asiatic shore to proclaim the glad tidings of the great salvation. They came to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and comfort the sorrowing, and they were stripped of their garments and scourged in the market-place. They came to proclaim liberty to enslaved millions, and they were bound and consigned to the deepest dungeon. They came to bring light into the hearts and homes of all men, and they were imprisoned in utter darkness. They brought a message from heaven which has been for ages the source of power and prosperity to the mightiest and [illegible] enlightened nations of the earth. [illegible]ey were treated as if they were robbers [illegible]eivers of mankind.

So the world crowns its worst enemies and crucifies its greatest benefactors. So hard is it even now for men to accept the richest blessing when it is offered as a free gift. So slow of heart are millions to believe that the humbling, self-denying religion of Jesus does most to improve man's condition in this world, while in the world to come it ensures glory and life everlasting.

The excitement of the day was over. The lictors had bound up their bloody rods and laid them aside for the next victim. The magistrates had gone to their homes, flattering themselves that by promptness and energy they had suppressed a popular tumult and vindicated the majesty of Roman law. The jailor had fulfilled too well the charge to put the two prisoners beyond the possibility of rescue or escape. The other inmates of the prison congratulated themselves that they at least had not had their flesh seamed and torn by the cruel rods, nor had they been buried alive in the cold dungeon of the inner prison. The rabble of the town had slunk away to their wretched homes.

Midnight had come down with its deep shadows upon the sleeping city. There was silence in the deserted streets, silence in the outer wards of the prison, silence in the cells where wretched men were shivering on the stone floor, silence in the inner prison. But no, from that dungeon deep and cold, where the two tortured men had been bound with their inflamed flesh to the hard and rough stone, there comes a sound. Is it a cry of pain? Is it the wail of tortured men in their agony? Is it a maddened supplication for death to come and release them from their misery?

No, far from it. It is the voice of singing. It is a strain of joy and triumph. It is a psalm of victory and thanksgiving. We do not know precisely what it was that they sung. But we may be sure that it was in that ancient and inspired Hebrew strain which delights in ascribing glory unto God and in declaring unshaken trust in him under the sorest affliction: "Oh sing praises unto Jehovah. For he heareth the poor when they cry, he despiseth not his prisoners, he bringeth them out that are bound with chains. He breaketh the gates of brass, and smiteth the bars of iron in sunder. Oh sing praises unto Jehovah, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever."

And still that glorious song swelled loud and clear from the depths of the dungeon's gloom, until it was heard through all the wards and outer courts of the prison, and all the wretched bondmen within the walls were awake and listening to the strain. When they saw the swollen and bleeding flesh of the two men as they were taken into the inner prison the evening before, they thought their sleep would be disturbed that night by groans and cries of agony. And now they are waked by the strains of joy and exultation.

And while they listen and wonder what all this can mean, suddenly there comes a mysterious and awful sound, as if the solid earth were rent asunder beneath the whole city. The foundations of the prison are shaken. The bolted doors are all thrown open. The chains and fetters of every prisoner are loosed and all are free. The jailor, who had slept through all the singing, is waked by the earthquake. He sees the prison doors open. He supposes the prisoners to have gone. He knows that, by the stern usage of Roman law, his life will have to be paid as the forfeit for their escape. In despair he determines to anticipate the shame of a public execution by plunging his sword into his own bosom. He would be like Brutus and Cassius, who ended their last struggle against Cæsar on the plains near this city of Phillippi, by falling upon their own swords. The jailor's hand is upon his sword, and he is just about to give himself the fatal blow, when a voice comes up from the dungeon of the inner prison, saying, "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here." It is all dark. The jailor himself cannot see the one who speaks. But the voice is so loud, clear and calm, it is so full of earnestness and assurance, that the excited man becomes himself again. He drops his sword, calls for a light, rushes into the inner prison through the open doors, leaps down into the subterranean dungeon, lifts up Paul and Silas from the pit and brings them out into the open court of the prison.

And now there comes over this man a strange fear, a mighty and an irrepressible longing which declares itself in the most momentous inquiry man can ever make: "What must I do to be saved?" Saved, not simply from the terrors of the earthquake; that is already past and has done no harm. Saved, not simply from punishment under Roman law for the escape of the prisoners; for the prisoners are all here. But saved from that awful and infinite peril of which the accusing conscience whispers in the secret place of every human soul. Saved from the wretchedness of living without God and dying without hope. Saved with that everlasting salvation which is preached by these persecuted prisoners in the name of the Most High God.—Night Scenes in the Bible.

IS IT TRUE?

"The Secretary of the N. E. E. Society has received the following touching note, enclosing a check for the money.

Rev. N. T. Whitaker—Dear Brother:—Enclosed, please find check of $14 for the N. E. E. Society. It is the amount of our little Willie's bank account. He will not need it. He has gone to receive better care and education than father and mother could give him. Willie was two years and four months old when he went away to the eternal land. H. D. WESTON."

Worcester, March 20.

I cut the above from Zion's Herald. It contains the honest sentiment of the author, I doubt not, as it is the faith of all evangelical denominations. But is it Bible? Is it the truth? Look at it, digest it, compare it with Bible, with reason and common sense. "Our dear little Willie died at two years and four months old, when he went to the eternal world." Where has Willie gone? Has he not gone into the grave, where all other children go? Is hades (the grave) the eternal world? His bank money will not be needed because he has gone to the eternal world! What has he gone there for? Surely to receive care and education. "He has gone to receive better care than father and mother could give him." Exalted privilege for our children to die! Think of it, parents, and bring it home to the family circle. The scarlet fever rages; five out of seven of our children [illegible] victims to its ravages; but let the fatal disease be welcomed; it only introduces our darlings to a higher clime, where they have better care and education than father or mother could give them. Yes, superior to high school education. Would not all the mothers be in haste to get their children into this school? Bless me! Rachel must have been in the dark. She had never learned of this educational paradise when, with bitter tears and weeping, she refuses to be comforted for her children "because they were not." If she had only understood that instead "they were not," they were in this school in paradise making greater progress and under more careful tutorship than father or mother could give them, it would have assuaged all her grief and turned her mourning into joy.

The Lord also seems to have mistaken himself, or forgotten it, in trying to comfort the dear motherless soul by saying, "they shall come again from the land of the enemy." Could he be so mistaken as to call this educational land "the land of the enemy"? W[illegible] he have said, to stop the last tear of [illegible] mothers, that "their children should [illegible] again from the land of the enemy"? [illegible] he does not even stop here; "they shall come again to their own border." The Lord himself has entirely overlooked this infantile educational training paradise that little Willie has gone to. I have been looking over this matter with deep solicitude. I am interested for the little ones. And it seems to me that the children must all wait till the morn of the resurrection, when the Lord comes with keys in hand, unlocking the great prison house of death and hades, and all that death has housed away will be let out to receive reward. "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such are the kingdom of God." When Christ comes to set up his everlasting kingdom the children will not be left out. It is made up of such. They are in the kingdom of God. L. BOUTELL.

"THE TRUTHS WE REPRESENT."

BY C. E. HURD.

As I took up this valuable paper (the Crisis), and was perusing its interesting columns, in one article, or rather report, my eyes rested upon this interesting sentence: "The truths we represent" Somehow my thoughts centred in those words. I attempted to read on, but I seemed restrained. I reread them. Two thoughts presented themselves for my consideration. 1. What are "the truths?" 2. Who are the representatives? 1. What are "the truths?" We answer, generally, they are the truths of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, practical and doctrinal. Specifically, the great and sublimely grand prophetical and dispensational truths, the keystone of the great gospel building. They are the foundation of our whole theological super-structure. The speedy personal appearing of our blessed Lord from his intercessory throne to judge the world in righteousness, the resurrection of all the dead, some to the resurrection of life, some to shame and everlasting contempt. "The restitution of ALL things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3: 21.

2. Who are the representatives of these "truths"? I suppose the brother, in the use of the term in his report, had in his thought the general Advent body, specially. But how, we ask, do the Advent body represent those truths? We understand to represent is to personate. A book represents not only the type of the printer's office, but also the moral characteristics of the author. With these thoughts we have definitely before us the second principle of our subject. The representatives of the above specified gospel, religiously. A true representative is one that demonstrates his or her faith by a corresponding work. Noah not only believed God when he spake to him and declared, "I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth"; but he, by his every act in preparing the ark that he had been directed to build, demonstrated that faith. He not only faithfully proclaimed the God-given message, the coming flood, until the dark clouds of dissolution closed in upon that doomed world, but he straightway set about and continued in the work of building the ark. He also gathered his effects together, and, with his family, moved into it. What if Noah, when nearing the great crisis, had purchased a farm; remodelled the old buildings, re-furnished them with a lot of superfluous furniture that would require four horses to draw; bought five horses and carriages; planted a nursery of fruit trees; loaned money with usury and a bonus of one per cent; been found at public or private sociables! What if Noah had possessed one, three, five, ten, twenty, fifty thousand, or even two hundred thousand dollars in excess of a requisite amount with which to carry on his legitimate business, by which he obtained redress for his immediate wants! What if Lot, when the fires of eternal vengeance were scintillating in the very heavens, had engaged in negotiation for a site on which to erect a fine residence, or had bought one outright in the city of Sodom! What if his wife and two daughters, at that extreme epoch, had rushed into the emporium of fashion and attired themselves in the excessive paraphernalia of these times; hitched, tucked, folded, flounced and fringed.

What if the Christian people of Jerusalem had slumbered, when their beloved city was encompassed with armies! What if the worthy martyrs, when the faggot, gibbet, rack, and various implements of torture and death had met their gaze, had recanted! What if, when the first note of the judgment message, as it fell from the lips of a Wolfe upon that benighted realm (Asia), echoed by Irving, that English divine, re-echoed in America by the faithful Miller, when the first word of persecution was hurled in among them, had showed the white feather and retreated! What if the veterans of this Advent cause (better known as the '43 people), in the seventh month prior to the tenth day, 1844, had gathered their crops, had continued to operate in their various departments of business unrestrained! What if now, when, as we affirm, the nations are marshalling for the last and final conflict, Peter's fires already kindled, we lapse into lukewarmness, infidelity, and undue worldliness! Shall we be fit representatives? It seems to me I can almost hear the echo of your voices as you reply with an emphatic no. Then let us be admonished.

EXPERIENCE.

As given in the 6th Chapter of Romans.

BY J. W. BRITTAN.

The cross on which I died
To all beneath the sun—
There with Jesus crucified,
There the victory won.

I've come down from the cross,
For death hath set me free;
I've counted all but loss,
That Christ may live in me.

Risen with Christ I live,
The world beneath my feet;
My all to him I give—
In him I am complete.

Now, why no fear of death?
Because no death to fear.
Now, why no love of wealth?
Because no wealth is here.

Heaven is all my own,
The price of precious blood;
Such wealth was never known
As that revealed in God.

My will in God is lost,
My life in Christ concealed;
The dreadful gulf is crossed,
And Satan quits the field.

No work of self to do;
No life of self to live,
My work is his to do,
My life is his to live.

This work is all of grace,
This love is all divine;
Boasting can have no place
In this poor heart of mine.

HOME.

BY MARY L. TOWER.

Let one who no longer resides under the parental roof hear the simple word "home," and it awakens a thousand tender recollections of the past. It tells of a loved circle far away. It pictures father and mother, brothers and sisters, in their respective places as of old, and lingers over the time when all this loved group gathered to acknowledge the Giver of all good, and to ask a continuance of Heaven's blessing upon them, and the sweet peace that was sure to follow.

If there is music in the sweet word home when it has reference to an earthly habitation, how doubly dear does it become when we turn from this world where there is sorrow connected with all our sweetest joys, and look to the home of the righteous which Jesus has promised to those that love his appearing; and though time and distance now intervene, yet we know that at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore; and what adds to the peculiar charm is the fact that some will never taste death, but be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. O glorious thought! Not one that truly loves Jesus will be left out. And there will be no more separation.

We are nearing that home, our heavenly home. The signs warn us that Jesus is [illegible]ming. Then shall the redeemed o[illegible]e gathered home. I earnestly long for that day to come. May the Lord help all who profess to be looking for him to do his will, and have an abundant entrance into the heavenly home. Amen.

THE KINGS OF THE EAST.

BY P. ALLING.

In Revelation 16: 12, we read as follows: "And the sixth angel poured out his vial on the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the East (or according to Whiting's translation, 'towards the rising of the sun') might be prepared."

That the Ottoman Empire is this river but few doubt, and most believe that in the events of the past year we have witnessed this drying up accomplished to the fulfillment of the prophecy.

The inquiries now suggested are these: 1. What is meant by the expression "that the way of the kings of the East may be prepared"? 2. Is this work now in progress? These are important inquiries, as indicating our whereabouts in this prophecy.

By a careful reading of the next three verses it will be seen that by the workings of the three unclean spirits that go forth, "the kings of the earth and of the whole world" are to be "gathered to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." This of course includes the Eastern nations of Asia in the final conflict. The second inquiry is answered by the following extract, copied from the Restitution of May 1st.

"Bombay, April 26th. Troops are arriving here daily for embarkation. The first detachment will leave for Malta April 29th, and the second May 1st. They will not stop at Aden. Fifteen ships and twelve steamers have been engaged for the conveyance of the expedition, which will be convoyed by a man-of-war. Great enthusiasm is manifested throughout India, and native troops are volunteering for the service."

This gathering of the nations now in progress, and more especially those of India, are the direct results of this Russian-Turko war, and is as literal a fulfillment of this prophecy as can possibly occur, whilst the actors of these scenes and the world at large are as ignorant of the facts as were the Jews and the Romans when they crucified the Son of God between two thieves.

O, how immensely important is the warning of verse 15th at this time—"Behold, I come as a thief." All may see this who are watchful and keep their lamps trimmed and burning, with oil in their vessels. May the Lord help all to heed this command.

SHALL WE SURRENDER THE BIBLE?

BY DR. TALMAGE.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."—MATT. 24: 35.

What is that scrolled, clasped, Dore-illustrated volume lying on the cover of the drawing-room centre-table? What volume is it, defaced and worn and lead-pencilled, lying on the clerk's desk in the court-room? What volume is it that the gowned professor reads in the college chapel? What volume is it that is packed away by loving hands in the trunk on the morning of the young man's leaving home? What volume is it on which the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, and all our Presidents, take the oath of office? Of what volume have the printers made two hundred million copies? That is the book upon which infidelity puts its hands to-day and cries, "Surrender!" Shall we do so? is the question of the day and of the hour.

For years I have heard many complaints made against the Bible, and I have classified these complaints. Sceptics allege that the Bible is impure; the Bible is cruel; the Bible is contradictory; the Bible is unscientific.

First, let us look at these charges brought against the Bible. 1. To prove that the Bible is impure, its enemies read portions of Scripture which they say are unfit for the eye and ear of the family circle. They read Solomon's Song, and put upon it their own interpretations, and then fling down the book, denouncing it as a polluted volume. Is the Bible impure? I lay it down as a principle that an impure book will have impure results. No man will deny that proposition. Now of all your friends, how many have had their purity of soul stained, tarnished, or despoiled by Bible reading?

Two hundred million copies of an impure book scattered through Christendom, there must be a great many victims. Show me a thousand victims. Show me five hundred victims. Show me a hundred. Show me fifty. Show me ten. Show me one victim. Is that exorbitant? I do not care what the specimen, whether man, woman, child, white, black, copper colored, American, European, Asiatic, African. Two hundred millions of books, in each one of which sceptics say there is the leprosy of impurity.

Show me one victim. I do not confine you to our own times. Range through all the four thousand years that have passed, and show me one soul whose chastity and purity have been dispoiled and ruined by Bible perusal. I challenge all earth and hell for one victim. Your charge collapses and dies in the presence of every frank minded man. So far from the Bible being an impure book, you know very well that it is only where the Bible reigns that the family institution is regarded.

The only difference between Sodom, and Constantinople, and Pekin, and Madras on the one side, and our American cities on the other, in regard to the status of purity and impurity, is the difference between Bible and no Bible. If the Bible be an impure book, I am only asking of you a fair thing when I ask that after two hundred million copies have been doing their work you show me one victim.

2. Charge the second. The Bible is cruel. To prove this, the enemies of the Bible give us the story of the ancient wars, passages in the story of David and Joshua, the extermination of the Canaanites, and then declare that the Bible approves of laceration and manslaughter. You have known a great many people who had this "cruel" book in their hands. Was the effect of this "cruel" book upon them to send them towards vivisection, towards maltreatment, towards mauling? Did your friends come out and practically say, "I have been reading about the extermination of the Caananites, and now mean to cut, stab, bruise, and beat to pieces everybody I can meet?"

As your children have studied the Bible, have they got more and more of a tendency to pull off the wings of flies, and to pin grasshoppers, and to rob birds' nests? If the Bible is cruel, why does it not show its cruelty in that direction? So far from its being true, all the asylums and institutions of mercy in this country have been founded by Bible believers. When did this bloody book, so called by some, implant cruelty in the heart of George Peabody, of Miss Dix, of Florence Nightingale, of John Howard, of John Frederick Oberlin, of Abbott Lawrence?

Look at those twenty Christian women in a hospital. They are washing wounds, they are administering cordials, they are taking the last message of the expiring. Those Christian women have been reading this book all their lives, and now they are reading it to the sick and the dying. At what point does the cruelty of this book crop out in the life of that ministering angel of the hospital? Do you find it in the gentleness of her step, or in the soft cadence of her voice, or in her prayer for the dying, "Lord Jesus, receive his spirit?"

When you can make a rose leaf pierce like a bayonet, when you can make icicles out of the south wind, when you can poison the tongue with honey made out of blossoming buckwheat—then you can find people practising cruelty learned from the Bible. —Christian Herald.

PREACHING.

BY D. B. PEARSON.

To go into the sacred desk and speak to the people, and reason on righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, is but one way to preach the gospel; there are other ways quite as effectual. All cannot be ministers in the common sense of the term, but all who have met with a change of heart can preach Jesus.

The manner in which we conduct ourselves through the week will have more effect on the people than all we can say Sunday. Our prayers and exhortations are valued and heeded according to the life we live. In every word we speak, and in every act we perform, we preach Jesus or we deny him, for Christ says "he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." We can preach Jesus by being upright and honorable; in giving full weight and measure; selling an article for just what it is; telling at all times the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

May the Lord help us not only to talk religion, but live it also; not only on Sunday, but every day of the week. Pure religion is durable, and can be worn every day in the year. The more we wear it the brighter it will shine, and the more plainly it will tell the story of Jesus and his love. O that we might be living epistles of Christianity! If we are true Christians we shall be.

A PROMISE.

BY M. W. BUXTON.

"A promise should be given with caution, and kept with care. A promise should be made with the heart, and remembered by the head. A promise is the offspring of the intention, and should be nurtured by recollection. A promise and its performance should, like a true balance, always present a mutual adjustment. A promise delayed is justice deferred. A promise neglected is an untruth told. A promise attended to is a doubt settled."

"All the promises of God are Yea, and Amen." "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise." "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life." "We, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth." "For yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry."

"And is it so? a little while,
And then the life undying,
The light of God's unclouded smile,
The singing for the sighing?
A little while! Oh, glorious word!
Sweet solace of our sorrow,—
And then 'forever with the Lord,'
The everlasting morrow."

UNBELIEF A PRINCIPLE.

Unbelief is a principle as well as an act —always operative with a continuous force, which is not fictitious, but most dreadfully real. The principle abides, even when it is not developed in outward acts. It lies behind in the secret disposition, which is the spring of all action, and gives it complexion. For the existence of this we are responsible, and must plead guilty before God. In this view we are chargeable with unbelief at all times, so long as the disposition exists which would prompt the act. In deepest sleep, or when the thoughts are absorbed in worldly care, it is the sleep or the pre-occupation of an unbeliever. A tiger is as much a tiger when he sleeps, or when he is gorged with his prey, as when the ferocity of his nature is fully aroused. The generic disposition, which forms his characteristic, is there—a constant quantity—whether it be dormant, or in full activity, is more an accident than otherwise. So the sinner's attitude toward God is one of abiding hostility, whether it break forth in insurrection or not; and the unbelieving temper which would reject the Savior at any given time, will reject him at all times—and with this continuous rejection we accordingly stand accused at the bar of final judgment.—Rev. B. M. Palmer.

SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING.

BY H. MUNGER.

Five years ago I learned the way to have apples every year from the same trees. Instead of stripping off the blossoms of one-half of the apple-tree limbs, as many fruit raisers have done to make them blossom and bear the next year,—to save time, girdle every other limb near the body of the tree, about one eight of an inch wide, taking out the whole bark to the wood. This will stop the sap going up, and the apples will fall off from the limbs girdled and cause the rest of the limbs to bear larger fruit. This is reasonable and true. The girdled limbs will heal over in ten weeks, and the next year they will bear. By so doing once will change the tree as long as it lives; one half will bear every year. The time to do it is from the tenth to the twentieth of June, the bearing year.

One man told me he got a hundred barrels of apples last year by this process; and I know of others in proportion. Every other year they had so many they were worth nothing. The next year, and for twenty years, he had none until he took this course. It is said to work the same with other fruit. This is the year to do it. All who have tried it are more than satisfied. In our region apples are a great blessing to man and beast. Give your poor apples to your cattle and horses in the fall, and they will not be so anxious to get out. It is apples they want. Nature calls for them. This will pay better than to make them into cider. Try it, and you will find your cows will give more milk. Horse-radish will cure more sick horses than any other medicine. God made it for them. And catnip for cats. Try it.

PERSONAL EFFORT.

There are a great many of us who are willing to do great things for the Lord, but few of us willing to do little things. The mighty sermon on regeneration was preached to one man. There are many who are willing to preach to thousands, but are not willing to take their seat beside one soul, and point that soul to the blessed Savior. We must get down to personal effort, this bringing one by one to the Son of God. We can find no better example of this than in the life of Christ himself. Look at that wonderful sermon he preached to that one woman at the well of Samaria. He was tired and weary, but he had the time and the heart to preach to her. This is but one of the many instances in the life of the Master, from which we may learn a precious lesson. If the Son of God had time to preach to one soul, can not every one of us go and do the same? Look at the work of John Wesley; the world never saw a hundred such men living at the same time. The trouble is, we are afraid to speak to men about their souls. Let us ask God to give us grace to overcome this man-fearing spirit.—D. L. Moody.

REPORT OF TENT WORK.

JOHN PARSONS.

We pitched the N. H. Mission Tent near the village of Centre Harbor, June 1st. At the first meeting about sixty came out; in the evening about two hundred; on Sunday from six to eight hundred. There were three steam-boats came over the Lake, bringing passengers for the meeting. There is a great desire on the part of the people to hear on the signs of the times and the fulfillment of the prophetic Word. Bro. Jas. G. Smith and Brn. D. M. Leavitt and John Shorey, and other faithful men, are here to help in the work. We shall stay here through the week and next Sunday, and then go to Plymouth. Now, brethren of New Hampshire, we need funds to help carry on this work. All who have a desire to help in this work can address JOHN PARSONS, Northwood Narrows, N. H.

GOD'S VOICE.

Let there be a conflict of human opinions about doctrines; let there be contending systems and clashing creeds; in the midst of all there is one voice that always speaks the same thing, easily understood by all. Noisy and boastful contentions are vain. Hear the word of the Lord: "Say unto the people, As I live I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, who will have mercy, and to our God who will abundantly pardon." Some things are certain, and every human conscience bears its own testimony to them. "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with them; but say ye to the wicked, it shall be ill with him." This is as fixed and inexorable in the nature of things as the law of gravitation.—Selected.

WHY HE RESIGNED.

A lady was asked, "How do you like Mr. ——'s preaching?" "O," said she listlessly, "I don't like those old texts very well." The preacher was educated in college and seminary. He had labored faithfully and successfully in a hard field. But he selected his themes from the Bible, and "compared spiritual things with spiritual;" but she "didn't like those old texts very well." He was faithful as a pastor, and preached the truth in love. No one denied that. But he did not preach a series of sermons, "on the poets," as another did, and so he failed "to draw." His church grew steadily from year to year, but not very rapidly. He had the impression that as prophets, and apostles, and Christ himself preached a good deal on the subject of faith and repentance, the necessity of a new birth, and that without holiness no man can see the Lord, so he should frequently present these and kindred themes. But some young ladies and gentlemen "did not like those old texts very well;" and besides, "the city had grown to such proportions" that they thought they "should have a change."—Baptist Weekly.

EARNESTNESS.

Earnestness in religion everywhere commands respect; the lack of it invariably brings religious professions into contempt. The stammering tongue is eloquent, even in its most imperfect expression of the feelings of an earnest soul. The manner may be uncouth and ludicrous, and yet by its sincerity command our reverence. The excesses to which religious excitement sometimes carries people are readily overlooked, because that very excitement is the manifestation of spiritual life, while the most refined formality is despised for its very emptiness. The prayer-book can be no substitute for the heart in the work of winning souls to Christ. Earnestness inspired by the indwelling Christ alone inspires confidence, and gives us power over the consciences and lives of our fellow-men. Earnestness is Pentacostal, both in its source and in its results.—Northern Advocate.

BIBLE READING AND STUDY.

If you have but ten or fifteen minutes night and morning, read God's Word—and read it consecutively. In this way you get a grasp of the "whole counsel of God." But this is not Bible study. For this fifteen minutes will not suffice. Try and secure two or three hours as often as possible, and then set yourself down to your Bible, with your concordance, your text book, and pen, ink, and ruler. Determine you will not be diverted from your purpose, and you may expect a feast of fat things. Don't be impatient; light from God does not break over the sacred page in a moment; so wait, and ponder, and pray,—compare Scripture with Scripture—and as you thus dig, God will unfold to you "precious things."—Sel.

WORN-OUT PREACHERS.—What a history in a name! Nothing wears out in this world but Methodist preachers and draught horses. Merchants fail, bankers break, lawyers retire, but Methodist preachers wear out. If any body can have a claim upon the church, it must be these men. They planted our churches. They baptized us when we were little. They married us in later years. Gratitude, one of the last virtues to die out of the human heart; justice, the deepest foundation of all Christian character, without which profession is hypocrisy and piety is a hollow pretence; brotherly kindness, which is catalogued in good company in the New Testament—all these combine to secure proper care for the old heroes of the field.—Christian Advocate.

A SPIRITUALIST advertises with great flourish of trumpets that "he will give names in full of your departed spirit friends at his circle—admission 25 cents." Well, suppose he does that. What's the good of it? Don't we all know the names of "our departed spirit friends," without paying 25 cents to have a juggler tell us? Of course we do; but then the juggler wants the 25 cents! That's the beauty of Spiritualism!—Sel.

THE VOICE THAT CALMS.

Upon that night,
That stormy night on Galilee,
When wind and wave were high,
When o'er that vessel, drifting on,
There hung a gloomy sea;
When terror came to those on deck
Who feared the angry deep;
While Jesus, 'mid the danger wild,
Lay on his couch asleep.
'Twas then he rose, and lo! his voice
Did soothe their wild alarm;
He hushed the wind and stilled the sea—
He wrought a wondrous calm
On Galilee!

When sorrow's storm
Comes darkly o'er the way of life,
That we in heart must brave,
And when we seem adrift at sea,
'Mid stormy wind and wave;
'Tis then, before the eye of faith,
This same blest Lord appears.
He speaks, and lo! his sacred voice
Is full of love that cheers;
He soothes us as we weep and sigh,
With his all soothing balm,
While o'er the billows of our grief
He brings a blessed calm,—
His sweet relief!

THE NEW MAN AND THE NEW EARTH.

BY GIO. R. KRAMER.

There will be, as the shining result of the redemption in Christ Jesus, a "new man" and "a new earth." It can be a new creation with the preservation of identity. The Psalmist prays, "Create in me a clean heart, O God." Though a new divine creation is spoken of, it is the same heart made pure; and yet such is the wonderful change wrought, it is called a new creation. "We are his workmanship, created of God in Christ Jesus." The new man, though he becomes such in conversion in his purposes and affections, is not completed until the day of redemption, when Christ shall come and make these "vile bodies like unto his glorious body." We can be holy now through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, for we are to "put off the old man with his deeds, and put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness"; but the new man—the real spiritual man—as contrasted with the natural man, will not be manifested until the effulgence of the morning, when "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality."

Whatever degrees of divine grace we may realize in this present life, we are only natural, animal, flesh and blood men. "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy." And whatever may be our progress in heavenly things, even though we stand on the top of Pisgah and drink in the radiance of the vision of the land of promise, and regale ourselves amid the fountains and groves of Bunyan's Beulah Land, yet we are of the earth, earthy, and will be so until resurrection and translation. If alive (and we may be, praise the Lord!) when Jesus comes, we must be changed. Why must we be changed? Because natural men, called "flesh and blood," cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

In view of this Paul groaned for the house not made with hands. He groaned, not to "be unclothed," not to die, not to be dissolved, but to be clothed upon with the tabernacle of the new creation. Compare with 2 Cor. 5: 4, 5, Rom. 8: 22, 23. While we are at home in this present corruptible body we must be "absent from the Lord." We could not endure the awful yet delicious blazings of his countenance. His disciple who leaned on his bosom, when a vision of his Master's grandeur stood before him, "fell at his feet as dead." What then does the apostle groan for? to die—to be without a body? and does he expect to be with the Lord in that way? Or does he groan, as in Rom. 8: 23, for "the redemption of the body," for "the spiritual body" of 1 Cor. 15, and thus be absent from this and be present with the Lord? as we read of being "ever with the Lord" when caught up in the clouds to meet him in the air. Compare Heb. 9: 11 with 2 Cor. 5: 1. "Not made with hands" is spoken of as having the sense "not of this building," not of this present piling up, but a piling up in towering grandeur upon the great corner stone of the new creation. It is rendered in the Emphatic Diaglott "not made by hands; that is to say, not of this creation." There is to be a new creation built upon Jesus Christ, as the chief corner stone. The resurrected and translated man will be a new man, yet his identity is preserved. He shall "soar and shine another and the same."

This new man will be a partaker of the heavenly man—Christ Jesus, who laid aside his divine glory "which he had with the Father," and took of flesh and blood because the children were partakers of flesh and blood. The man Christ Jesus was raised from the dead, and around him and upon him, as the basis, as "the sure foundation stone," there shall be piled the magnificent stories and towers of the new creation. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Not we do, but "we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." This will be by resurrection and translation "when Christ who is our life shall appear."

To be "like him" is redemption. It is the culmination of saved humanity. These bodies, now temples of the Holy Ghost, will have every pillar and dome, as incorruptible temples, strengthened to sustain the flamings of the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." In this redeemed new man there will be the manifestation of the glory of the great Creator. Each form will bear the impress of the "chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely."

If "the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy work," what shall we say of "the morning stars" of the new creation, which shall sing together in the "new heavens," and "the sons of God" who shall "shout for joy" on the hill-tops and mountains of Paradise regained, in the "new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness"? Those redeemed ones shall declare his glory, for they "shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

This new man will have his home in the new earth. He is redeemed from this earth of briers and thorns. The curse is upon this earth, and it must go, with all its sin and corruption, into the lake of fire. It is the old creation, the home of the old man, of the earthly ones, and truly they are at home in it, living in the enjoyment of its wealth and honors; but the children of God are pilgrims and strangers."

The new Earth, spoken of so much by those of us who are looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus, is not a new idea; it is an old belief, and has been a favorite theme among different master minds and pulpit orators. (See the sermons of Wesley and Chalmers.) Henry B. Bascom was perhaps one of the greatest natural orators in the world. He was elected chaplain to Congress through the influence of Henry Clay. On one occasion he preached on the new earth, a sermon of wonderful force and thrilling eloquence, some of the language of which I quote from his life, written by Dr. Henkle. Bascom, at the time of his death, was one of the Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church.

"It was a day of exceeding beauty. Every aisle in the spacious church was filled to overflowing. . . . His countenance seemed intensely intellectual. . . . His eyes at the moment were dreamy and set in empty space. . . . Presently he raised his right hand with a gesture of impatient haste, and pressed his fingers on his pale forehead, as if to assist the brain in its mighty labors of thought, and then instantly announced his text from the book of Revelation: 'Behold, I make all things new.' He pierced at once into the heart of his subject, and then took wing and rode away on a whirlwind of fiery words. His voice from the commencement rolled and peeled and rang like the beautifully modulated music of some wondrous organ, alternating with crashes of tremendous power, that seemed to jar the walls of the building. . . . Now it sunk into a mild wail, mellow and plaintive as a funeral chime; again it swelled to the steady roar of a hurricane. . . . The effect was aided too by the orator's gesticulation,—now graceful as the airy circles of a butterfly in the air, and anon grand to sublimity, and urgent as the swoop of the eagle climbing the heights of the storm-cloud.

"As the mighty magician went on, the whole multitude seemed charged with electricity. Here and there single individuals began to rise to their feet, then others by twos and threes, next a dozen sprang up together, and finally the whole living, throbbing, enthusiastic mass might be seen standing as one man. The excitement was measureless, and yet too profound for any species of utterance. His theme was 'The future eternity of matter, and the possible splendor of the New Heavens and Earth.' A few of his inimitable touches linger in my memory to the present hour. He inferred the beauty of which all even the coarsest matter is capable from the following illustration:

"'Chemistry, with its fire-tongue of the galvanic battery, teaches us that the starry diamond in the crown of kings, and the black carbon which the peasant treads beneath his feet, are both composed of the same identical elements; analysis also proves that a chief ingredient in limestone is carbon. Then let the burning breath of the Almighty pass over all the limestone of earth and bid its old mossy layers crystallize into new beauty, and, lo! at his fiat the mountain ranges flash into living gems, into a lustre that renders midnight noon and eclipses all the stars.'

"He urged the same view by another example: 'Look yonder; see that wrathful cloud—the fiery bed of the lightnings and the hissing hail, the cradle of tempests and floods! What can be more dark, more dreary, more dreadful? Say, scoffing skeptic, is it capable of any beauty? You pronounce, No. Well, very well; but, behold, while the sneering denial curls your proud lips, the sun with his sword of light sheers through the sea of vapors in the west, and laughs in your incredulous face with his fine golden eye. Now look again at the thunder cloud! See! where it was blackest and full of gloom the sunbeams have kissed its hideous cheek; and where the kiss fell there is now a blush, brighter than ever mantled on the brow of maiden—the rich blush of crimson and gold, of purple and vermillion—a pictured blush fit for the gaze of angels—a flower-work of pencils of fire and light, wrought at a dash by one stroke of the right hand of the Almighty. Aye, the ugly cloud hath given birth to the rainbow, that perfection and symbol of unspeakable beauty.'

"On another occasion, in a sermon on the Judgment, which is among his published sermons, he remarks, after describing the burnt-up world, 'And yet from this wreck—these ruins—there shall emerge, as God hath promised, new heavens and a new earth, the abodes of truth and righteousness, complete in all possible glory and loveliness.'"

The New Man, the New Earth, and the New Jerusalem will present a scene of grandeur which all taken together will constitute "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." O, let us love and adore that blessed Christ who has "washed us from our sins in his own blood." He is coming! Let us be fitted into the Holy Spirit, "put off the old man with his deeds," and be ready to walk the gold-paved streets of the city—the beautiful city, the holy city, the New Jerusalem.

FAITH.

BY REV. W. HOTT, D. D.

A belief which prompts to action is alone worthful. Any other sort of faith is but a seeming. A great deal of that which men call faith, is nothing more than opinion. Those matters about which such an unreal faith is concerned, these subjects of a mere opinion, lie in the mind but as intellectual propositions to which the mind assents. They remain in the mind as some books, unread and with the leaves uncut, stand to day upon the shelves of my library, they are mine, I own them, but not yet have I studied them. That which they contain has not yet become any part of my mental or moral furniture. I read the names of their authors and because they are the men they are, I am quite certain that what they may tell in their books is true; but to me, in my methods of thought, in my ways of moral feeling, they do not yet hold any real relation; nor yet have the truths they tell deepened into my being, been set at work urging on and coloring its various activities.

Now a great deal of that which men call faith, is exactly like the relation which I hold to these as yet unused books. The subject matter of faith is something received, accepted, assented to by the mind; but that is all it is. It does not move the heart, it does not energize the life, it does not prompt and impel to action correspondent with itself. Opinion is always something immensely less than faith.

Look at the saved ones from the flood,—Thou shalt make thee an ark of goffer wood, said God to Noah. Rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and thou shalt pitch it within and without. And this is the fashion that thou shalt make it of—the length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits—that is about five hundred and forty-seven feet, and the breadth of it fifty cubits—that is, more than ninety feet, and the height of it thirty cubits, —that is, more than forty-seven feet. Thus slowly through the one hundred and twenty years did the vast vessel rear itself—the outcome and effect of a belief that was genuine, because it pushed toward action. So, too, when the long probationary time was ended, and the last days of the one hundred and twenty years were slipping by, Noah and his family entered the ark, sheltered themselves within its safety, and the Lord shut Noah and his household in. These saved ones pushed their belief into deed.

Thus must it be with any one of us, if we would escape that other destruction to which this of the flood is parable. It will not do for us to have an easy-going and listless opinion that God will punish sin. It will not do for us, just as an intellectual proposition, to assent to the truth that Christ is our Savior. It will not be enough for us just to run over the articles of a creed, called orthodox, though we do it never so glibly. We must act on our belief, our faith must urge us forth toward Christ. It is faith so genuine that it carries a man's whole being into Christ, which saves a man. —The Standard.

A NEVER DYING NAME.

BY W. H. ADAMS.

Voltaire said he lived in the twilight of Christianity. He spoke the truth. He did live in its twilight, but it was the twilight before the morning, not the twilight of the evening as he meant to say; for the morning comes when the light of the sun breaks upon us in its truest glory. The scorners have said that we should soon forget to honor Christ, and that one day no man would acknowledge him; but his name shall endure forever, as to the honor of it. Yes, I will tell you how long it shall endure; as long as on this earth there is a sinner who has been reclaimed by Omnipotent grace. Christ's name shall endure as long as there is a Mary ready to wash his feet with tears and wipe them with the hairs of her head; as long as there breathes a chief of sinners who has washed himself in the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. As long as there exists a Christian who has put his faith in Jesus, and found him his delight, his refuge, his stay, his shield, his song and his joy, there will be no fear that Jesus' name will cease to be heard.

We can never give up that name. We let some take the gospel without a Godhead in it; we let them deny Jesus Christ; but as long as Christians—true Christians—live; as long as we taste that the Lord is gracious, have manifestations of his love, sights of his face, whispers of his mercy, assurances of his affection, promises of his grace, hopes of his blessing, we cannot cease to honor his name. But if all these were gone; if we were to cease to sing his praise, would Jesus' name be forgotten then? No; the stones would sing, the hills would be an orchestra, the mountains would skip like rams, and the little hills like lambs; for is he not their Creator? and if these lips and the lips of all mortals were dumb at once, why, the sun would lead the chorus, the moon would play upon her silver harp and sweetly sing to his music, stars would dance in their measured courses, the shoreless depths of ether would become the home of songs, and the void immensity would burst out into one great shout—Thou art the glorious Son of God! great is thy majesty and infinity thy power!

Can Christ's name be forgotten? No. It is painted on the skies, it is written on the floods; the winds whisper it, the tempests howl it, the seas chant it, the stars shine it, the beasts low it, the thunders proclaim it, earth shouts it, and heaven echoes it. But if that were gone,—if these great worlds should all subside into the wave that bears it and is lost, would his name be forgotten then? No. Turn your eyes to restored Paradise. Who are those that are arrayed in white, and whence come they? "These are they that came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb"; therefore they are before the throne of God and praise him day and night in his temple. If these were gone—if the praise of the saints had ceased, would his praise cease then? No. If the angels who sing his glory, the cherubim and seraphim who cry "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty,"—if these were perished, would his name be lost then? Ah! no; for as God upon the throne he sits the Everlasting One, and the Father would honor it, and, deeply graven in the Rock of Ages it would stand—Jesus the Son of God, co-equal with his Father; for his name shall endure forever.

Philadelphia, Pa.

IS IT A SIGN OF THE END?

BY C. P. DOW.

Not one jot or tittle of God's inspired Word shall fail of accomplishment. Every foretold feature and lineament must be met by historic facts. Ours is a religion of facts. If Isaiah foretold that the Messiah should be "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," then it must be precisely so with him; and if he had escaped sorrow and not felt it, nor known grief, then should we look for another."

The most of the signs of Christ's first advent were, when viewed from their standpoint, not miracles so much as commonplace events. A virgin was to have a son; it was a possible, if not a common event, and no strange thing as it appeared to outside beholders. This son was to be carried to Egypt. Other sons had been thus carried. He must be called "out of Egypt." Other sons might be. Thus we might pursue the subject of the signs of the first advent, but let the above suffice, by way of example.

If signs foretold were heralds of the first advent, may we not reasonably expect the last advent to be thus indicated? And may we not expect them to be a variety of phases of society, historic events occurring in connection with time's closing period? Most certainly. And so we find men's "scoffing" made to be a sign, the cry of "peace and safety" a sign," "the sea and waves roaring" a sign, also "on the earth distress of nations" a sign, national "perplexity" a sign, and many other things are evidently so to be regarded. "Let him that readeth understand."

In the second chapter of Isaiah's prophecy we have a prophecy of the day of the Lord, when "the Lord alone shall be exalted," or have no rival;—a day of terror and vengeance, "when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth." And it appears clear to my mind that the state of the world at that time is somewhat indicated, and so it is fair to call them signs of the end. So we read in the seventh verse, "Their land is also full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures." Is it true of this time? Verily, as of no other time of which history gives account. If so, is it a sign of the end? This silver and gold, from various mines recently opened, has been coined and hoarded.

The remainder of the verse reads: "Their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots." What are the facts? Recently, the number of horses in our world, as gathered from reliable sources (the trained, domestic animal we mean), was estimated at fifty-eight millions. Of these, eighteen to twenty millions were to be found in the Russian empire; in France, three millions; in Great Britain and Ireland, two millions five hundred thousand; in the United States, six millions; in Austria, three millions five hundred thousand; in Prussia, one million five hundred thousand; Denmark, six hundred thousand; Bavaria, four hundred thousand; English American Colonies, five hundred thousand; Australia, five hundred thousand; Southern Africa, two hundred and fifty thousand. The "chariots," vehicles, or wheeled carriages bear a correspondence to the habits of the several countries. Of course there are more in the world by far than are here put down. If the prophetic ken saw that the land and age bordering upon the last judgment, or day of the Lord, would be filled with horses and chariots, indicating a pleasure-loving and a pleasure-seeking age, is not the sign fulfilled? Let us "discern the signs of our time," and be ready for the great event now so manifestly "near, even at the door.

THE rich and the poor, the king and the beggar, must alike lie down in the grave at last. All other distinctions fade into insignificance at the gate of the tomb, and princely dust perishes as soon as pauper's clay. That only is the true glory of man which outlives death, and outlasts the grave.

EVANGELICAL.

What is it to be evangelical? It is amusing, and yet pitiable to hear some men continually talking themselves up as evangelical.

Not long since I met a good, "evangelical" brother. I knew he pitied me on account of my heretical views, and would have done or given anything in his power to have had me become, like him, "evangelical." But I could not believe that the penalty of the law of God was anything but death, and that eternal torment was not the punishment of the wicked.

But I did claim to be equally evangelical with him. He thought that was absurd. I asked him to define the word evangelical. He said it meant "sound in the Christian faith." I said to him that is the definition of orthodox and orthodoxy. He replied that is what I mean by evangelical. I gave him Webster's definition of the words evangelic and evangelical, and I said to him, "I believe the gospel of Christ as recorded by the four evangelists as fully as you do, and I am therefore according to the definition of the word, as evangelical as you are. You take a term which is not found in the Bible, and make it a synonym, and assume that what you believe in regard to the teachings of Christ and his apostles is expressed by this term. Suppose I do the same. My assumption is as good as yours." He seemed to admit the force of my remarks, but soon replied,

"But you cannot be evangelical while you hold your views that man is not immortal, the dead sleep, and that there is no hell now for the wicked."

"But," said I, "why am I not evangelical, if the Scriptures teach what I believe; that man is mortal, the dead are without knowledge, and there is no burning hell until the judgment? If the Bible teaches this and I believe it, am I not evangelical?"

My good, evangelical brother hesitated a few moments, and then said, "No, I do not believe any one can be evangelical and believe as you do—that's impossible!"

I had no more to say about being evangelical, and I did not think he had at that time.

PAUL IN THE LAW AND GOSPEL.

Did Paul understand the law and gospel? Come, my Seventh day brother, what say you? Did he who was born under the law and educated in it know what the law was, and what it was for? And did he who was converted from the law to Christ and his gospel comprehend that which he was called to teach? What say you?

If you say that he did, why not accept of his teachings, both in regard to the law and the gospel? If you say he did not understand them, whom do you think does?

Now you know that Paul says plainly (2 Cor. chap. 3) that he and others were made ministers of the New Testament, and not of the letter (the Old.) And he gives the reason: the letter (the Old) killeth, but the Spirit (the New) giveth life. He tells you and me that that which was written and engraven on tables of stone, and which was brought down from Mt. Sinai by Moses, was "the ministration of condemnation and death." He says that ministration is "done away," is "abolished."

You have thought, and perhaps said that it was only the ritual part of the law that was "done away" and "abolished" by the coming of Christ. But I remind you again that Paul says it was what was "written and engraven on tables of stone," that is done away and abolished. The ritual portion of the law was not written upon the tables of stone which Moses brought down from Sinai; and Paul does not mention in this chapter that part of the law which related to sacrifices and offerings, though these are included in the things done away.

How is it proposed by you, my brother, to make Paul teach that you and I should observe and keep this "ministration of condemnation and death, written and engraven on tables of stone"? Will you show me how Paul teaches us to do this? The fourth and Seventh day commandment is among those written and engraven on tables of stone. How does it appear here that Paul teaches us to observe this command as a means now of our salvation? Will you answer, my brother?

EZEKIEL 3: 17.

BY J. P. MARQUAND

"Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel."

No one can read the prophets without observing a manifest difference in their tone and manner. In Isaiah we have many sweet promises to the redeemed church, and expostulations to the Jews to cease from their sins, lest God withdraw his favor from them. In Jeremiah we have the touches of pathetic sadness and heartfelt grief at their wilful wanderings from the truth and the path of duty. In Ezekiel we have the plain truth spoken without compromise, and an earnest zeal and fidelity for the honor of God and humanity. As every succeeding prophet came, the Jews grew worse, filling up their cup of woe and punishment, until the Son of God came, whom they despised and treated with scorn. He said unto them, "Your house is left unto you desolate."

In the first chapter of Ezekiel we are told that he (Ezekiel) was a priest, probably of the Aaronic order, and being faithful to his high trust, God had designed to add to him the gift of a prophet. This was done no doubt by the operation of the Holy Ghost. He says in many places that the hand of the Lord was upon or strong upon me.

The dealings of God in subjecting him to rigorous treatment and severe discipline is seen in his after conduct and character. He brought before him some of the most astounding visions of majesty, power and glory, and he fell on his face filled with awe and wonder. Then the Spirit entered into him and bade him stand on his feet, and gave him his commission to go to the house of Israel and proclaim the words spoken unto him. He was bidden to do his duty whether they would hear or forbear. The people of the Jews were impudent children, stiff-necked and rebellious, and no doubt Ezekiel felt his weakness, but God promised him help in the hour of trial. The land was full of crimes and violence, but this one man stood forth as the champion of right and order.

There were many false prophets and prophetesses at that time, but they prophesied to please the carnality of the people; but Ezekiel spoke from the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. He told them of all their secret abomination, and their secret wickedness, and threatened them with the just displeasure of the Heavens unless they repented and forsook their sins. Their high standing as the children of Abraham and their "silver and gold would not deliver them."

In the 9th chapter of Ezekiel is a picture of the day of judgment, in which God will render to every man according to his deeds. From the 10th chapter to the 24th, there is a minute description of the sins of the whole nation. Their idolatry, their deceit, their licentiousness, their professing with their lips to love God, while their hearts were far from him, their prophets dealing in lies, and women also professing to prophesy, would make the heart of the righteous sad whom God hath not made sad. Ezek. 13: 22. In the 22nd chap. are these words addressed to the p[illegible]: "Can thine heart endure, or thine hands be strong in the day that I shall deal with thee?" In the 24th chapter we have a painful account of the death of Ezekiel's wife. Could anything be more touching? He was told that she would die, be taken away from him while she was in the midst of health. What a comfort and consolation doubtless she had been to him, with her loving heart and cheerful songs. Probably his wife and home were all he had on this earth to solace his weary hours while dealing with that ungodly people—the Jews. Ezekiel was forbidden to drop a single tear or show any grief at her loss. So he went from his home that morning leaving his wife well; he preached unto the people in the morning, and that same evening she died.

In the 33rd chapter the duty of a watchman is clearly stated and also that of a prophet. In the 34th chapter it speaks of false ministers and their doom. In the 36th chapter are blessings to be given to the saints, and among them the gift of the Holy Ghost; also the 37th chapter is an account of the dry bones being resurrected by the power of the Holy Spirit. From the 37th to 47th is given a description of the New Jerusalem City and its blessings. In the 47th chapter the vision of the holy waters and the tree of life, and in the last verse of the book (Ezek. 48: 35) we have the best of all—God is there!

PATIENCE.

Among the exhortations recorded in God's Word for the church to-day, none seem so little needed, as the exhortation to patient waiting for the coming of Christ, for the most of those, who are professedly waiting for the coming of Jesus, are so very patient that they are almost wholly indifferent. Nearly everybody is contented to live out the moments without hearing anything on that subject, that is all there is of hope to God's church. How many sermons are there preached to-day, even by Adventists, in which the coming of Christ is not mentioned at all, or, if mentioned, is but an empty echo, with no power, no force, no life in it!

How many papers do you read, even of those pledged to the advancement of the truth respecting Christ's speedy advent, that sound forth in their columns the warning of earth's doom! They may repeat the statement, that "Christ is near," but it is with no appreciation of the fact, that they once had, it is with no flood of warmth and longing, that once accompanied the statement, and burned its way into the hearts of all who read it. This is manifest to all who will lift their sleep-heavy eyelids long enough to make an observation. The very pall of darkness is resting on the church that God called out to meet the Bridegroom, and for the reason that the only light that God has given to light up their darkness is neglected by them, viz., the sure word of prophecy. It is no fable we are speaking. We do not imagine it. It is the Heaven-depicted condition of the church just prior to the coming of Christ, alas! too faithfully lived out. The church is sleepily drifting with the world down the current to utter destruction. No appeal is loud enough, no warning is solemn enough, no evidence weighty enough to arrest their rapid course to death. Will nothing awake them? List the loud "alarum bells," that clamor forth peal on peal their warning of earth's final contest, . . . will they not awake you? No, no. The weight of cares has benumbed the sensibilities of those who were once his people, the alluring voices of earth have deafened them; the glamor of gain has bewildered and dazzled them. They are hopelessly, surely, swiftly gliding on to death.

Be patient, brethren. Ah! yes, there are a few who, even as the husbandman watches for the fruit of his sowing, and has long patience for it, as his only dependence for life, so they watch for Him in whom is hid the life, that will be given the church when he appears. There are a few who, with Job, are obliged to be patient under the infliction of trials of every kind, even of false religionists, who, as did the comforters of Job, try very hard to prove to us and to the world that we are in the wrong, and for our wrong-doing are afflicted of God. Just as the friends of Job, while professing to worship God, strove to convince him that he had all his lifetime been living a lie, even so do the professed church of to-day, and very many of them Adventists, try to prove that we have been following cunningly devised fables, when we gave such earnest heed to prophecy, in our search to know when Christ would make his second advent according to divine prediction. Job [illegible] patient, and his patience consisted in unflinchingly declaring, in the midst of all difficulties, and seeming contradictions, that he had been right, and was approved of God. He is our example of suffering affliction and patience, so says James: As he endured taunts and revilings, so must we, and still, with steady hand, ever keep aloft the banner of truth, and with untiring lips, speak forth the warning cry of "doom," the thrilling cry of "life."

Brethren, be patient. Would there were more that could feel the need of such an exhortation, but to the few, that still, with anxious eye, are looking for the King, we would say, with all in nature, politics, religion, and the financial condition of the world, to give confirmation to the statement, "Be patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth near."—Sel.

THE STORM-SIGNAL.

Looking out of my window I see fluttering from a flag-staff on the top of a lofty building a few rods distant, a tattered red flag, having a blue square in its centre. Hour after hour it has been flapping there beneath the dull November sky,—a portent of danger which I look at with a shudder, but have learned not to disregard. Sometimes when all seems bright and fair, that ominous flag is unfurled, and then we wait in suspense knowing that a storm is drawing near. From the central office of the signal service at Washington, there is flashed along the wires, a warning that a storm, moving in a certain course, is approaching, and ere long it breaks upon us.

There are storm signals all around us in this world. They hover above the scenes of sinful pleasure; they float along the ways trodden by the votaries of vice and folly, they flutter above the dizzy heights of ambition and the lofty paths of pride. It is no unfriendly hand that unfolds to the breeze these ominous banners, and that warns the heedless to stay their headlong course. "The prudent man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself, but the simple pass on and are punished."

There are storm signals overhanging the world. A world that lies in wickedness is a world exposed to wrath. Sin ever has calamities following in its train; and so long as iniquities abound, so long as injustice and ungodliness and blood and strife prevail, so long there are dangers and calamities in store for this world. Let the scorner scorn if he will, and let the rash adventurer brave the fury of the tempest, and despise the dangers that are before him, but let men of considerate judgment and of candid minds watch the storm signal, and see what God has said in his Word of the ways of sin and the awful doom of a sinful world. The prophets of peace may stifle fear, but they cannot stay calamity, they may cry "Peace, peace," but they cannot avert the impending doom of a world at war with its Maker.

"For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings, and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." Malachi 4: 1-3.

"But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape." 1 Thess. 5: 1-3.

"There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." 2 Peter 3: 3-14.—The Wayside.

IT is notorious that the attacks of unbelief are usually made rather on the human interpretations of divine truth than on the truth itself. The positions of the latter are impregnable, while various weak sides may be found in the former. The human statement is often an exaggeration rather than a true copy of the original, and the opposer finds the task of refuting the extreme expressions comparatively easy. But he does not always stop to note that the substantial truth remains. He has shot down only the man of straw.—Zion's Herald.

OLD TIMES AND OLD WAYS.

That great changes in the habits and experiences of people have taken place during the last century is patent to all. An important question relating to this subject is, Has the change elevated or depressed the moral standard of society in the political and religious departments? A vivid description of the olden times is given in Scribner's Monthly by Mr. John Burroughs:

"When my grandfather and grandmother came into the country where they reared their family and passed their days, they cut a road through the woods and brought all their worldly gear on a sled drawn by a yoke of oxen. Their neighbors helped them build a house of logs, with a roof of black ash bark and a floor of whitewood plank. A great stone chimney and fire-place—the mortar of red clay—gave light and warmth, and cooked the meat and baked the bread, when there was any to cook or to bake. Here they lived and reared their family and found life sweet. Their unworthy descendant, yielding to the inherited love of the soil, flees the city and its artificial ways, and gets a some acres in the country, where he proposes to engage in the pursuit supposed to be free to every American citizen—the pursuit of happiness."

Comparing the old times with the modern, he says:

"How much soever we may admire machinery and the faculty of modern invention, there is no machine like a man; and the work done directly by his hands, the things made or fashioned by them, have a virtue and a quality that cannot be imparted by machinery. The line of mowers in the meadows, with the straight swaths behind them, are more picturesque than the 'Clipper' or 'Buckeye' mower, with its team and driver. So are the flails of the threshers, chasing each other through the air, more pleasing to the eye and ear than the machine, with its uproar, its cloud of dust, and its general hurly burly."

The Editor of the Standard, in commenting upon the old times, the habits and character of the fathers, and the changes which have taken place, says:

"They had some elements of character which we cannot afford to lose. They were contented with the simple life of the country, and were not forever longing to partake the feverish life of cities. They accepted labor as a noble heritage, and looked upon the hard hand as the symbol of a man. They were willing to acquire slowly, and valued money for the sake of its uses. The millionaire was to them an abnormal and fabulous creation, a thing to be wondered at, like a giant in a show. They despised meanness and indirection. They could hardly conceive of such a thing as defalcation, in the exercise of either a public or a private trust. If they could have foreseen the dishonesties and the hateful, horrible corruptions in public life of the very next generation following their own, they would have felt sure that the end of the world had come. They believed in God, and the Bible, and eternity, and heaven and hell. They looked upon atheism as an impossible thing; the meeting-house had not yet become a place for see-sawing speculation, nor had the Sabbath yet been Teutonized or Gallicized. They had faith, hope and principle. How far "modern improvements" are to be held responsible for the changes seen in all these respects, we do not undertake to say. This, at least, is true, that in so far as they have led to the impression that a machine is better than a man, that a gold dollar is of more worth than a human soul, and that a rich man is a nobler "work" than an honest one, in so far, it were better that the faculty of invention had been denied to man, and that a Fulton, a Morse and an Edison had been an impossibility."

These comments we consider very correct, and show clearly that the moral standard has fallen since the days of our fathers. It is true that they knew but little about "defalcations," "dishonesties," "horrible corruptions in public life," compared to what we are witnessing in this generation. The Editor no doubt very truthfully said, "If they could have foreseen the dishonesties and the hateful, horrible corruptions in public life of the very next generation following their own, they would have felt sure that the end of the world had come." Why would they have felt sure that the end of the world had come? Because they, as he said, "Believed in God and the Bible." They would have believed it, because the Bible teaches that the last days would be "perilous," and that wicked men would "wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

The reason why the people of this generation, who are witnessing these rapid departures from virtue and righteousness, do not see that the end is near, is because they are being deceived more and more. J. C.

CRIME.

The question of the increase or decrease of crime for the last fifty years has become one of much interest, politically and theologically. Governments are becoming fearfully burdened with the expense of the criminal department, and the people demand more protection from the lawlessness which now prevails. Among theologians there are two classes who look at the crime of these days from two stand-points. Both classes agree that a change of the Divine Administration may soon be expected, and also agree that that change will be preceded by a gradual moral change which will be premonitory of the great change to follow it. The two hold exactly opposite views as to the nature of the change which must first take place. One class believes that the great change will take place at Christ's advent and the last judgment, which will be preceded by a gradual change with an increase of crime. The other class believe that the great change will be the conversion of all men to Christianity, and the commencement of a spiritual reign of Christ over the converted nations;—this to be preceded by a gradual moral change,—the diminishing of crime and the increase of righteousness.

As both agree that the great change may now be looked for, they agree also that the present time is the period when the moral change may be expected. Each class, to defend their theological position, earnestly gather all the proof they can to show that crime is increasing or decreasing. This fact causes an unusual earnestness in the discussion of this question; for an increase of crime at the present time is certainly a strong proof that the post-millennialists are not correct in their interpretations of the prophecies, and the reverse would prove the opposite. It is a fact that each of the classes rely much upon the rise or fall of the moral standard as a sign of the nearness of the grand event looked for. It is natural therefore that each should use all of the arguments which can honorably be adduced to show the relative moral status of the world at the present time.

On one side it is argued that Christianity is extending itself through the world, subduing opposing principles, increasing its area, membership and controlling power. On the other side it may be argued that there is a true and a false Christianity; the true always diminishes crime exactly in proportion to its increase; while the false always increases crime in its malignity and extent.

By these facts we get this rule: A religion, the power and influence of which can be increased, where crime at the same time is increased, is a false religion; and a religion which always diminishes crime in proportion to its increase, may be considered a true or saving religion. By this rule we test the religion of Christendom at this time, to ascertain if its boasted increase diminishes crime; and we find it a "fact that tabulated crime of every nation in Christendom is rapidly increasing. What does this prove? It proves that religion is diminishing, or that it is degenerating from the pure and saving, to the false, which gives license to sin; either of which becomes a sign that the Second Advent is at hand, and not the conversion of the world.

Will our brethren of the Christian faith, who differ from us upon this momentous question, candidly and in a courteous and brotherly way meet those questions squarely, and show us from the Scriptures and the history of Christ's Church that pure religion does not diminish crime, or that the statistical tables are incorrect, which give an increase of crime; or acknowledge that the present signs of the times do not indicate the speedy conversion of the world? We feel perfectly satisfied to have the unprejudiced public mind judge as to the candor and truthfulness of these conclusions, and determine whether crime of nearly all classes is, at the present time, diminishing or increasing. J. C.

CHICAGO NOT SECOND.

We feel confident that if a just classification of the cities of this country were made, as to the number and merit of their newspapers—secular and religious—Chicago would stand in the first class. We thus judge from an examination of those which we find weekly upon our table. The Interior is a large eight-page Presbyterian paper, well-filled with a good variety of religious matter, with but few advertisements. It is ably edited, and conducted by a good corps of contributors; and by its denominational standard it is sound in its doctrinal teachings and faithful in its exhortations to Christian obedience.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate is a large eight-page Methodist paper, exhibiting good mechanical skill, is printed on good paper, with good type, presenting commendable Christian enterprise, and containing much gospel truth; while its criticisms and rebukes of what it regards erroneous and sinful, are kindly expressed. We consider it a first-class Methodist paper.

The Advance is a sixteen-page Congregationalist paper, which we had an occasion recently to notice favorably.

The Standard is a beautiful eight-page paper, and is the leading representative paper of the Baptists in the West. It has but few equals in the land as to paper, type, mechanism, editorial ability, able contributions, strong defense of its denominational creed, and general gospel tone.

Our Rest is a sheet of sixteen pages, without special denominational connection, advocating prominently the speedy advent of Christ and purity of heart as an essential preparation to meet it.

* We also receive on exchange from Chicago The Weekly Inter Ocean, which is a high-toned and reliable secular paper. It gives the most interesting domestic and foreign news. It is candid in its discussions of home and foreign politics, and admits into its columns many interesting religious articles. It is a very good political paper. With such periodicals as these standing at the head of Chicago's list, we think that she will not fall behind her sister cities in enterprising journalism. ED.

OPPRESSION OF TAXATION.

One alarming feature of the present financial pressure is the burdens of taxation. All of the associated bodies of people in the world, from the empires down to the cities and towns, are being taxed beyond endurance, and, worse than all, this burden is increasing by the wicked ambition and recklessness of the rulers. Great appropriations for public buildings, much of it for ornaments and the foolish indulgence of a few office-holders, are wickedly made, thus imposing crushing burdens upon the poor and middle classes. These unprincipled rulers vote themselves and their friends high salaries, which the toiling, oppressed millions have to pay out of their hard-earned, scanty wages.

The following item of news will give a sample of this kind of oppression:

"The Providence City Hall was dedicated yesterday. The building is probably the most elegant of its kind in the country, no expense having been spared to give the city officials, the Aldermen, and everybody else who chose to witness the proceedings of the City Council very elegant quarters. The cost of the building will be over a million dollars, the gas fixtures alone costing $15,000, and two lamp-posts in front of the building $1500." J. C.

ENGLAND is relied upon as the most efficient national instrumentality in the speedy conversion of the world. Is the English nation preparing for such a holy, responsible work? Is the nation becoming more pure and Christ-like, so as to warrant the expectation of a great increase of gospel light and power in the enlightenment and conversion of the hundreds of millions now in moral darkness? Is the standard of Christian purity and morality rising or falling? Is it indicating an increase or decrease of evangelizing power? As is London so is England. A man in London makes the following statement relating to gambling in that city: "A well informed London correspondent states that more money has been won and lost in London during the past two seasons than in the twenty years previously." J. C.

GOOD TRACTS.

Those who wish some excellent tracts, to read and circulate, will do well to send to the Crisis office for tracts entitled: "Holiness to the Lord;" "The Second Coming of Christ," and "Partaking of Christ." These are the results of sermons preached by Bro. Geo. R. Kramer, last summer, at the Alton Bay Campmeeting, and phonographically reported by Bro. C. E. Barnes. These tracts are full of live thoughts, adapted to the times. Those who heard the sermons, as delivered by Bro. Kramer, need no further recommendation of the tracts, than to know that they are faithful reports of the same. M. O.

TURKISH HISTORY.

The Turks were not known much before the fourth century. They were then Buddhists, and embraced Mohammedanism in Persia, in the early part of the tenth century. Their fury was not diminished by becoming Mohammedans. These were the Seljuk Turks. They took possession of Jerusalem in 1065, and provoked the crusades, the first of which was in 1096, and the last in 1270. The Crusaders took Jerusalem in 1099, when Godfrey was made king of the city. During the progress of the crusades some two million men lost their lives in their efforts to keep Jerusalem out of the hands of the Turks, but they hold to-day the place where once stood the temple of Solomon. The evidence is strong to show that they will not much longer tread down "the Sanctuary." M. O.

INCREASE OF CRIME.

That crime is rapidly increasing is a fact most thoroughly sustained by passing events. License and lawlessness, lust and lasciviousness, seem to be the governing principles in the lives of thousands upon thousands in the larger cities, and popular villages. So it was in the days before the flood, and in the cities of the Jordan plain. These moral signs chime in with other prophetic tokens to show that we are passing through the last-day scenes. What a solemn, awful hour is this!

A late item of foreign news reads as follows: "Crime has increased rapidly in Germany during the last eight years. The convictions in Prussia alone have risen from 6403 in 1871 to 12,707 in 1878." This is a sample of the progress being made in these last days. There is no prospect of any improvement, because men are turning away from the sacred Scriptures to infidelity, thus allying themselves with Satan instead of Christ. M. O.

"DECRETALIA."

The Roman Decretalia is an authoritative work in Roman ecclesiastical law; the decretal epistles form the second part of the canon law. Each Pope, when invested with "the succession," declares the Papal decretals to be true; hence, though the Popes be many members of one body or system, they assume to be one mind, or embodiment of the system they represent. . . . The following is a portion of the Decretalia:

"The Pope is considered to be the Vicar of Christ, not only upon earth, in heaven, and hell, but also over the angels and over the evil spirits. He administers at the same time jurisdiction and power over all patriarchs, a greater one than that of all angels, even so that he can place the latter under his ban.

"The whole world is to be taken for his diocese. He can turn a square into a circle, wrong into right, and can make something out of nothing. He can pronounce sentences and judgments, in contradiction to the right of nations, to the law of God and man—sentences, however absolute yet always just. He can free himself from the commands of the apostles, he being their superior; and from the rules of the Old Testament, aye, even from the prescriptions contained in the gospel. For the 'will' of the Pope is the rule laid down for the administration of justice. What he does is considered by God as being well done. He sits in one consistory with God, and shares the same judicial stool with Christ. The Pope is God's equal, except in sin; so that in cases where he changes his mind, it should be understood as if God himself had changed his mind. From the Pope there exists no appeal to God, because he himself is God upon earth and judges like God."

Truly these are "great words against the Most High." Is it not strange that a puny man should ever arrogate to himself such authority. Well may the system that sanctions such blasphemous things be called by the Lord an "abomination." M. O.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

A telegram from Berlin, dated Nov. 21st, 1878, says: "Gen. Kauffmann, while presenting a sword to the Afghan envoy at Tashkend for transmission to the Ameer, declared that whoever sided with Russia need not fear that a hair of his head would be injured." There is no room to doubt that the Russians are in sympathy with the Afghans. As the Russians helped the Bulgarians in their conflict with the Turks, before war was actually declared between Russia and Turkey, so it may be expected that the Russians will help the Afghans in contending against England, till the time come for Russia and England to engage directly in the bloody conflict. This will afford Russia a fine opportunity to seize upon Constantinople. Whoever lives to see another summer may expect to read of terrible fighting in the East. Earth's closing drama is rapidly approaching. Is the reader ready to meet the coming One? M. O.

NO MESSIAH.

A large number of the Jews have given up looking for the coming of any Messiah. This has been done by means of a spiritualizing system which will also enable one to upset the whole Bible, making it only a book of uncertainties, that may be changed as often as the currents of the wind. Mr. Solomon Schindler, a Jewish priest in Boston, is about giving a course of lectures in the Temple Adath Israel, each alternate Saturday morning (their Sabbath), to show that no personal coming of the Messiah can be expected. He refers, of course, to the first coming, and if there is no first coming, there can be no second. M. O.

REQUEST.

It is desirable to know and sum up what the leading papers of the great religious sects have said about the New York Prophetic Conference. I have ordered some of them—of course not all. Will brethren, who can lay hand on them, mail to my address the issues of the week ending Nov. 2, as also of Nov. 9? Will some one send the New York Evangelist, which cannot be obtained at its office? I desire the organs of all denominations, East, West, North and South. Good may come out of the move. Send the paper, or clip the article, with date, etc., and send that. Thanks for several already sent. D. T. TAYLOR.

Rouse's Point.

CARRYING TRACTS.

The practice of carrying a few choice tracts on the distinctive features of our faith is too much neglected by our traveling preachers. Often an opportunity presents itself for the accomplishment of great good in this way. If the minister has not a large fund to invest in this enterprise, let him keep just a few; if he does not wish to offer them publicly, still have them in his satchel in case of need. It is not every locality where they will be needed, but it is often like the experience of a western mountaineer, who said: "It isn't often that a man needs a pistol in this country, but when he does need it, he needs it awful bad."

So we must pass scores of men who are not in a condition to be reached by a tract, but occasionally we find one who is ripe for just the kind of instruction they furnish, and eager to investigate a particular topic, and we have not the needed document with us to open his eyes, and we reluctantly part, after a short effort to enlighten him, feeling we wanted that tract "bad," to finish the work begun. How many instances of this kind are constantly occurring, and for want of tracts we lose our opportunity of doing good. Then carry tracts—not the shallow kind that evince no thought upon the part of the writer, except on the surface, but tracts that will not repel thinking men by their internal intellectual weakness, even though they contain the truth. Traveling laymen, as well as preachers, should adopt this practice. Try it. W. S.

OLD FRIENDS.

Old friends, who really are "the true and the tried," should not be hastily exchanged for the new and untried ones, especially among ministers who have stood shoulder to shoulder in the work of God, "through thick and thin." Some forfeit their claim to our special friendship, it is true, by apostacy; but aside from this there is a proclivity on the part of some, as friends grow old, no matter how true, to get weaned from them and become allied to new ones, who often fail us. But there may come a day when the memory of old friendship will awaken the feelings of the poet—

"I am alone—my friends are gone;
Deep silence doth pervade the room,
And dark and dreary hangs the gloom
Around my heart. Ah! they are gone.

Yes, they are gone, to come no more;
Without, the chilling night-winds blow,
And on the hearth the bright coals glow
As cheerily as heretofore.

But, ah! their cheering warmth seems cold;
No are my friends—some in the grave,
And some estranged by love—ah! rave,
Poor heart, and the forgotten—mould—

I'll rave no more. My bosom-friends,
I love them yet; those that are gone
And those that live I e'er shall mourn,
And e'er shall love—all once were friends."

Alienated friends, misled by the strategem of wily foes, may be good at heart. Dead friends, whom we but half appreciated while living, will now be regretfully remembered. We cannot change the past, but looking upon the past we may borrow a lesson that may help improve the future. We have friends now living that may one day be among the dead. At their funerals we may show our esteem for them; but, if they are worthy, friendship should not be buried before burying the friend. Old friends are being diminished. The angel of death is touching one here, and another there. Let us prize them before deprived of them. W. S.

TIME OF THE ADVENT.

Dogmatic and speculative positions bearing upon this important topic we deplore; and the experience of the past should make us both modest and cautious. But when this is said, we are not to conclude that the time of the close of this world's sinful history is not to be known approximately. We think it is. Not perhaps with the absolute positiveness and definiteness that some speculators may wish, if they meddle with it; but in the light of strong probabilities, presented as probabilities, a cycle of time can be clearly marked as a period of blessed expectation. I am strongly impressed that 1880–3 is that cycle. I am not a rash know-so believer, but an array of facts so impress my mind that I think of giving to the Crisis readers some of my thoughts for examination, perhaps in January, in a series of prophetic articles. Let friends beware of sticking a know-so stake for 1880, for there are facts to be considered about that point that forbid all absolute positiveness, which should be considered before rashly rushing to a partially and poorly-digested conclusion. You will get my meaning in due time, with my arguments. W. S.

BRIEFS.

ELEMENTS OF HOLINESS.—No. 1.

S. A. S.

Holiness! Great and solemn word to be uttered in a world of sin and of sinners. Word indicative of grave necessity and grand possibility. Word suggestive of a pure, perfect, infinite God; and of weak, sinful, helpless men; and how they may be brought into fellowship one with the other. Key word in the wondrous redemptive plan. Word which stands sentinel over the claims of God and the hopes of men. Word inscribed in letters of blood on the cross and in letters of resplendent light over the gates of pearl which stand ajar to the city of the great King. Word evermore repeated by seraphic myriads, with veiled faces, in the unseen temple of the Most High Jehovah, and soon to be chanted by the "great company which no man can number," as, blood-washed and crowned, they march to their possessions of righteousness and peace.

Word before whose searching power the most saintly of saints, still in the body, may well pause for heart review and reassurance.

That holiness is as clearly and imperatively taught in the New Testament as repentance and regeneration we assume as too plainly true to need any proof. But just what holiness is remains to this moment an open question. Much has been written and still more has been thought and prayed touching this great subject, but its vastness has not been grasped nor its depths reached; and for the reason that finite mind cannot analyze an infinite force. We may, therefore, never expect, in this life at least, to be able to give an exhaustive definition of this grandest of all themes, among angels and men. But, in the light of revealed truth, we may all contribute our thought and experience concerning it, and so, with the Spirit's blessing, strengthen the mutual faith.

What is holiness? As ascribed to the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost it is absolute, infinite, ineffable purity and perfection of parts. It is the inclusive and eternal element of the Divine Subsistence. That to which nothing can be added, and from which nothing can be taken away. Unspeakable and incomprehensible completeness. This is holiness in God. But what is holiness in man?

The first event in christian holiness is the washing of the heart or moral nature in the blood of Christ. By which we mean the application of the expiatory merit and the cleansing power of the blood of the immaculate Lamb of God. The blood applied till all and every part is clean. Washed till the will and the affections are pure. The very taint of sin expunged. The whole moral and spiritual being made "whiter than snow." Less than this does discredit to the merit of the atonement and comes short of the complete work of the Spirit.

"If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1: 6, 7.

The Bible says very much about washing, cleansing, being clean. "But ye are washed", "That washed us"; "Saved us by the washing"; Now ye are clean"; "Let us cleanse ourselves."

The figure is striking. Sin is moral defilement. Our whole being is contaminated. The leprosy strikes through every fibre and every drop of blood. "The whole head is sick, the whole heart is faint." Touch the carnal man where you will; in his relations to himself—the relation of one faculty to another—in his relation to his fellows; in his relations to God, and the deadly virus at once oozes out. The terrible history of human nature proves that carnal man is at enmity with all cleanness, all holiness—at enmity by the force of innate corruptness. Man's lapse from primeval holiness was more than a peccadillo; it was an act of deliberate and unmitigated apostasy from God, by which his entire nature became alien, hostile, guilty; morally and physically corrupt.

The first element of holiness, therefore, is cleanness. Inward cleanness, and outward cleanness. The heart clean; the affections clean; the thoughts, the tongue, the imaginations clean; the whole being clean. Filth, whether of thought, word or act, gone; all washed away. Corruption poured out. The soul cleansed; cleanness, moral and spiritual, the status of heart and life.

If the words are filthy—savoring of tainted imaginations—if the deportment be rude and vulgar; if the exhibition of any carnality be otherwise than painful, then we are not yet clean; the washing, if any washing there has been, is but partial. The seeds of the old native corruptness remain. We have not yet said, "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head."

Clean. How pleasing the impression made on the feelings by the simple word. How exhilerating the sensations produced by the sight of cleanness; be it of the grassy lawn, the hearthstone or the person. How sweet is nature when it has been washed by a great summer shower—all the gathered dust and debris swept away. How green, fresh, flowering, beautiful. So is a washed soul, a cleansed heart to the eye of God and Christ and the Holy Spirit and all the holy angels.

And as really as the wretched victim of vice, groveling in some dark, loathsome, subterranean slum; dripping with rags and filth and pestiferous disease; but just now extricated and washed till he is clean every whit—as really as he is conscious of the wonderful regeneration of his whole condition, so really is a soul conscious of washing in the precious blood of Christ—washing till all is "whiter than snow." Cleanness is the first element of holiness.

Dispatches from the West say that a tremendous snow and sleet storm prevailed on Sunday, Dec. 1st, along the line of the Missouri Pacific R. R., extending into Kansas.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We would say to those who have ordered "The Christian Secret of a Happy Life," that they are now being published, and as soon as they are ready we will fill their orders. Please be patient. AGENT.

TO THE BRETHREN OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

At the late session of the State Conference, held at South Barnstead, a protracted meeting committee and a State Evangelist were chosen to hold and make arrangements for meetings in places where there might be need of protracted effort, and in new fields where there had been little or no preaching. Much good was accomplished the last winter in this work, and we trust that with the hearty co-operation of preachers and laymen in different sections of the State, the work may be even more widespread and successful than heretofore. Being unacquainted with the wants of places in the larger portion of the State, we would request those living in different sections who desire protracted meetings, or who wish to invade new fields, to inform us, and such arrangements as thought best will be made.

We believe the time has come for more earnest labor in the great field already white for the harvest. The season for holding such meetings has now fully come, and we desire that the coming campaign may not be one of defense, but aggression; not merely to "hold the fort," but to advance on the strongholds of the enemy, and rescue some who are perishing. Let the army not idly repair to winter quarters, but with courage and boldness take the open field and fight until an honorable discharge shall be given. Communications may be addressed to John Parsons, Northwood, State Evangelist, or the writer. F. L. PIPER.

Melvin Village, N. H.

WILLIAM MILLER, THOUGH DEAD, YET SPEAKETH.

The following, taken from "Miller's Views," p. 33, I most fully endorse as sound, scriptural faith. I would like to see the belief of our honored Bro. Miller, on this important theme, published in the Crisis. T. M. PREBLE.

"I believe in God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is a spirit, omnipresent, omniscient, having all power, Creator, Preserver, and self-existent. As being holy, just and beneficent. I believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, having a body in fashion and form like man, divine in his nature, human in his person, God-like in his character and power. He is a Savior for sinners, a Priest to God, a Mediator between God and man, and King in Zion. He will be all to his people, God with us forever. The Spirit of the Most High is given him, the power of the Most High is given him, the people of the Most High are purchased by him, the glory of the Most High shall be with him, and the kingdom of the Most High is his on earth."

THE BOSTON MEETING.

It was our privilege yesterday to attend the Advent Christian Meeting in Boston. There has not been for years in this city such an interest in the soon coming of the Lord and the salvation of men as is now manifested at Morgan Chapel, Shawmut Avenue. A united effort is being made to give the gospel of the kingdom to the people here, and save as many as possible from the destruction which is impending.

The meetings are largely attended, and the Holy Spirit attends both the preaching and other meetings of the church. The prospect is most cheering. Elder C. E. Barnes preached the Word yesterday. Some one hundred partook of the Lord's Supper. Pray for this church. I. I. LESLIE.

Boston, Dec. 2d, 1878.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Quite a number of years ago, myself and others held a Tent Meeting in the vicinity of Caldwell's Manor, Canada. During the services one day a colt belonging to some one attending the meeting strayed away after an unknown team that passed by, and was supposed to be lost. I now have valuable information to the advantage of the owner of the colt, or his heirs if he be not living, which I will promptly communicate if I shall ascertain the name and address. Any one who can inform on the matter please address me at Newburyport, Mass. EDWIN BURNHAM.

FROM BRO. J. J. DUNN.

Dear Brn. in the "blessed hope":—I have received the first number of the Crisis directed to this place. Misfortune compelled me to change. I have been troubled ever since a child with lameness. When I first commenced to walk it was on crutches. It wore away when I was sixteen, and I did not feel any more of the pain until recently. I have always been deformed. I had to stop work and go where I could be taken care of. My life has been filled up with sorrow, but I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he will come soon, and then I shall be made sound in flesh, and the tears of my sorrow will be wiped away. If I should depart this life before he comes, I shall go to my grave knowing that I have fought a good fight, finished my course, and kept the faith, and that henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

Obituaries.

SALTMARSH. In Haverhill, Mass., Nov. 21st, 1878, very suddenly of paralysis, Sister A. T. Saltmarsh, wife of Bro. A. H. Saltmarsh, aged fifty-one years.

Sister S., during the last twenty-five years, lived an exemplary, devoted Christian life, exercising strong faith in the great cardinal truths of the gospel,—the personal speedy Advent of Christ, resurrection of the dead, Messiah's future reign upon the earth, and calmly waited Immanuel's glorious triumph—the redemption of his people at his blessed manifestation. Her piety shone brightest in her own family circle, in her earnest prayers and chaste conversation, love and loyalty to her husband, true motherly interest and care for her children, unceasing kindness for her parents, hospitality to friends, benevolence to the poor, and good will to all. Her feet have ceased to walk in the thorny path of the curse. She has laid down at death's dark station, to rest in undisturbed sleep, awaiting the last trump, when in bridal robes of queenly glory she will walk the rosy path of the restored Paradise. The bereaved family—husband, children, father and sisters, are grief stricken at the loss of one so noble and true. The parting was bitter, but the separation will be short, and the reunion will be infinitely blessed and eternally glorious. Amen. J. C.

HARLEY. In Newcastle, Me., Oct. 22nd, 1878, after an illness of four days, Thomas Harley, aged eighty-four years.

Another good man is gone. Bro. H. was one of the few in that town who read the lectures of Bro. Miller in 1842 and became firm and consistent believers in the soon coming of Christ. He has been kept by the blessed hope ever since. He was present at the funeral of his cousin, the late R. Harley, whose death occurred only five weeks previous; and the next day, although in usual health, remarked to me, 'You will probably be called in a short time to attend my funeral.'

Bro. H. was a faithful member of the Baptist Church until excluded for his faith in the soon coming of Christ. Yet he ever retained the confidence and fellowship of the living members of the church and of the community, for his strict integrity and real piety. For many years has his heart rejoiced in prospect of soon seeing his Savior. He was a faithful Christian, a kind husband and father, and a true friend. But he sleeps in Jesus, leaving a faithful, believing widow, a daughter and son-in-law, with many friends, to mourn their loss. May the God of all grace comfort and sustain our aged sister, and also lead the affectionate daughter to trust her father's God and Savior, that, as a family, they may be ready to meet husband and father at "the resurrection of the just." J. C. WHITCOMB.

MILLETT. In Garland, Maine, Oct. 9th, 1878, Bro. Abner M. Millett, aged fifty five years.

Bro. Millett for many years believed in the near coming of the Lord, and hoped to be among the number that would be alive in that day, instead of going down to the grave. But death marked him for its prey, and after a brief illness, in which he suffered much, he fell asleep in Jesus, in hope of a better resurrection and a part in that inheritance which fadeth not away. He leaves a beloved wife and children to mourn his loss. Words of comfort were spoken from a text of his own selection in 1 Thess. 4: 18—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words." G. W. BEAN.

BONNEY. In Hartford, Me., Oct. 14th, 1878, Bro. D. B. Bonney, aged fifty-four years.

That fell destroyer—consumption—has found another victim in the subject of this notice. Bro. Bonney for many years lived a faithful, consistent Christian life, and waited with earnest expectation for his Redeemer from heaven. The church will miss his presence at our meetings, his material help, his exhortations, his prayers, and his voice in our songs of praise. He was always at his post. His wife and children will greatly miss his counsel; but they sorrow not as those that have no hope, not being ignorant concerning them that are asleep. E. M. HAGGETT.

MONSON. In Bantam, Ct., Nov. 12th, 1878, Bro. Leavitt Monson, aged eighty-four years.

The subject of this notice was entirely blind for nearly sixty years, and for over two years confined to his bed. Bro. M. was converted when a young man, and loved the life and power of godliness. He embraced the doctrines held by us as a people about twenty-eight years ago, and hoped to live till Jesus came; but he has fallen asleep. By his request the writer attended the funeral, and spoke from Eccl. 9: 5, a text selected by himself. I. CURTISS.

ALLEN. My father, William Allen, fell asleep in Jesus at East Haddam, Ct., Oct. 10th, 1878, aged eighty-eight years.

He was brought to New Britain, Ct., his former home, for burial. Very many of the dear brethren and sisters who started out to meet the Lord in 1843 will remember him, and his earnestness in the cause. His home was always open to God's children. The Crisis has been a weekly visitor in his home since it was first published. He loved the truths it promulgated. We feel assured that he is safely hid away for a little while, and when the great Life Giver comes will come forth to life.
E. N. BURT.

WOOD. At the residence of her father in Paoli, Wis., Nov. 10th, 1878, Mary Wood, aged twenty-six years, wife of Prof Edwin D. Wood, and daughter of Bro Peter W. Matts.

Sister Mary gave her heart to Christ about a dozen years ago, and was baptized by the writer, with between twenty and thirty others. She died in the faith of a coming resurrection. By her request we tried to comfort her numerous friends with these words: "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." This makes the second time that death has entered Bro Matt's house within a year. God comfort the afflicted.
WM SHELDON.

BUTTON. At the residence of her son in Brodhead, Wis., Nov. 11th, 1878, Mrs. M. Button, in her eighty-fourth year.

She had long been a believer in our Savior's return. But she sleeps. We called the attention of the numerous friends to Paul's admonition: Sorrow not as others which have no hope. Her intellectual powers were not much weakened by age. Five middle-aged sons and one daughter were present at the funeral, among whom were two clergymen and one lawyer, besides a large number of more distant relatives, who deeply deplore the loss.
WM SHELDON.

TOMPKINS. In New Haven, Ct., Nov 8th 1878, suddenly, while at work, of heart disease, Edmund Tompkins, aged seventy-three years.

Bro. Tompkins was an uncompromising Adventist and a good man. He died with the armor on, looking for the blessed hope. We miss the dear brother, but hope to meet him on the immortal shore.
J. E. CLARK.

FULTON. In Paris township, Howard county, Iowa, Bro William T. Fulton fell asleep in Jesus after a severe illness, July 16th, 1878, in the sixtieth year of his age.

So has passed away another old standard-bearer. Bro. Fulton was born in Clarian Co., Penn., Oct. 31st, 1817, and died in the full assurance of a joyful resurrection at the soon appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.
JOSEPH CHAPMAN.

ROBINSON. In Howard Centre township, Howard Co., Iowa, Oct. 26th, 1878, my niece, Mary Jane Robinson, in the 27th year of her age.

Funeral services conducted by the writer.
JOSEPH CHAPMAN.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Nov 28. The Times has the following dispatch from Berlin: "The St Petersburg correspondent of the Vienna semi-official Political Correspondence says that Russia has announced the intention of actively supporting the Ameer, in the event of England occupying any points in Afghanistan from which the Russian dominion in Asia might be effectually threatened. The announcement is based upon the assertion that England has violated the alleged Afghanistan agreement of Lord Clarendon by the occupation of Quettah. The intention of Russia to interfere in Afghanistan is apparently confirmed by the Moscow Gazette declaring that interfering is indispensable, now that the occupation of Quettah has been succeeded by expeditions in the direction of Candahar and Harat."

A dispatch from Pesth states that there have been serious floods on the river Save, attended by considerable loss of life and immense destruction of military stores.

A dispatch from Erzeroum declares the Russian army in the new Asiatic provinces of Russia has again been placed on a war footing.

Appalling distress and destitution exists among the mechanics and laborers of Sheffield in consequence of the business depression. Hundreds are living in tenements without clothing or furniture, which they have been forced to sell to procure food. They are without fuel and dependent on the charity of their neighbors for subsistence. The Mayor has called a public meeting to devise relief.

The Mayor of Barrow-in-Furness has called a public meeting to adopt measures to relieve the distress caused by depression in trade.

The Turkish Redifs and Circassians sacked 1200 houses in the Melnik district in Macedonia on the 20th inst., and massacred the inhabitants without distinction of age or sex.

London, Nov 29. The Russian journals state that the Ameer is concentrating his forces near Cabul, which is strongly fortified.

Ten thousand operative cotton spinners at Oldham, Eng., came out on a strike to-day.

Lisbon, Nov. 25. This part of the coast of Portugal was visited by a storm on Saturday. At the mouth of the Tagus three vessels and eighteen lives were lost.

Rome, Nov 25. Signor Cairoli suffers considerably from inflammation of his wound, and will be obliged to keep his bed some days. News is received from Florence that the man arrested for throwing a bomb into the procession there has confession his crime.

Berlin, Nov. 26. The Post says that the effect of the Afghan war will be that England will have to renounce the idea of maintaining the Turkish rule in Eastern Roumelia, because, even if successful in Afghanistan, she will need her Indian forces in Asia, and be unable to brandish them as a threat on the European theatre of war.

It is officially announced that Russia and Roumania have arrived at an understanding by which the regulation of the treaty of Berlin, relative to the passage of Russian troops through Roumania, is extended to the Dobrudja. The matter is thus settled in accordance with Roumanian wishes. It is confirmed that the Roumanians will enter the Dobrudja Tuesday.

Pesth, Nov. 28. A dispatch to the Pesther Lloyds from Berlin says: "Russia is about to begin a diplomatic campaign with England in relation to Afghanistan. Gen. Kauffmann has handed his Government a memorandum, pointing out how dangerous to the security of the southern frontier of Turkistan it would be if the Khyber passes were permanently occupied by the British troops. Gen. Kauffmann regards as groundless the British apprehensions of Russia's threatening the northern frontier of India from Central Asia. This frontier is quite impregnable, while the British occupation of southern Afghanistan would be a standing menace to Russian Turkistan. The St. Petersburg Cabinet, relying on the report, will ask serious guarantees from England, that no changes be made in the territory or independent condition of Afghanistan."

A dispatch from Sukhar says: The news from the Quettah column is discouraging, and it is believed the advance on Candahar will be delayed.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

There has been a disastrous flood at Norwich. From 3000 to 4000 dwellings rendered uninhabitable. The damage is very great.

St. Louis, Nov. 10. A slight shock of an earthquake was felt here about midnight. A shock was also felt in different parts of the State.

Little Rock, Nov 19. A severe shock of earthquake was felt here at 11 40 last night and considerable exitement prevailed in several parts of the city.

New York, Nov. 18. Panama advices of the 7th state that a severe earthquake occurred in Manizales, the capital of Antioquia, Oct. 9. One hundred and twenty-one houses were destroyed, including a church, hospital, the principal school, the city buildings and many others.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 17. A dispatch from Mt. Sterling says: "A riot took place here to-day in which from twenty to thirty shots were fired. Two men were instantly killed and three wounded. Marshal Young, in attempting to quiet the disturbance, was mortally wounded.

There are rumors of revolution in Ecuador. Several arrests of prominent citizens of Guayquil have been made and others banished. They are accused of planning to assassinate the President and several of his trusted adherents.

Panama, Nov. 7. Advices from Salvador state that the volcanoes of Izalco and Santa Ana are in a state of tremendous activity. For miles around ashes are falling, and the air is filled with smoke, darkening day and making the scene look gloomy and terrifying. The inhabitants in the neighboring villages are terribly alarmed, and many have fled to places of safety.

Two steamboats recently collided on the Mississippi river, and twenty lives were lost.

The President of a coal company in Philadelphia has recently made way with $83,000.

Notices.

NOTICE.

A Protracted Meeting will be held (the Lord willing) at the Second Advent Church, Worcester, Mass., commencing SUNDAY, DEC. 15TH, and continue as long as duty demands. Eld. E. A. Stockman will preach the Word and conduct the meetings. It is hoped that the brethren and sisters of the Worcester Church will make a special effort to attend these meetings, and all who will. Come "filled with the Spirit," with the Pentecostal power, and let us make one more effort to save the perishing. Time is short. Soon the cry will be heard, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" In view of this, let us come together in "one accord," with one mind, and make a strong pull—a pull all together in the Holy Ghost, in the name of Him who is "mighty to save," and we shall see our labors blest, and souls added to the church, such as shall be saved in the day of God.
G. E. MERRILL, Committee.

NOTICE.

A Quarterly Session of the Massachusetts Second Advent Conference (Eastern District) will be holden in Lowell, Mass., at Mechanics' Hall, commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 25th, at 7.30 P. M., continuing daily and over the following Sunday. Preaching afternoon and evenings, with prayer and conference services as the Lord wills. Come, dearly beloved, respond to this invitation from the church in Lowell, and the call for the meeting. Come up to this feast in the spirit of consecration and effort consistent with our message. You may expect the Lord's anointed there to preach and labor for the salvation of the lost.
L. BOUTELL.

New York Conference.

The Semi-Annual Meeting of the New York A. C. Conference will meet with the A. C. Church worshiping in their new Hall on the south side of Main Street bridge, Rochester, N. Y., on Thursday evening, Dec 12th, and continue over Sunday. We desire a full attendance of all the ministers, and a good representation from every church, in the form of delegates and free-will offerings. Let every brother and sister who believe Jesus is soon coming show their faith by their works, in contributing liberally to aid the missionary cause, that others may bear the glad tidings of his near approach, and lay hold on the hope of eternal life.

The Rochester Church not being sufficiently strong in numbers and finance to entertain all who might come to this great central city, only pledge themselves to entertain all the ministers and delegates. If, after these are supplied with homes, there is yet room, they will accommodate as many more as they can. It is designed to have a large able spread in the Hall for dinner and supper. A good idea. We hope this meeting will be a genuine revival one from beginning to end, as the church is now advancing towards this point. Let us all pray and work for this one object.
R. H. BATEMAN, Sec'y of Conf.

Conference Notice.

The Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec, Northern Vermont, and Northern New Hampshire, will hold its Annual Session, as per adjournment, at Coaticook, P. Q., in the new and commodious Advent Hall, kindly built for our use by Bro. G. Taplin, commencing Thursday, January 9th, 1879, at 2 o'clock P. M., and holding over Sabbath, Jan. 12th. Two sermons each day, business sessions also, and a good attendance, with ample provisions for all who come, may be expected. Circumstances favor the hope that it will be a harmonious and profitable meeting. Let all our ministers, officers of churches, duly appointed delegates, and all others who can, attend, and let all parts of our field be reported by the living voice, or by letter. Let fervent prayer be offered by all interested, for the good of the meeting, that by God's abundant blessing it may be the beginning of better days.
C. P. DOW, President.
A. N. TILSON, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Lord willing, there will be a Protracted Meeting at Hardwick, Vt., commencing Tuesday evening, Dec 10th, and continuing evenings during the week and over Sunday, the 15th, and longer if duty requires. Bro. J. H. Smith is expected to be with us in this meeting. Brethren and sisters in the vicinity are requested to make a special effort to attend this meeting, and to work for the salvation of the perishing. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon the meeting.
L. C. & M. MCKINSTRY.

NOTICE.—The next session of the Oxford and Androscoggin County Quarterly Conference will be held at East Sumner, commencing Friday evening, Dec 27th, and holding over the following Sunday. Strangers may inquire for Bro Thomas J. Stephens. Passengers coming on the Buckfield and Rumford Falls R. R. will leave the cars at "Warren Road" (a flag station), by notifying the conductor. Those coming from McFalls, purchase tickets to Sumner. Those coming from Canton, purchase tickets to Buckfield. Teams will be at the station to take all who come to the place of meeting—Stephens' School House.
JARED WHITMAN, President.
JOSHUA HOWARD, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The next Quarterly Meeting of the Advent Christian Churches in Sanilac Co., Mich., is appointed to be held with the church at Elk, in their new Chapel in the village of Peck, fourteen miles west of Lexington, commencing Friday evening, Jan 3d, 1879, and continue over the Sabbath. Business session and reports of ministers and delegates Saturday, at 3 P. M. Love-feast Sunday, at 9½ A. M. Sister churches of adjoining counties are cordially invited. Come all, in the spirit of the dear Savior, and a rich blessing will be ours. In behalf of the Churches.
Pastors: GEO. W. WRIGHT, Lexington; L. C. KERR, Peck.

NOTICE.—The first Annual Meeting of the North Western Michigan A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Hesperia, Mich., commencing Thursday evening, Jan 2d, 1879, at 7 o'clock. Let as many of the brethren and sisters attend this meeting as circumstances will permit, as important business demands your attention. We also expect, by the help of the Lord, to do something toward upbuilding the glorious truths we have espoused. Come, ready to work for the Master. Good homes will be provided for all.
For the Board, T. P. S. HAMPSON, Sec.

NOTICE.—The Second Session of the Knox and Lincoln County Quarterly A. C. Conference will meet in South Hope, Me., in Bro Robert Martin's Hall, Thursday evening, Dec 26th, and hold over the Sabbath. Come, brethren and sisters to this meeting to work for God and the salvation of sinners. Do not come riding a hobby, but come walking by faith.
S. K. PARTRIDGE, President.
H. S. MITCHELL, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Annual Session of the York Co A. C. Conference will be held at Biddeford, Me., commencing Dec 5th, at two o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren and sisters of York county and vicinity, let us give up every worldly care and come up to the house of the Lord, that we may unite our voices in praises to God for his loving kindness to us, also in warning sinners of the judgment day that is so near at hand. May God help us to sound the alarm in thunder tones in the ears of the ungodly, and may they hear and flee to Jesus for refuge.
M. F. NORTON, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The first Quarterly Session of the Vermont Adv Chris. Conference will be held in Warren, Vt., commencing Dec. 4th, 7 o'clock P. M., and hold over the 8th. It is desired that as many of the preachers as can, and others also, will be at this meeting. Come, let us be in earnest. Do not let the traveling and other petty hindrances be heard any more, but up and work for the truth's sake.
A. L. DINSMORE, Sec.
A. DAMON, Pres.

NOTICE.—If the Lord will, Mrs. C. S. Whitney will be at Yalesville, Ct., Sunday, Dec. 8th, through the week, and over the next Sunday. It is expected that she will hold a series of evening meetings. A cordial invitation is extended to all, especially to those who love the Lord, without respect to sects. Come in the name of the Lord, that good may be done for the upbuilding of Zion and for the glory of God. For the Church,
S. C. LINSLEY.

NOTICE.—There will be a two days' meeting of Little Marsh Church, Tioga Co., Penn., held at the Button school-house, commencing Dec. 7th. All are invited.
D. B. HUNT, Pastor.

To the Brethren in Kansas.

At our last Annual Meeting a motion was carried that all the brethren be asked to donate the small sum of fifty cents, during the coming year, for the support of our State Evangelist, and that the financial committee, whose names are published in the report of said meeting, be required to report quarterly to the Treasurer, Wm. H. Snyder, of Centropolis. You will see by the report of Eld. J. C. Smith that he did not receive enough last year to defray expenses. The first quarter of the year will soon be expired. Will our financial committee look after this matter at once? "The laborer is worthy of his hire."
M. MCGUIRE, Sec. of State Conf.

NOTICE.—There will be a "Gospel Revival Meeting" on Montgomery Hill, Mass., commencing Sunday, Jan. 5th, to hold through the week. Preaching by Eld. B. Hitchcock and the writer.
WM. C. STEWART.

NOTICE.—Any wishing me to labor with them in a series of Protracted Meetings, for the salvation of those unsaved, from one to three weeks, please address me immediately at Savoy Centre, Mass.
H. K. FLAGG.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH,
ENTITLED
THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT.

Containing the ORIGINAL GREEK TEXT OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, with an Interlineary Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the VATICAN MANUSCRIPTS, together with Illustrative and Explanatory Foot Notes, and a copious selection of References.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers. One vol., 884 pages. Price, extra Cloth, $4.00; Library Binding, $5.00 postpaid. For sale at Crisis Office.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.
C. E. BARNES, Sec. Adv. Chris. Pub. Soc.

☞ Remittances should be sent to the Treasurer, OZIAS GOODRICH, Boston, Mass., or they may be enclosed with remittances to the Crisis Office.

FAINT NOT.

Christian, in the hour of darkness
Falter not, but hope in God;
In well doing be not weary,
Resting on his faithful word—
"I am with you!"
Strong "endure," and reap reward.

Labor in the whitening harvest,
Where the Lord hath marked thy lot;
Lo, thy Savior is beside thee,
Gladly gather, falter not;
Strong in Jesus,
Whose own blood thy pardon bought.

Bid the many that surround thee—
All the weary, faint, unfed,
In the highways and the hedges,
To the Gospel banquet spread,—
"Come to Jesus!"
Come and eat the "Living bread!"

Faint not! keep thy Lord's love burning;
He bore weariness and pain,—
When, to promised rest returning,
Many sheaves shall be thy gain.
Toil with Jesus
Never, never is in vain.

Faint not, fear not! night's dark shadows,
Soon they'll haste to flee away;
Even now the daystar rising
Marks the dawning of the day;
Christ shall conquer,
Earth shall smile beneath his sway.
—Messiah's Herald.

NEW TESTAMENT BAPTISM. WHAT IS IT?

BY C. R. COPP.

It is death, burial and resurrection illustrated. (1) It is the confession of our faith in the death, burial and resurrection of our Lord, as the atonement for sin and the bringing of life and immortality to light. (2) It is the expression of our death to sin, as the moral effect of that atonement, when personally appropriated, and of our consequent burial, and resurrection to a "newness of life."

Everywhere in the expository writings of the apostles is baptism associated with death and burial, or the resurrection. In that old familiar, resurrection battle-hymn—the 15th of 1st Cor.—which sends out such soul-inspiring notes at Easter morning, and from beside the bier, Paul brings them so close together, that their relationship cannot be doubted. "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead? And why stand we in jeopardy every hour?" Unquestionably the absolute necessity of a resurrection, as the gate to our salvation from "jeopardy," is here proved, together with baptism as its type.

Again, Rom. 6 : 3-5—"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection." Col. 2 : 12—"Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Peter, in writing of the eight souls of Noah's family, who were saved by water at the deluge, says: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

This is enough to settle the purpose of baptism surely, and the purpose ought to settle the form, as really as a mould shapes the molten liquid poured into it. Is it not strange that so many diverse ways of administering it are resorted to? But false worship started with Cain's offering, and it will continue to the end, no doubt. Baptism is as much a figure of faith at work)—"faith, if it hath not works is dead"—this side of the death, burial and resurrection of the Lord, pointing back to it, as were the sacrifices under the law, on the other side pointing forward to it. They are all indexes. The first principle of every ordinance of the Bible is their correct outline or form, with which God teaches, in object lessons, his distant and great purposes to the faithless.

The benefit to the performer of the ordinance comes only through this channel. Hence, Abel's lamb, "without spot and blemish," was slain, which in outline pointed with exactness down through the ages, to the Lamb of God—Jesus—who should be slain for the remission of sin; and thus was righteous Abel blessed. Not so of Cain. We find him equally zealous in worship, bringing in (more in value no doubt than Abel) of the fruit of his field, which did not represent in figure the necessary faith; hence their refusal and the result. It is useless to attempt to worship God through works, or outward ordinances, without the gleaming light of true faith. We should blunder at every step. God was rich enough without Cain's fruits, or even Abel's lamb—they were already his—but he wanted faith illustrated or expressed. He is the same God to-day.

God's particular dealing is seen on every page of sacrificial law; and that in mercy, to encourage faith in the great sacrifice of his Son that was to follow. Have we any right to say that he is any less particular in the execution of the ordinances of the New Testament than he was with the Old? Who dare assume that? There was only one way to illustrate the present faith back there. Our present faith lies in the resurrection which is illustrated by baptism alone. Be careful of your figure then. The form must be carried out or not attempted. If the circumstances are such that the true form of baptism cannot be carried out, he will save without it at all, and only on those conditions. His love and mercy are exhibited in this, that he makes "belief" the keynote to salvation; because it can be experienced in any circumstances, anywhere; on the dying couch or gallows, where the performance of the ordinance is impossible. "He that believeth not shall be damned."

Many resort to a more agreeable form of baptism, as they have an idea the form is of no consequence. Let such know that the form is the first consideration in an illustration. A draughtsman who had been requested to draw, in outline, a horse, might with equal right present an outline of the stable, saying: "I don't like to draw a horse; it don't make any difference, I feel just as well drawing a stable as I should drawing a horse." True feeling exists in baptism only through "the answer of a good conscience toward God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ," and of our death to sin fully realized in burial and resurrection. If Jesus Christ died and was buried, and raised three times successively, then let us have "triune" immersion; not otherwise. If they took him down from the cross and stood him on his feet and sprinkled or poured a little earth upon him, and from thence he was resurrected, let us by all means stand and be sprinkled or poured; not otherwise.

Sprinkling was done only under the law; and what for? As an emblem of how Christ's blood should be sprinkled from the cross on Calvary, as the atonement and sprinkling of a better covenant. Where is sprinkling done in the new covenant? It does say something about our bodies being "washed with pure water." God alone can "sprinkle the heart from an evil conscience," and that with the Holy Ghost. Hebrews 10 : 22.

John's baptism was a novel one at its commencement; it was down in Jordan. The Savior asks the significant question of the Pharisees,—as if it was a new order of things—"Was it from heaven or of men?" It occurred at places where the illustration of death, burial and resurrection could be carried out, in places where was "much water"—in Enon—or many springs, making much water (John 3 : 23), and on the shores of Galilee; proving practically that the baptism of the New Testament is immersion.

Correct baptism is the only kind that is of any value; no latitude is granted in its application. It is best that a person know its meaning before participating. There is every reason to believe that Philip's reasoning with the eunuch was to show its bearing as related to Jesus' death and resurrection. However, if a person has been baptized properly once, not understanding its meaning, there is no reason they should again be baptized, any more than that a man who is on the track which leads to a certain place should go back and start again because he failed to realize that he had passed a certain town of note.

Baptism was not intended as a blessing upon the feelings, merely. The question should be, Has he been baptized correctly, according to the Bible? If not, then he may with propriety retrace his steps. The reward at the journey's end is what is sought after; therefore let us not be concerned, only that we are proceeding on the right path.

It is related of Zacharias and Elizabeth, in Luke 1 : 6, that "they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." See to it, ye servants of his, that ye do likewise. What consistency is there in keeping so strictly to form in the Lord's Supper (though still farther removed as an essential to salvation), and in being so lax in regard to baptism, which is the next step to belief? The Bible says not, "He that believeth and eateth the Lord's Supper shall be saved," but "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." These two ordinances are both important, but be as particular, as to form, with one as the other, for they both point to the same event. The one—the supper—only bringing to remembrance his death, and appropriating his flesh and blood, through faith, as our atonement and eternal life to come; while the other—baptism—shows his death, burial, and that other event—his resurrection, which, were it not a fact, "your preaching is vain, your faith vain, and ye yet in your sins Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" and we who are alive, would remain in "jeopardy every hour." 1 Cor. 15 : 12-30.

O ye servants! ye cannot point with too many indexes to that old hope of the church, which is the central junction of every path of Scriptural truth—the resurrection of the dead.

CONVERSATION.

R. D. FARNHAM.

"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers." Eph. 4 : 29. "But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints. Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks." Eph. 5 : 3, 4.

Much has been preached and written upon this subject, and still the Bible commands seem to be almost entirely unheeded. Most professors are very careless about the expressions they use, and of the effect their example is likely to have on the weak ones of the flock, and also upon the world. They give way to their natural dispositions, obeying "the old man" (Eph. 4 : 22) which they profess to have put off with his deeds, until their influence for good is entirely destroyed. People do not respect professors who are careless about their talk. They know that true religion ought to refine, purify and elevate above the coarse jokes and trifling talk which is so pleasing to the natural ear.

We often hear expressions like these: "I do not believe —— has any more religion than I have. I do not see but —— relishes a joke as well as I do." O that all who love the Lord could realize the importance of taking the Bible for a guide in this matter, as well as in everything else. If Christians would bind the above texts on their hearts, and wear them as frontlets between their eyes, we should not so often hear the unconverted condemning the professor, and saying, "I do not want religion if it does not make one better."

Says one who professes to love Jesus very ardently, My natural disposition is so mirthful that I cannot be long-faced and sober, and I do not believe God wants me to be so either. Well, we can read God's commands in his written Word, and dare we say he does not require what he commands? Besides, if we have the joy and peace which Jesus gives to his followers, we have something so satisfying that the foolish jokes and vain conversation of this world will be very unpleasant to us; and instead of being long-faced, our countenances will beam with holy joy that is welling up within our hearts.

Few seem to realize how quickly the Holy Spirit is grieved away by light and trifling words. They wonder why they are cast down in spirit, when they have performed every known duty. This may be the very reason. They go to the prayer-room, and before meeting opens talk about fashions, and politics, and everything in general, and then wonder why they do not feel more spirit in meeting.

Some are in the habit of using the name of the Lord in a careless manner, and if they are reminded of it say, "O, I love the Lord so well that I dare say I use his name when I do not know it." This will be a poor excuse in the judgment day, for God says he "will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain." And Jesus says, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned"; and, "For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account in the day of judgment." The apostle truly says of the tongue that no man can tame it, and that "it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." But the grace of God will do what man cannot, and cause it to drop sweet and pure words, calculated to edify the hearers, instead of using profane, filthy or foolish talk.

May the God of all grace enable us to have our conversation above reproach, for this matter will be brought into judgment, with every secret thing, and if we are found guilty of breaking God's commands we shall not be able to stand in the burning day. Let us strive to be overcomers in all things, that we may have a right to the tree of life, and gain an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of Jesus at his appearing.

THE DREAMLESS SLEEP.

BY R. L. STAPLES (Phrenologist.)

Whoever is in the right need not fear. He who has espoused error may well shun all investigation if he is bound to cling to untruth. The "New Philosophy," as it is called, will not injure any man if it be true. Orthodoxy may crumble before it, but all that is genuine will remain.

How do the declarations of modern physiologists affect the "popular tenets" of the times? Let us take a single illustration. The doctrine taught by our spiritual advisers, the ideas set forth on ten thousand tombstones, the inculcations of our Hymnal and church libraries, are all calculated to impress the reader with the thought that death is a conscious state, a better existence beyond the tomb; or, as our orthodox poet has it,

"Death is the gate to endless joy."

When a friend dies, it is a common thing to hear that "he has gone home"; "he is in Paradise"; or, "he is not dead; he is with us as a disembodied spirit", and many other like expressions, which characterize most of our funeral sermons. But they greatly differ from the teachings of Job, David, Paul, or any of the Biblical writers from the author of Genesis to the seer of Patmos.

Townsend asks, "May not every man attend his own funeral?" The pulpit utterances, with very little exception, answer, Yes. The orthodox reasoner settles the problem in this manner: It is the soul that thinks. The soul is by nature immortal, hence it lives after death; and being no longer burdened with this "mortal coil," it is free to move through the boundless expanse of the universe, and therefore can easily witness the interment of the fleshly tabernacle in which it once had an abode. Yes, every man can see his body placed in the grave, and guard his own sepulchre.

But what says the "New Philosophy"? From its earliest existence the science of Phrenology has been abused in the most shameful manner. It has been ridiculed by those who have but little brains to assail it in any other way, shunned by the bigoted as an intolerant heresy, and tortured by persecutions more multiform than those called forth by almost any other discovery; but in no instance has it received any lasting injury from its numerous assailants. True, it has been impeded in its progress by those who ought to have given it their aid, but in the future as in the past it will grow stronger by virtue of its very struggles, and verify, as every other rejected science has proven, the glorious declaration of America's lamented bard,

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again."

But not alone from foes without has the science of Gaul suffered. Its advocates, true to their early instructions, have made it minister to the dogma of the age, and thus it is that very few phrenologists have had the courage to state the facts as they exist, or dared to declare in their lectures or works that at least those very phenomena on which the science of phrenology rests—the very foundation of the system—prove, if they prove anything at all, that the brain is not only the organ of the mind, but that it is the fountain of thought; that is, that organized matter, when endowed with life, is capable of producing thought. And I venture to affirm that no Phrenologist, from the days of the Baden philosopher to those of Prof. O. S. Fowler, has or can show that mind is not the result of material causes.

It is objected to Phrenology that it leads to materialism; but if this be materialism, it is in keeping with the teachings of Scripture, for the Bible nowhere inculcates the idea that there is in the human body a soul, "the real man," that thinks by means of the brain, and that can exist apart from the corporeal organization as a conscious entity. Such a doctrine—the child of heathen philosophy—is worthy only of a heathen age; and as a phrenologist I do not hesitate to admit that my "New Philosophy" militates most truly against it. When I study the relations subsisting between the brain and the mind; when I learn that the latter is dependent upon the former to such a degree that any disease or injury of the cerebral organ is attended with mental disorder proportionally as the cephalic mass is affected, I cannot believe that (as the modern theologians and heathen savants have it) when the entire brain is dissolved by death, the evolution of thought still goes on with greater facility than before. As well maintain that a man can walk without feet, as argue that he can think without a brain.

Yet if the popular idea be true, and men think after death more fluently than in life, then may we conclude that they can move with greater ease after the dissolution of these material limbs; and yet who that has lost a single leg by amputation feels the more agile, or rejoices over the abandonment of so much of the poor "mortal coil"? Indeed, if the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead be false, we ought to herald with ineffable exultation the advent of any accident which brings about the surrender of any part of this "earthly coil" to which the soul is bound.

A brief review of certain facts which have been collected from various sources, and and bear upon the subject under consideration will not be amiss; and in the next number of these articles we propose to consider the bearings of modern science upon this problem of death, and shall endeavor to show there is a striking similarity between the inculcations of Scripture and those of the "New Philosophy"; that both science and revelation declare that when the brain is dissolved at death all consciousness is suspended, and in the language of the ancient savant—the oracle of God—"there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest"; that death is indeed a dreamless sleep.

WAYSIDE GLEANINGS.

BY A. GORDON.

Left home Aug. 22nd. Stopped at Lewiston over night and the next day went to Alton Bay. For the first time found myself at the great feast of tabernacles. I enjoyed the meeting better than I expected to. Think good was done. I especially enjoyed the meetings conducted by Bro. Grant. Went from Alton Bay to Magog, P. Q. The meeting was small, but a good spirit prevailed, and good was accomplished. The meeting was under the charge of Eld. C. P. Dow, who presided with ease and to the satisfaction of the people generally. A prayer and conference meeting, led by Bro. Bissell, of Lowell, Mass., was very interesting. The preaching by Elds. Blake, Lombard, Wallace, McKinstry and wife, Dr. Gunner, and others, was deeply interesting and instructive. Several avowed a determination to renew their covenant and wait upon the Lord, and others requested prayers. The importance of keeping the distinctive features of the Advent movement before the people was urged as of peculiar importance considering the shortness of the time that is left to work.

Leaving Magog, I went to East Bolton, on the west shore of Lake Memphremagog, where I held a few meetings. There are quite a number of Adventists in this place, who are very hospitable and kind. Politics were raging there, it being just prior to the election of members of the Provincial Parliament. I think some of the children seemed affected by the political fever.

Leaving East Bolton I went to Patton, and tarried over night with a very genial though rather profane farmer. He refused pay for my keeping, and learning my profession he seemed ashamed of his rough conversation. I told him that was between himself and God, and he should have enough respect for God to refrain from such language, which he admitted.

From thence I went to the Beebe Plain Campmeeting. Found the meeting proceeding briskly. The preaching by Brn. Grant and Hemenway was especially cheering and instructive. The truth of the simplicity of the Gospel seemed to impress them, thereby leading them to make practical suggestions which are especially needful in these times. I love to hear the lofty peals of eloquence that burst forth from a heart full of the Spirit of the Blessed One, but the finely polished sentences only human, is not at all edifying to the nature renewed by grace divine.

The meetings at Beebe Plain were, in my opinion, conducive to the good of the cause. It seemed to me that this was the very best of the three that I had attended, at least, in proportion to the number in attendance. I returned to my home by the way of the White Mountains. The ride through the mountains su[illegible]ing of the kind that I had ever [illegible]. Such lofty heights and yawning depths create a feeling of awe and reverence toward the Great Architect.

"THE SPIRIT SUFFERED THEM NOT."—ACTS 16: 7, 8.

BY LUCY D. HARRINGTON.

In an upper room in the city of Jerusalem, just before the feast of the passover, were spoken by the Wonderful One words of richness and sweetness—such as never fell from the lips of any save "Him who spake as never man spake." He who had taught and led his chosen disciples, was soon to leave them; but to cheer and strengthen them, gave promises which for more than eighteen hundred years have been living words—promises which to-day thrill and have power over many hearts. He himself was the Great Teacher, but he promised that when he had gone away they should be taught by his Spirit. He was the Guide, but he promised continued guidance—"another Comforter, who should abide with them forever." "He shall teach you all things." "He shall guide you."

We find a beautiful illustration of the fulfillment of this promised guidance in the record of the life of the apostle Paul as given by the Evangelist Luke in Acts. In the sixteenth chapter we read of his preaching the Gospel of Christ from place to place with Timothy as a fellow-laborer. The result of this missionary work was that "the churches were established in the faith, and increased in number daily." Continuing their journey they came to Mysia, "and assayed to go to Bithynia." Their will was to go there and labor for the Lord. They had chosen this place, invited by existing advantages or supposed needs, but God's thoughts are not like our thoughts. His ways are not like our ways. The record tells us, "but the Spirit suffered them not." Obeying the guidance of the Holy Spirit, they were saved from fruitless toil. They passed by and came to Troas."

What was the consequence of yielding their will to the divine leading? In 2 Cor. 2 : 12, we are told the sequel of the story. Paul afterwards in writing of this same journey says: "Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Christ's gospel, "A door was opened unto me of the Lord."

What blessed gain—to pass by chosen Bithynia—to yield the human will and follow the leading to Troas—to do the will of the Lord, and find there a prepared place—to know that the Lord had gone before, and all things were ready.

Obeying the divine guiding, Paul was saved from disappointment and mistakes in Bithinyia, and passing by to Troas, found that "He who openeth and no man shutteth" had set before them an open door through which he might pass to work effectively for Christ.

Turning to the Word of God for a contrasting illustration, one which shows the consequence of refusing to obey the Lord, we find an example of warning in the story of the prophet Jonah. Let us note the contrast between the conduct of Jonah and that of Paul, that we may take heed to our ways, and avoid on the one hand the danger and sorrow which are the fruits of disobedience, and on the other hand learn to secure and freely enjoy the light and blessing which God gives to the willing and obedient.

The Lord sent Jonah to Nineveh giving him a message to deliver. He chose to go to Tarshish; followed his own will, and soon found that he had involved not himself alone, but others also in serious difficulty. He says, "When my soul fainted within me, I remembered the Lord. I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me." After the severe chastisement the commandment of the Lord was given the second time, saying, "Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee."

Jonah obeyed, but again manifested the same spirit of self-will after reaching Nineveh, and in consequence received the reproof of the Lord.

Let us remember Nineveh and Tarshish as types of disobedience and its consequences. Bithinyia and Troas as types of obedience and its consequences. The Lord has given to us individually his promises of guidance by his Holy Spirit. We have need to take heed unto the word of the Lord, and when sent to Nineveh not to choose Tarshish; or in other words, not to prefer our own will and way, and thus doing disobey and displease our best Friend, and bring needless suffering upon ourselves.

Conscious of our past mistakes, the fruits of trusting in ourselves or others, let us learn true wisdom, and whenever we wish, or it may seem profitable to go to Bithynia—yield our own will, watch for and follow the leading of the Holy Spirit, and, like Paul, pass by to Troas. Then we too shall find a door opened unto us by the Lord through which we may enter to do the will of Him who hath sent us, finding in his work abundant occasion for gratitude and praise to Him "who doeth all things well."

Our will no longer rules, "Thy Spirit suffers not",
But Thou, Oh! Christ, doth lead, and peace is now our lot.
On earth Thy Father's will it was thy meat to do.
"Thy will not ours, be done" is now our motto too.

And while we yield to Thee, and pass Bithynia's shore,
The Spirit guides us on through Troas' open door.
We walk this open way, and find our work to be
The work that Thou hast planned and given us for Thee.

We bow and worship Thee, Oh! blessed Son of God;
And meekly tread with joy the pathway Thou hast trod.
We count our loss our gain, our life flows from the cross,
Thou, Christ, art now our own, all else is only dross.

JEALOUS OF THOSE ABOVE US.

The truest philosophy that the world knows bids us be content in whatever state we are. There is nothing in this which excuses or encourages idleness. The honest, competent, active maid in the kitchen of a millionaire is as useful in the world as the master she serves, provided she is not coveting the estate and position of her employer. We are justified in striving to equal and surpass those who are ahead of us, provided we use only honorable means. Jockeying in human efforts is more detestable than the same mean trick on the race-course. The man who wins the prize by foul means is a pitiful creature who cannot in the end stand well with heaven or earth. His sin and shame will be sure to find him out. We know a man who was generally successful at agricultural fairs by winnowing his grain twenty or thirty times till he had the plumpest grain left for the show. He got his prizes, to be sure, but they bear the superscription of the devil, for the sample professed to be an average one from the field. We saw the mark on his brow as he entered church. He got the money, but he endangered and strained his soul, and we may hear heaven saying, as of old, "Thy money perish with thee."

Prizes or positions won by crooked ways are sure to trip up the winner sometime or other. We do not want to get ahead, then, by deception and dishonesty. Shall we be jealous of this successful but dishonest money getter? Nay, verily. The man who keeps his hands clean, although without wealth of any kind, is a nobleman in comparison. Material things are the perishable and unsatisfactory ones. If we covet at all we should covet the good and lovely things which are real accomplishments and real strength. In the race for money the superior is very seldom at the front. His kind heart has too often bled for the necessities of others. He has been a scatterer of ennobling principles, not a gather of dimes for their own sake. This man—all honor to him—is never weakened and vexed by the worldly successes of neighbors.

There are few who can sing like Jenny Lind, or who can accumulate like Rothschild. Shall we covet the gift of the one or the riches of the other? Yes, if we are fools. The servant thinks himself as good as the boss. He is only so when dutiful to God and his employer. They are the strongest and most successful who bear best the hardships of life.—N. Y. Witness.

PREACHING AND HEARING.

The pew asks for good preaching. The pulpit asks for good hearing. Where both are found there the pulpit and the pew rejoice together. Good hearers are almost as rare as good preachers. It s one thing to listen to a sermon, and wait patiently till it turns the corner at the application; but quite another thing to really hear it. One may pay respectful attention, and listen, without truly hearing. The first care of the hearer, as well as of the preacher, must be about the matter, the second about the manner. "Take heed what ye hear," first; then, "Take heed how ye hear." The what and the how must go together. The preacher must "take heed to the doctrine," first, so that he preaches only what is true," and good "to the use of edifying;" and then he must take heed how he presents his precious things, so as to win and hold his hearers. So the hearer must wisely discriminate as to the character of the utterances to which he gives a hearing.

There is much talking, in this age of gas, that is not worth the hearing—much that is absolutely injurious—and much that is of but limited value. There is also abundant provision of that which will instruct, elevate, inspire and edify. While the useless and injurious should be avoided, the good should not only be chosen and heard, but well heard. A single truth, rightly received in the hearing, is worth a thousand truths heard with indifference. A single seed fallen on good ground, is better than a thousand seeds scattered on the beaten road, to be wasted and lost. So also a single truth, clearly, forcibly, earnestly and effectively stated and applied, is worth a whole sysrem of truths thrown out carelessly, heartlessly and ineffectively.—Evangelical Messenger.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

HERE is a sad statement: "The native women of Alaska are sold at the age of twelve or fourteen as wives, or as temporary wives for a month or a week, for a few blankets or less. The women captives of war are slaves. Sisters are often wives of the same man. One native chief has forty wives. On the death of a husband the wife must remain on his funeral pile until her hair is burned off. They are often killed when old, and often denied burial. All this in the United States."

"THE GREAT THIRST LAND."—Such is the title of a book published not long ago. The author was not familiar with some facts, or he would have applied the title to this country. For example, Cincinnati has 1,507 drinking saloons—which is 400 more than the number of groceries. The new Directory of Syracuse shows a similar state of affairs. There are more saloons and "restaurants"—in which more liquor is sold than food—than any other places of business. With few exceptions, the same is true of every city in the country. We must be an exceedingly thirsty nation.

A GERMAN correspondent says that the Pope is an object of universal pity at Rome, that he weeps piteously and has aged much, that he frequently packs up to go to Perugia, but at the last moment changes his mind; that he is in deadly fear of poison, and only eats food brought to him by his brother, making his own coffee, and keeping his wine under lock and key. Two attempts, the correspondent says, have already been made to poison him. When he took ill after drinking a glass of wormwood, some of the cardinals tried to dissuade his brother from bringing any other than the Vatican doctors, but he called an outside physician, who administered a powerful antidote.

PLEASE STOP MY—WHAT?—Times are hard, money is scarce, business is dull, retrenchment is duty, please stop my—beef? O, no! times are not hard enough for that yet. But there is something that costs me a large amount which I wish to save. Please stop my—tobacco, cigars and snuff? O, no! not these, but I wish to retrench somewhere. Please stop my—ribbons, jewels, ornaments and trinkets? Not at all! pride must be fostered if times are so hard, but I believe I can see a way in saving in another direction. Please stop my—tea, coffee and needless, unhealthy luxuries? No, no, no, not these; I cannot think of such a sacrifice; I must have something else. Ah! I have it now, my paper; I must save that, I will stop my paper; that two dollars will take me through the panic easily. I believe in retrenchment and economy, especially of brains.

SAYS the New York Tribune: "Spurgeon, in a sermon two weeks ago, replied to criticisms lately passed upon him as follows: "As surely as any of you speak for the Lord you will be misunderstood. This is not the worst of it. You will be wilfully misrepresented. They will turn your words upside down. As for me, it is utterly impossible for me to say a single sentence which some fool or other cannot twist into mischief; and I give patent and license to everybody to do so that chooses to do it, as far as I am concerned. The thing that was farthest from our mind and which our soul abhorred has often been made to be said, when we neither said nor thought anything of the kind. If any of you pass through that trouble, fall back on this: I have declared my ways—honestly, simply, plainly, with a pure desire to glorify God and bless my fellow-men, and Thou heardest me. I appeal to Thee. Thou knowest what was spoken. Thou art the last Supreme Judge; and with thee it is left."

HOME PIETY.

It is in the family life that a man's piety gets tested. Let the husband be cross and surly, giving a slap here, and a cuff there, and then see how out of sorts everything gets. The wife grows cold and unamiable too. Both are tuned on one key. They vibrate in unison, giving tone for tone, rising in harmony or discord together. The children grow up saucy and savage as young bears. The father becomes callous, peevish, hard, a kind of two-legged brute, with clothes on. The wife bristles in self-defence They develop an unnatural growth and sharpness of teeth, and the house is haunted by ugliness and domestic brawls.

Is that what God meant the family to be—he who made it a place for love to build her nest in, and where kindness and sweet courtesy might come to their finest manifestations? The divine can be realized. There is sunshine enough in the world to warm all. Why will not men come out of their caves to enjoy it? Some men make it a point to treat every other man's family well but his own—have smiles for all but their kindred. Strange, pitiable picture of human weakness, when those we love best are treated worst; when courtesy is shown to all save our friends.—Rural Home.

THE CONTAGION OF DIPTHERIA.—A few weeks ago a litle girl in St. Albans, who had just recovered from diptheria, was taken by her parents to visit a family in a neighboring town. She slept with the children in that family, and shortly afterwards three or four of them were taken with the malady and some have since died. The family permitted relatives and neighbors to visit them, and the result is several cases in the neighborhood. They had public funerals, even keeping the remains of one child an unusual time, waiting for another to die so as to bury them together, and this also spread the contagion. The physician was not powerfully impressed, as some physicians are not, with the contagious character of the disease, therefore he did not take the necessary precautions, for the protection of the neihborhood or of his own family, and the result is that one of his own children has died, and another is dangerously ill.—St. Albans (Vt.) Messenger.

FERTILITY OF DAIRY FARMS.—Much nonsense is circulated in regard to the rapid loss of fertility of dairy farms, by reason of the carrying away of the phosphate in the milk. Now one thousand pounds of milk contains about three or four pounds of phosphate, of which nearly the whole is phosphate of lime. Of this less than half is phosphoric acid. Five thousand pounds of milk, therefore, contains but seven and one-half pounds of phosphoric acid, which may be taken as the yearly consumption, in this way, of each cow. As wheat bran contains 2 9 per centum of phosphoric acid, it needs only that about 250 pounds of bran be fed to each cow yearly, to replace the draft upon the soil.

PORK PACKING IN CHICAGO.—A review of the packing season in Chicago—summer and winter—for the year ending N. 1, shows the enormous aggregate of 4,593,000 hogs packed during the year, which is an increase of 50 per cent. over the business, at that time unprecedented, of the previous year. No other city in the west, or in the world, it is needless to say, competes with Chicago in this branch of industry, and the business seems to go on increasing in geometrical progression. For the coming season the killing capacity of the houses has been increased to 60,000 per day, and there is a chance that it may all be needed. It is worth noting that one half of this tremendous business is done by two houses, the remainder being shared by about twenty smaller firms.

DO NOT put your pillows or feather beds, if you are so unfortunate as to have feather beds, into the sun to air, but in a shady place with a clear, dry wind blowing over them. If it is cloudy, but yet not damp, and the wind is strong, all the better. This will keep well cured feathers always sweet. Badly cured feathers cannot be made sweet. A hot sun on the best of feathers will turn them rancid.

A RESPONSE.

BY J. E. LLOYD.

When He comes who loved his people
As he walked among them here—
Gave himself a ransom for them,
Counting not his life too dear,
Will he find the weakest, humblest,
Who have loved and trusted him—
All who praise him with child-voices,
All whose eyes with age are dim?

Doubt it not, O trembling traveler,
Far from home, alone and sad;
His great heart of love will cheer you.
He will come and make you glad.
Where the path of duty leads you,
Be it either near or far,
Onward go with trusting footsteps,
He will find you where you are.

If you sleep through death's dark night-time,
He, the bright, the Morning Star,
Filling all the earth with glory,
Will awake you where you are
O the gladness of the parted,
When our eyes with weeping dim
Shall behold the King of glory,
And be gathered unto him!

THE WEEKS OF DANIEL.—No. 15.

BY WM. SHELDON.

Every alleged truth is open to objections of some nature, whether valid or not. We here allude to some that have been supposed to militate against our argument.

1. One class blindly object to our locating the birth of Christ before the beginning of our vulgar Era, insisting that he was born at its beginning. Let us try this blind theory. If Christ really was baptized "about thirty years" after our Era began, and subsequently attended four Passovers, he certainly died either on Tuesday, A. D. 34, or on Monday, A. D. 35; for in those two years the passover fell on those days of the week, according to astronomy, and that would leave Christ in death either five or six days, instead of three only. This fact kills that claim at one stroke. Or, if we grant the unproven assumption that Christ preached seven years after his baptism, his crucifixion would thereby be located over two years after Pilate was deposed; and that consideration is fatal to the theory. It is hard work to dodge the truth.

2. Another gravely objects that I have made a mistake of one year in locating the birth of Christ in B. C. 5, as a voluminous writer has given strong arguments for locating it B. C. 6. But the argument that places Christ's birth one year earlier (in B. C. 6), also locates his death one year earlier (in A. D. 29); and if Christ really died in that year, he must have died on Sunday afternoon, and therefore have remained dead over seven days; for in that year the passover fell on Sunday; so neither the birth or death of Christ can be moved backward or forward even a year.

3. It is objected that it is not certain that the baptism of Christ, when "about thirty," was in the fifteenth of Tiberius' full reign, instead of the fifteenth of his sole reign. Well, it is certain that it was in one or the other; and it is also certain that if it was in the fifteenth of his sole reign, his death was in A. D. 32, on Monday, for in that year the passover-day was on Monday, which would leave Christ six days in the grave. This ends that quibble; but if the fifteenth of his full reign is meant, he died on the passover of A. D. 30, which fell on Thursday, leaving him dead but three days.

4. It is objected that the eclipse found in B. C. 4, which is supposed to mark the death of Herod, may not be the one meant by Josephus. But this objection is overruled by an array of historical and astronomical facts too strong to admit of doubt, showing that Herod did not die later than Sept., B. C. 4. (1) Josephus tells us that Herod was appointed king by the Roman Senate in the 184th Olympiad, and reigned 37 years from that epoch; and it is certain that the last year of that Olympiad began B. C. 41, from which subtract the 37 years' reign, and we reach B. C. 4. (2) Josephus tells us that Herod reigned 34 years from his capture of Jerusalem on a Sabbatic year in the 185th Olympiad, this being the third year of that Olympiad, which year began B. C. 38, from which subtract the 34 years' reign, and they end B. C. 4. (3) Josephus makes seven of Herod's 34 years' reign, and at the battle of Actium, which is astronomically assigned to B. C. 31, leaving only 27 years of his reign after B. C. 31, ending B. C. 4. It cannot be said that the seventh of Herod's 37 years' reign is meant, as that began in the 184th Olympiad, its last year beginning in July, B. C. 41; so seven years from that epoch would end B. C. 34, three years before the battle of Actium.

5. I am asked why I place the destruction of Jerusalem in A. D. 73, instead of A. D. 70? I have not even hinted anything of this kind, but have simply claimed that the mere capture of the city did not finish the work of exterminating Jewish nationality in Judea, it requiring several months more time, the war ending in A. D. 73. I have expressed a doubt about the capture of Jerusalem in A. D. 70, and shown why I think it fell in August, A. D. 71, giving Tacitus' record of an eclipse Oct. 18th, A. D. 69, about a month before Vespasian became Emperor, as well as the statement of Josephus that Jerusalem was taken in the "second year of Vespasian," which, as Josephus counts, would be A. D. 71. Various histories, I am aware, say A. D. 70. Some of these mistakes have been made by synchronizing Olympic years with our A. D., each Olympiac year containing a part of two of our years. But let this be as it may, it is certain that the capture of Jerusalem did not end the Roman war against the Jews; it ended with their national extermination, the ending of their sacrifice occurring in the midst of the last week, or before the war terminated. Allowing that the seventy weeks, like other prophetic measurements, may have either overrun or fell short a fraction, we fix a cycle from the capture of Jerusalem in A. D. 70, or probably A. D. 71 in August, to the end of the war in A. D. 73 for their termination; and making the same allowance for fractional variation in the balance of the 2300 days (1810), and they will end in a corresponding cycle—1880 to 1883. The 69 weeks overrun a mere fraction; the 62 weeks overrun about half a year; the "one week" fell short a fraction,—so the 70 weeks may have varied a mere fraction one way or the other; the event marking their end is not fixed like the birth and death of Christ; so we must allow a little latitude of possible uncertainty of date; so we must not be too definite in ending the 2300. We may feel reasonably positive about the cycle, but be modest about magnifying the preferable points in the cycle. Keep in mind the fact also that the 2300 reach beyond the resurrection a little ways at least—to the cleansing.

6. It is sometimes foolishly objected that it is wrong to even mark a cycle for the probable close of time, as we may finally be driven to the outer edge of the cycle. But the objection is just as good against naming the last generation, the last century, or the last thousand years of time, for fear that somebody might come to the close of these also, and be forced to be more definite. This objection either kills itself, or forbids faith in knowing approximately where we are in the prophetic programme. While there is a small class who have a morbid appetite for [illegible]ing, there is a large class who have a proclivity to indulge in excessive indefiniteness. Accept what light God has given, and let it shine. Do not smother it. Time will soon strike the last gospel hour.

7. It is objected that as Luke 23: 54–56 locates Christ's death and burial on the "preparation" day, this day being followed by the "Sabbath," that Friday must have been the day of crucifixion. Let it be remembered that John says, "That Sabbath-day was a high day," or festival "Sabbath" (John 19: 31), and that such a Sabbath always came the next day after the passover-day, the passover-day coming on the 14th day of the first month, which is called the "preparation" in consideration of the getting ready for the Sabbath feast that fell on the 15th day, on which they were forbidden to labor, it being as expressly called a day of "holy convocation," or Sabbath, as the seventh day itself, as the following text will prove: "Six days shall work be done; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest, a holy convocation; ye shall do no work therein. . . . In the 14th day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord; seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. In the first day (of the feast, or 15th of the month) ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein." Lev. 23: 3–7.

This day always came next after the "preparation" day, which was the 14th or passover-day; and it is an astronomical fact that in A. D. 30 this passover Sabbath came the very day before the seventh-day Sabbath did, thus making it certain that two Sabbaths fell in succession in that year, after the crucifixion; thus allowing the next day after the crucifixion to be a Sabbath, and also the next after that, thus giving the requisite "three days and nights" between the Cross and resurrection. Work was forbidden on both of these days, "according to the commandment." These days of "holy convocation," even when not relating to the seventh day, are expressly called "Sabbaths" in the Bible, as well as by Josephus. "These are the feasts of the Lord which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations . . . beside the Sabbaths of the Lord. . . . Ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days; on the first day shall be a Sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a Sabbath." So these festival days are interchangeably called holy convocations, and Sabbaths, the same as the weekly Sabbaths.

Here we briefly refresh the reader's memory with points before made. (1) The historic record that Christ was crucified on "the fifth day of the week" cannot be reconciled with the claim for Friday, A. D. 33, but agrees with the argument for Thursday, A. D. 30. Thursday is the fifth day. (2) The Roman records, locating the crucifixion in "the 17th" of Tiberius' sole reign, and in "the 19th" of his full reign, cannot agree with the claim for Friday, A. D. 33, but do harmonize with Thursday, A. D. 30; for Tiberius' sole reign is marked so unmistakably and indisputably by an eclipse fixing its beginning in August, A. D. 14, thus placing his two years' joint reign in A. D. 12, that we have a strong epoch from which to reckon; but we must remember that the Roman records are governed by this rule: the first year of a king's reign ends with the close of the Roman year, and January begins his second year, even if he has reigned but a part of the year. Overlooking this established rule, some chronologers have blindly placed the Cross in A. D. 31, leaving Christ in death from Tuesday afternoon till Sunday morning—five days. Others blunder in applying this Roman rule to Josephus and others, where it fails. Others, having overlooked the record that locates Christ's death [illegible] ing that the record of the crucifixion in the 19th of Tiberius must have meant his sole reign, have tried to make it reach A. D. 33 by violating this Roman rule; but if his sole reign were really meant, instead of his full reign, this Roman rule would place the Cross in A. D. 32, on Monday, leaving Christ six days in death. This kills the false claim.

(3) The fact already presented, that Caiaphas was deposed before the passover of the 20th of Tiberius' sole reign, as historically shown, (that is, before the passover of A. D. 33), cannot support the 33 claim. Vitellius, after deposing Caiaphas, went to Antioch; he then received instructions from Tiberius to negotiate with the king of Parthia, which effort failed, and resulted in a battle; but after the battle they went to the Euphrates, "and agreed upon terms of peace"; and Josephus adds: "About this time it was that Philip, Herod's brother, departed this life, in the twentieth year of the reign of Tiberius, after he had been tetrarch . . . 37 years." So Caiaphas was deposed several months before the death of Philip in the 20th of Tiberius, A. D. 33, which was 37 years after the death of Herod the Great, B. C. 4; for Philip began to reign over a fourth of the kingdom of Herod at that time; and by subtracting B. C. 4 from his 37 years' reign, 33 of the Christian Era is left, ending in the 20th of Tiberius' reign,—a new proof that Tiberias began his sole reign A. D. 14. The 20th of Tiberius' sole reign began, as counted by the Romans, in January, A. D. 33. Josephus tells us that Caiaphas was deposed "at the time of that festival which is called the Passover"; and as Caiaphas held his office over fifty days after the Passover at which Christ was crucified (John 3: 2; Acts 4: 6), or till after the season of Pentecost, it is certain that the Passover of A. D. 33 could not be the one at which Christ was crucified, if Caiaphas was deposed at that Passover; and he could not have been deposed a year later without getting out of "the 20th of Tiberius," or beyond Philip's death, whereas he was deposed before the death of Philip; so we are thrown back upon the Passover of A. D. 32 as the probable date at which Caiaphas was cast out of office; remembering, meanwhile, that if we place this event in A. D. 33, it will cut off the claim to that Passover as the one at which Christ was executed; for Caiaphas was in office several weeks after Christ died, and we cannot carry this event of deposing Caiaphas past the Passover of A. D. 33, without carrying it past the death of Philip in A. D. 33; so it is evident that Caiaphas was deposed before the Passover of A. D. 33, or if deposed at that Passover the crucifixion could not have been in that year, as Caiaphas reigned after the crucifixion.

8. It is objected that the Jewish sacrifice ended at the Cross. Yes, virtually, but not actually. Christ became its antitype, but as a matter of actual practice it continued till the Roman Horn ("by him the daily sacrifice was taken away") made its offering dangerous; and it "failed," said Josephus, "on the 17th day of Tamuz" (in July of A. D. 70 or 71), leaving a part of the last week still unfinished. This great Jerusalem stake at which the 70 weeks ended, though a little indefinite (perhaps purposely left so), marks a cycle, at least, from which the balance of the vision (1810 years), reaches another cycle of no ordinary interest to prophetic watchers. Day-dawn seems near. Watch, not knowing the definite point.

THE RESURRECTION BODY OF BELIEVERS.

BY SILAS MENN.

The resurrection body of believers will doubtless be a material body. Christ's resurrection body was a material body, and their bodies will be like his. When Christ rose from the dead he had the same body which [illegible] laid in the tomb. The marks it received [illegible] being nailed to the cross, and from [illegible] dier's spear being thrust into his side, it still bore after his resurrection. This is fully proved by John 20: 24–28—"But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came. The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you. Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing."

That Christ's resurrection body was the same which was laid in the grave, is further evident from his own words as recorded in Luke 24: 39: "Behold my hands and my feet," said he to his disciples, "that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." It is clear from this that in its nature the resurrection body of the Savior was material.

Christ, after he had risen from the dead, ate food, as is evident from the following passages: "And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye any meat? And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb. And he took it and did eat before them." Luke 24: 4[illegible]. "Jesus saith unto them, Come an[illegible]. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was [illegible]rd. Jesus then cometh, and taketh b[illegible] and giveth them, and fish likewise. [illegible] now the third time that Jesus s[illegible] to his disciples, after that [illegible] risen from the dead." John 21: 1[illegible]. "Him God raised up the third day, and [illegible] him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." Acts 10: 40, 41. It is then beyond question that Christ ate and drank after his resurrection, and therefore had a material body.

But if Christ, after his resurrection from the dead, had still flesh and bones, as he was seen to have, shall not we also, after our resurrection from the dead, have bodies of flesh and bones—real material bodies? Will not the resurrection body of believers be like unto Christ's? Is there any evidence that it will be essentially different? If Christ's was material, will not ours be material also? It is true the apostle says, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15: 44. But it is the opinion of Greek scholars that the term natural fails to give the true idea of the apostle's meaning. That idea is conveyed more correctly by the term animal. "There is an animal body, and there is a spiritual body." Our pr[illegible] body is a natural body, produc[illegible] generation, or an animal bo[illegible] subject to decay and death; the [illegible] will be spiritual because [illegible] mighty power of the Ho[illegible] cause it will be fitted to [illegible] tabernacle of the blood[illegible] spirit; and because it w[illegible] from animalism or corruption; but this is no proof that it will not be material.

But against this view the words of Paul are urged, "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. 15: 50. By this phrase, however, is doubtless meant that men, as they are now depraved by sin, cannot thus become inheritors of the kingdom. The The carnal unregenerate man lives after the flesh, and in that state he will be excluded from the kingdom of God. "For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh." "So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Rom. 8, 5, 9.

Job evidently believed that his resurrection body would be a material body. "I know," says he, "that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." Job 19: 25–27.

The resurrection body will be stronger or more powerful than the body in the present state. This is proved by the words, "It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power." 1 Cor. 15: 43. Believers in their resurrection state will not be subject to weariness. They will never be exhausted, and require rest as they do now. "They shall run and not be weary." Isa. 11: 31.

The resurrection body will be a bright shining body. This is clear from Dan. 12: 2, 3: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." It is further evident from Matt. 13: 43, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." There is not the least doubt but these passages will receive a literal fulfillment. The same term, "shine as the sun," is used to set forth the brightness of the Savior's countenance when he was transfigured on the Mount: "And was transfigured before them: and his raiment was white as the light." Matt. 17: 2. Luke uses another expression. He says: "And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering." And in their resurrection state believers will resemble Jesus. Their bodies will be fashioned like unto his. "Who shall change our vile body," says Paul, "that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. 3: 21. "Beloved," says John, "now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John 3: 2.

But some believers will shine with greater splendor than others, because their moral light here has been greater. Paul says, "One star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. 15: 41, 42. We cannot suppose that Mary Magdelene will have as glorious a reward as the apostle John; or that a convict who obtains mercy in his cell before sentence of death is executed upon him, will have as great a reward as Fletcher or Wesley.

Believers look forward to their resurrection with hope: but unbelievers look forward to their resurrection with terror. To the former it will be the crowning time: to the latter it will be the time for judgment and punishment.

England.

TO-DAY.

Why should we so often distress ourselves with bearing the trials and temptations that may never come? The question is not, can we serve God and keep without sin always and all through the years to come, but can we serve God to-day? "Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin." What a good prayer is that! And Jesus teaches us to say, "Give us this day our daily bread."

We are to live by the day. One day at a time is all we are able to manage. God knows it and teaches us to take care of to-day [illegible] leave to-morrow to him. "Take no thought for to-morrow," he says, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Ah! many precious hours are wasted in foolish regrets for the past. How many sad, weary and tearful anticipations for the future. Truly, many of the sorrows of life are from ills that will never harm us.

Let us fear nothing but that we may not make the most of to-day. To-day alone is ours. To-morrow may never be. What can we do for God to-day? How can we best serve our fellows to-day? How can we glorify God to-day? How can we live to-day so that in eternity we may look back upon this day with pleasure?

"One by one thy duties wait thee,
Let thy whole strength go to each;
Let no future dreams elate thee,
Learn thou first what these can teach."

Our duties, our privileges, our opportunities lie near to us. How often, alas! do we shut our eyes and blindly pass them by, and then they are gone forever. Oh! what a work then is to be done all around us! Are there not precious souls to be saved from death or ruin; words of warning or of encouragement to be spoken to the young; work to be found for the starving multitudes who are goaded to desperation and crime by the cruel stings of poverty; and [illegible] own homes are there not loving [illegible] to be said and kindly deeds to be [illegible] for those dear ones whom we may [illegible] to love and cherish? Are [illegible] to be led tenderly into [illegible] in our own hearts is there [illegible] to be fought daily with [illegible]? Are there not millions of our fellow creatures stretching out their arms to us for aid? Oh, there is work enough to-day for you and for me. Then

"Rise! for the day is passing,
And you lie dreaming on;
The others have buckled their armor,
And forth to the fight are gone.
A place in the ranks await you,
Each man has some part to play.
The past and the future are
In the face of the stern to-day."

Let us work with all our might, with all our heart, and with all our soul; "work while the day lasts, for the night cometh," and if trials and discouragements come, remember these beautiful lines by Gerald Massey,

"Triumph and toil are twins, and aye
Joy suns the cloud of sorrow;
And 'tis the martyrdom to-day
Brings victory to-morrow."

CONFERENCE ADDRESS.

Delivered at Coaticook Jan. 10, 1879, by C. P. Dow.

The signs of most literal import, foretold by Jesus (Luke 21) have been fulfilled. The sun has been darkened, the moon also has testified. Stars, or the lesser lights of heaven, have fallen as foretold. The "sea and waves" have tumultuously roared—tidal waves meet the demands of the picture. "On earth" has been and now is "distress of nations with perplexity." War, always cruel, has done, and is doing its full share, pestilence, that walks in darkness, has stalked forth on its murderous mission, cholera, small pox, yellow fever, and the dreadful diptheria, that has recently taken a daughter of Queen Victoria, causing a nation's sadness, are its forces, while gaunt famine has recently done an unusual work, and yet Sodom's condition is ours—"fullness of bread," the granaries of the world are full, and the means of heavy transit, and rapid, are abundant, and all parts of the world are in one neighborhood by the telegraph, and thousands of miles of foaming ocean form no barrier since 1866. Is there not "distress of nations with perplexity?" Glance at the monetary and business aspects of the world, national debts, the increasing burden of taxation, verging to universal bankruptcy, and individual failures by the million. "Men's hearts are failing them for fear." Read the numerous prints of the day, and there find the expressions of "fear." Read Taylor's "Voice from the Four Winds." "And for looking for the things coming on the earth." Is there an almost universal looking with strained eyes into the dark future? Yes, verily. All classes are anxiously looking, not all looking for the same thing, but all looking! Jesus was a true prophet; the thing foretold has come to pass, and at the right time. But the ones referred to by Christ, are fearful lookers, "their hearts failing them for fear." When Christ comes, a different class will be looking for him, who will say—"Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him; we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." (Isa. 25: 9.) In the times of Paul, men turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus." So Peter teaches: "Looking for and hasting unto [or earnestly desiring] the coming of the day of God." (2 Pet. 3: 12.)

By the preaching of Jesus near, this gospel of the kingdom at hand, and kindred truths, a people have been prepared for translation, who are anxiously looking for the same Jesus to come in like manner, or as literally as he went away. They have seen, and known the things come to pass that he foretold, and hence expect him. We ourselves are such a people, by profession at least, and hence we are here in an orderly way, an organized form, to do what? To comfort one another concerning our faith, the trial of which is more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, that it might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." Scattered over our world at the present time such a people are found; and this greatly confirms our faith in the grand issue expected. Prophecy has plainly foretold such a people, and their hope and work. Good servants, giving meat in due season, or proper truth at a time when the Lord is near, and at a time when evil servants say in their hearts "My Lord delayeth his coming;" and hence dare to smite those who say he is near," and eat and drink with the drunken." (Matt. 24: 45.) Now literally fulfilled! What does it mean? The Lord is near. Prussian exiles, the exiles of Zillerthal, exiled to Russia because they would not fight, whose history I read some years since, were Adventists—not Millerites, as they knew no such man, but learned their faith or creed in the Bible.

Such were the Molokaners of Russia, so called from their temperate and frugal habits, dwellers far off in Siberia, banished there by Russia, for dissent from the errors of the Greek church. Years since there were from sixty to eighty villages of them. Their faith rests upon the Scriptures, yet they are familiar with Luther and Albert Bengal's sixty discourses on the Apocalypse. Mr. Roth, a missionary stationed at Nelendorf, the utmost verge of christendom, visited them, and an old man of their number put the following question to him to his surprise:—"I should feel greatly obliged if you will give me your opinion, whether we Molokaners are right in thinking that the coming of the Lord Jesus cannot now be far distant?" This was in 1848. Thus we learn that the frozen north has its witnesses. Also, the mountainous regions of France, where that "most ancient stock of true religion, the meek confessors and noble army of martyrs" were found, still had its noble witnesses in 1823, when Edward Irving was proclaiming the Lord near to the masses of London. There were earnest, Bible-taught believers in the Advent near, found and reported by a Parisian merchant in the neighborhood. There were three or four hundred of them—noble witnesses!

At about the same time we find such believers in Switzerland, called Sardonites, resembling the Irvingites, who boldly took in hand the unfulfilled prophecies, or the study of last-day prophecies, and "declared themselves raised up to be messengers of one last warning to mankind before the coming of the day of judgment." Similar communities arose at the same period, in Germany, Sweden, and France. A writer in the Dublin University Magazine gives some account of them, and thinks their history would add a valuable contribution to "Epidemic insanity." The early Methodists were some of them fanatical, so might these have been, but they held most important truth at the right time.

The gospel sun arose in the East, and like the natural sun will set in the West. England, that centre of civilization and enlightenment, a land of religious liberty and light, has a multitude of believers in the established church, and many of dissenting bodies, of ministers and members who believe the end near. This is an age of missions. The first Protestant Missionary Society was formed in London. The first American Missionary Society dates 1810. There was but little interest in mission work until this most wonderful century, the century of preparation. There are now over fifty missionary societies that expend over six millions annually. This is an age of gospel liberty and light. Faust's art is of great use here. The slow process of hand transcribing would not answer God's gracious design of giving the world due warning of its approaching end. The first book printed from moveable types was the most important book—the Bible. The first society formed for the distribution of the Bible free and cheap was organized in London, in 1804. The simple cause was the poor Welch girl's tears. More than one hundred and fifty millions of copies have been scattered, in more than two hundred dialects. Thus the truth has gone forth in this wonderful age of preparation.

Then the newspaper agency is worthy of mention, as another potent means employed by God [illegible] of the gospel of the kingdom, and its corroborating facts. Both secular and religious journals are contributing to this work. And this is all recent,—a new medium of power put in requisition right here. The first religious newspaper was published by Elder Elias Smith, founder of the Christian Baptist denomination. He states the fact thus: "On the first day of September, 1808, the first number of 'The Herald of Gospel Liberty' was published in Portsmouth, N. H., which perhaps was the first religious newspaper ever published." (See Life of Smith, p. 383.) It had only two hundred and seventy-four subscribers to start with; it afterward increased to fifteen hundred. It was worked off by the slow hand press. Now, we have the celebrated eight cylinder Hoe press, that will print from sixteen to seventeen thousand large sized sheets per hour. The ever speaking types are used to print a large number of religious papers, and several widely circulated sheets advocating the Lord at hand. (To be continued.)

PRESENT TRUTH.

BY J. S. CLARK.

There is prophetic evidence, clear and convincing, that a great dispensational change is now transpiring—that the gospel age is ending. The fearful ordeal through which the world must soon pass has already commenced. The day or year when Christ shall come is not revealed, consequently we do not know the definite time of the second advent. Christ will come in the midst of great changes, and under the sounding of the seventh trumpet. These events cover many years of time. The time of these dispensational changes is so clearly revealed in the Word of God, that we are at no loss in determining our whereabouts in the closing scenes of earth's history. As to the exact time of Christ's coming, it is a matter of faith, and not knowledge. But the events of our time bring the conviction that we are living in the closing events of the gospel age.

Working for Jesus in the salvation of sinners is all very well, but not all that is required of us. We are not justified in remaining in darkness concerning these great and all-important truths. God never brought destruction upon any city or people without first giving them due notice and warning of it. There is an abundance of proof that the Lord will never pass judgment upon this world without due warning. While these events, which are to precede the final end, shall be discussed by the faithful and wise servant, there will be the evil servant saying in his heart, "My Lord de[illegible] coming, and shall begin to smi[illegible] servants, and to eat and d[illegible] drunken." The Lord of th[illegible] come in a day when [illegible] him."

When I see how in a [illegible] not his own glory, but that of [illegible] Father, I am ashamed of [illegible] when I see how he came [illegible] tered unto, but to minister [illegible] of my pride; when I see [illegible] cup which his Father ga[illegible] it, I am ashamed of my dis[illegible] I see how he bore the con[illegible] ners against himself, and [illegible] viled, reviled not again, [illegible] my impatience and my [illegible] has so subduing an influen[illegible] example.—*A. IS THE CHURCH DRIFTING INTO HEATHENISM?

It is a fact saddening to all truly Christian people that our Protestant churches are being carried very far from their former habits, by the mania of religious festivals and church fairs.

It is a fact that the heathen nations who worship idols, have been in the habit since the earliest periods, of holding religious fairs and bazaars in their temples of worship, for the purpose of raising funds to build and ornament their temples, and support their priests. This religious habit and its designs were very early adopted and practiced in the history of the Roman and Greek churches, which has resulted in making their worship heathenish in ritual and spirit, so that they imitate them in building very costly temples, and ornament them gorgeously to gratify the lusts of unsanctified eyes. By the raising of these funds they have given their priests princely salaries, and clothed them, as the heathen do, in scarlet and fine linen.

When the Protestant Reformers came out of the Great Babylon, they loudly and persistently protested against all this heathenism, and because of this protest they were called "Protestants." These Reformers taught (very truthfully, doubtless) that those State churches were called by Inspiration "Babylon the Great," because they had so largely adopted the theology and religious habits of the Babylonians, who worshiped idols and built idol temples, in which they celebrated their periodical fairs and held their money-raising bazaars. But where is the Protestant Church to-day? We answer mournfully, with a sad heart, Drifting over to the "Mother Church"—over to Babylon—where all the abominable fairs and bazaars originated. Our Evangelical churches,—shall we say it? God forgive us if it is not right to say it,—are rapidly changing their religious habits, and building more expensive houses of worship, and ornamenting them more gorgeously, making their worship more pompous and worldly, and elevating their ministry more above the people, in a way to gratify human ambition, pride and lust. All of this change is to us a drifting towards heathenism, popery, the world and the devil. This movement has been like an avalanche moving down the side of a mountain, slow at first, impeded by strong oaks, but as its velocity increases, all resistance is swept before it, and it grinds to powder all that is found in its path.

These heathenish religious fairs among Protestants are of recent date, for we can distinctly recollect the religious habits of the people of this country fifty years ago, and there was hardly such a thing known as a church fair.

When the Papists commenced to multiply in this country, and manifest their religious habits, the Protestants commenced to imitate them in the architecture of their houses [illegible] introduction of dramatic [illegible] in the general worldliness and [illegible] of religion, which greatly [illegible] the churches, thus [illegible] more funds; and to [illegible] also imitated the [illegible] fairs, and vari[illegible] for the purpose [illegible] means. These have [illegible] become [illegible] much more popular [illegible] this wicked habit has [illegible] money to furnish worldly, sinful extravagance in religious worship.

We give below the published report of one case which fairly represents the spirit and purposes of modern church fairs. The report was kindly clipped and sent us by a brother, from the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle, from which we give extracts as follows:

EFFORTS OF YOUNG LADIES TO CLEAR A CHURCH FROM DEBT.

The Fair of the Central Congregational Church.

When the members of Rev. Dr. Scudder's congregation undertook the task of clearing their church from debt, the Young Ladies' Society pledged itself to contribute the sum of two thousand dollars toward that object. . . . To cancel the debt in as speedy a manner as possible they are now (March 13,) holding a fair in the parlors of the church building.

Owing doubtless to the Rev. Dr. Scudder's long residence in India and his intimate acquaintance with the habits and manners of the people of that far away country, which the imagination pictures as filled with scantily clad natives, elephants, tigers and cobras, the fair now being held at the Central Congregational Church has a decidedly life-like Eastern air about it. There are many high caste Hindoos moving about the rooms—at least it is fair to presume their caste is high, or they would not be arrayed in such gorgeous and costly vestments. There can be seen all the bright colors, the fine textures and the lavish display of gold and silver so attractive to the natives of the East. The wearers of the Hindoo costume, if not "his sisters and his cousins and his aunts," are many of them relatives of Rev. Dr. Scudder, and like himself have been personally acquainted with the characters they personate. At any rate there they are, about twenty in number, ladies, gentlemen and children, and any one desirous of seeing as correct an imitation of an Hindoo bazar as it is possible to get up in this land of Yankee notions and modern improvements should not fail to pay a visit to the fair. It is like dropping through the earth and coming out right side up with care on the other side to step behind the curtain and into the crowded bazar, where there are ladies in Eastern costumes, gentleman and children also arrayed in the purple and fine linen of India, and many of their garments are so richly embroidered with gold that they appear to be made of bullion. Then children are seen in a Hindoo temple, where they are chanting Hindoo songs, while around them is a motley company of genuine Hindoo idols, many of which have actually been objects of worship. There are twelve gods in the temple, and one of them is said to have reached the ripe old age of two hundred years. Offerings of rice and other articles, which the Hindoos believe to be particularly acceptable to their gods, are placed before those in the temple, and the twelve deities are arranged around the place in a manner that shows there is such a thing as caste among the gods as well as among the Hindoos who fall down and worship them.

One dumpy looking little fellow is doing duty out of doors. That is for the purpose of giving an idea of the custom that prevails among the Hindoos of planting gods at the foot of the trees along the wayside, and so that little ill favored looking fellow is resting beneath the shade of a palm tree and alongside of him is an offering from one of his followers. It consists of a little cocoanut oil in a shell of the same nut, and the wick floating in the oil burns with a clear white flame. But a great deal of business is carried on in that crowded bazar. It is divided into small stalls, as is the custom [illegible] ter one was seated a little Hindoo maid keeping watch over a large stock of tropical fruits and nuts. There were bananas, dates, oranges, figs and cocoanuts, and ever so many other things, including that popular article of diet—peanuts. Adjoining the fruit vender's stall is the place where genuine specimens of Hindoo handiwork can be obtained at reasonable prices. A model of a Hindoo temple carved out of the pith of a tree, and looking like ivory, sandal wood boxes beautifully carved and inlaid with silver and ebony, the pen of an Eastern scribe, that looks like a young marlingspike, fans made of the feathers of the peacock, boxes and baskets and canes, a book that consists of wooden slats strung together, dolls dressed to resemble the various castes, photographs of jugglers, a stuffed cobra and ever so many other things can be seen there. Then in another stall is a large stock of Hindoo cloths, muslins, embroideries, slippers and rugs, which for beauty of design and excellence of finish it would be hard to match outside the great bazars of Bombay or Calcutta. There is also a table devoted to the sale of Japanese goods. The bazar is in charge of Mrs. Silas Scudder, Mrs. William Cummings, Miss Sarles, Miss Josephine Hutchinson Cummings, and the wooden, stone and bronze deities in the temple are under the care of the Misses Lillie and Fanny Scudder, daughters of Rev. Dr. Scudder. . . . Mr Alford had charge of the shooting gallery, where, with a range fifty feet in length, the younger members of the company made some excellent shots. In the center of the room was a tall and handsome cedar tree loaded with Easter eggs, inside of which the purchaser found his or her fortune told in verse. J. C.

A DIVIDED NATION.

"If a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand." CHRIST.

No better authority can be found than that supporting the above statement. The history running through all the dark revolutionary overthrow of cities, States and empires; the demolition of thrones and bloody ending of dynasties, demonstrate the truthfulness of the sacred utterance. Divided, nations fall; united, they stand.

Applying this infallible rule to the United States government, it is certain that a dark cloud covers our political heavens. The national pulse is feverish, and all the symptoms are alarming. Formerly honorable members of Congress seriously talked about rebellion; but to-day they are as freely talking about a revolution. The rebellion came, with all its terrible results, and if the revolution should come, its results would evidently be much more disastrous and fatal. It seems to us that every discerning eye must see that the virus of revolution and war is now much more generally circulating through its body politic than it was twenty years ago. Then it was quite local, principally connected with one question; but now it is more generally diffused.

The sectional question of North and South has not lost its venom, but has only changed its base. The slavery question as to name is settled, but the same spirit of caste, retaliation and strife exists as formerly, and is rapidly rising to the surface, and forming in line for another conflict. The labor question is now forming new armies of belligerents, who are evidently being drilled for a terrible clash of arms in the near future. The Papal question is also rising in startling prominence in our Republic, and is already hurling its anathemas at our free institutions, and pressing the battle to the gates of our schools, secretly maneuvering to control the State councils and exchequer, and [illegible] grasp the national sword. Our Congress is simply a body of antagonists, playing national games, in which the dearest and most sacred interests of a great people are at stake. We talk about our Christian Republic, our "model government," when our legislative halls are filled with party hatred, and much of the business transacted through trickery and fraud; where the uncivilized confusion of bar-room riots is often witnessed, and drunkenness reels in ghastly form unrebuked, and the Lord's Day is desecrated with lawless acts of law makers.

In view of the threatening divisions and this reeking filth of national infidelity and corruption, connected with the immutable law announced by Christ, we fear, and wait with deep solicitude for the immediate future of our beloved country. May God have mercy upon us, is our prayer. J. C.

THE MASS. CONFERENCE.

This Conference met for its annual session at Morgan Chapel, Boston, April 1st. It had a large attendance of our own people and many of the citizens of Boston. Harmony and union prevailed throughout. The preaching was good, and much of it presented present truth, which was well received. The brethren and sisters seemed to be firm in the faith of the speedy coming of Christ, and manifested a strong desire to be fully prepared to stand acquitted before the Judge of quick and dead. The business sessions were characterized by brotherly love, harmony of purpose and action. We trust that much good was accomplished, which will be manifested at the last judgment. J. C.

IT is reported that the famine in Egypt has destroyed 10,000 lives in three towns, and that the famine was principally caused by oppressive taxation, which has doubtless been the originating cause of nearly all the famines in the world for the last few years. J. C.

A NEW BOOK.

William R. Huntington, D. D., Rector of All Saints Church, Worcester, has issued a book of over two hundred pages, entitled, "Conditional Immortality." In this very candid work, Dr. Huntington examines the evidences for the doctrine of eternal torment, final restoration, and final extinction of the wicked, showing that the last view is the correct one, according to the teaching of the Scriptures, and good common sense. On page 102 he says:

"Search the Scriptures through and through, my friends, and point, if you can, to a single sentence in which it is directly asserted that man is a being who will inevitably exist forever. Strong statements to the effect that man is naturally mortal are strewn with melancholy frequency over those pages, but nowhere is he declared to be immortal apart from the quickening power of him who only hath immortality to give."

He inquires: "In what single sentence is it [the immortality of the soul] necessarily implied? Which stone in the wide arch of revelation is loosened when the doctrine falls? Grant me, for the moment, that eternal life in the sense of endless existence is really the gift of God to those who seek it, and not the inherent right of all, whether they seek or not—grant it, I say, for the moment, [illegible] single saying of the Scriptures which such a supposition would invalidate or make meaningless? On the other hand, are there not hundreds of sentences which it would fill with sudden light?"

He advocates that the "final destiny" of the wicked "in the world to come will be utter destruction, extinction, cessation of being, death." Thank the Lord, light is spreading. M. G.

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

The following is from "Words of Faith," an excellent monthly, devoted mainly to the subject of holiness:—

"Behold the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet him." Never was this cry so loud and extensively heard as it is at present, since Jesus was taken up into the clouds, and the promise given that he should come again in like manner. And never have there been greater efforts made to prepare the saints for this grand event, than there is now, and without doubt, entire sanctification is the only condition that will enable us to meet him and receive his approbation. And it is encouraging when we look at the many holiness conventions, special holiness meetings, campmeetings, and it is believed about fifty holiness periodicals are now published in our land, all having the one object in view, the edifying and perfecting of the saints, until all come in the unity of the spirit unto the stature of perfect men and women in Christ. May not the reason for this activity be found in the fact that the end draweth nigh? Let us learn the lesson well taught in the parable of the ten virgins."

There is now quite a general conviction among "the faithful followers of Jesus that he is coming again soon. The interest on this subject is steadily advancing throughout Christendom, in spite of lukewarm professors, who have a special dislike towards this glorious doctrine. It is very evident that the subject of holiness is not yet made as prominent as its importance demands. Let all who are looking for the coming of the Son of man have for their motto—"HOLINESS TO THE LORD." M. G.

ROSETTA STONE.

In 1779, when the French engineers were digging for the foundation of Fort St. Julian, near Rosetta, Egypt, they discovered a remarkable stone, of black basalt, three feet one inch high, two feet five inches wide, and ten inches thick. They found on it inscriptions in three languages:—Fourteen lines of hieroglyphs; thirty-two of cursive Egyptian, called enchorial, or demotic writing; and fifty-four lines of Greek. When discovered, no one could read it; but the infidels were sure that whenever it should be read, it would be found to be many thousand years older than the Bible, or any events therein recorded.

It was some twenty years before the problem was solved. In 1814, Wm. Young began to investigate the subject, and [illegible] in 1822 by Champollion, it was found that the Rosetta stone was prepared in B. C. 196 [illegible] in honor of Ptolemy Epiphanes, [illegible] Egypt [illegible] objection to the Bible [illegible] given by Moses [illegible] came to light.

In 1866, Lepsius discovered [illegible] inscription in the [illegible] one contains a synonical [illegible] the priests at Canopus [illegible] Ptolemy Euergetes I [illegible] thirty-seven lines of hieroglyphs, seventy-two of demotic writing, and seventy-six of Greek. It confirms what was found on the Rosetta stone, which is now in the British Museum. M. G.

"A GRAVE PERPLEXITY BEFORE US."

Under the above heading, "The Nineteenth Century" for March, published in London, has an interesting and candid article on the aspects of the labor question. The writer, Mr. W. R. Greg, says:

"The problem is neither imaginary nor remote. On the contrary, it is imminent, practical, and, as it seems to me, peculiarly serious. It is not precisely new, but our eyes have been rudely awakened both to its gravity and its imminence by some of the events of the year that has just closed over us. The many and bitter conflicts of 1878 between employers and employed, in nearly every branch of industry, especially in the north of England, have brought it to the front."

Mr. Greg thinks worse times must soon come, and that it is quite unwise for the people to refuse to make due preparation for the coming distress until it bursts upon us in its terrible fury. It seems to be almost certain that a period of unparalleled distress is rapidly approaching. Let us hide in the Rock of Ages. M. G.

CLAIMS AND CONCLUSIONS.

The claim made in certain quarters that the seventy weeks ended at the Cross; that the crucifixion took place A. D. 33, and that consequently the balance of the 2300 days ended on the tenth day of the Jewish seventh month, is self-explosive.

1. If Christ was crucified in A. D. 33 at all, he died April 3, the paschal full moon, or 14th of the first month falling on that day in that year.

2. If seventy weeks of the 2300 ended at that epoch, the full 2300 would have ended April 3, in 1843—a full year and a half before the tenth day of the seventh month in 1844.

3. If that fact should lead to the experiment of locating the Cross in A. D. 34, we are confronted with the astronomical fact that in that year the paschal full moon, or 14th of the first month, fell on Tuesday; and if Christ was crucified on that day, he must have remained dead five days, instead of three. This starting point would end the 2300 in 1844, about six months before the tenth day of the seventh month, but would leave Christ in the grave two days too long; so we have no right to put the Cross in A. D. 34, and A. D. 33 ends the measurement a year and a half too soon to suit the claim for the tenth day of the seventh month in 1844.

4. The truth is the seventy weeks reached to the end of Jewish nationality in Judea, instead of ending at the Cross; and in the "midst" of the last week of the seventy the Jewish sacrifice ceased in the temple; and this application terminates the 2300 years in the future, not many years hence; then the right sanctuary will be cleansed, instead of one in heaven. BRIEFS.

CHRIST'S MINISTERIAL WORK.

We must always contemplate Christ's redemptive work as related to man and man's world. What problems lay back of the incarnation affecting other realms and races is matter of much speculation; but it is only speculation. Whether the plan of salvation involved any readjustment of the moral government of the universe who can tell? We, certainly, have no need to know. There is quite enough in God's attitude towards us, in the wonderful offering and manifestation of his Son, to absorb and exhaust our poor human thought.

Christ's official work lies in eras. First this era of promise. Just outside the barred gates of paradise, above the faded splendors of Eden was written, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." How dim and mystic these words. But they are the embryo of the world's hope; the germ of promised redemption. As the ages moved slowly on, this utterance grew luminous and expanded into clear and glorious promise of a mighty Redeemer. Prophets and bards, with inspired lips, foretold the "coming One" who should be "mighty to save." By faith in a promised Savior patriarchs and peoples found washing for sins, grace and peace in life and hope in death. "These all died in hope, not having received the promises." Long was the world's waiting for the woman's seed; but in the fullness of time the Emanuel, the God-man, the Christ incarnate appeared, and the "light of life" shone in our [illegible] world.

Then the brief but pregnant era of trial and manifestation. In this short period the Son of David, Son of God—revealed himself to men. [illegible] real nature burst forth in its grandeur [illegible] beauty. The divine, the mighty, [illegible] gleamed through the human. He conquered Satan, cast out demons, stilled the tumultuous elements, healed the sick, raised the dead to life and proved himself, "God made flesh." This was but the fitting prelude to that loftier and more intricate ministerial undertaking—the expiation.

Into the bloody arena of the cross the "man of sorrows" entered alone. Justice, full armed, held the field. Legions of angels thronged the back ground, but not one might give to the Sufferer a kindly look. The Father's face was turned away. The bitter cry, "Eli Eli, lama sabachthani" brought no answer from the veiled heavens. The penalty he would lift from a crushed and doomed race was death. The offended law was holy, just, and good. The oblation must be emaculate and as meritorious as the offence was broad. The expiation must satisfy every attribute of the Divine nature and government. It was not an act of clemency but of satisfaction. The depth and height of the suffering no man or seraph will ever know. It touched the lowest plane [illegible] and the loftiest peak of endless measureless holiness. "Mercy and truth met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other." In that victorious cry, "It [illegible] finished," [illegible] the reconciliation of the [illegible] God made flesh had stood the Satanic assault, the dreadful [illegible] man's guilt and the heavy [illegible] justice without a tremor [illegible] of his being. Out of a death of shame he wrung an eternal victory.

"The Spirit answers to the blood." Justice cannot go back of the blood. The Devil trembles at the blood. The soul enwrapped in the passion of the cross can never be touched by wrath. The blood extracts the fiery tongues of justice for all who believe. The expiation was complete. The sacrificial offering of the Lamb of God established a provisional substitution for guilty sinners, acceptable to God and sufficient for man. Inexplicable blending of the divine and human natures. Human form and flesh dignified, exalted by alliance with essential divinity and heavenly glory. Two worlds wedded in the Son of David, the Son of God. Reconciliation and reunion through the blood of Emanuel. Great is the mystery of redemption; and the grandeur equals the mystery. (This is not all.)

POPULARIZING ADVENTISM.

This proclivity on the part of a few to popularize our faith by suppressing its most objectionable features—the very features that necessarily make us a distinctive people—is not a commendable ambition; and the principle that would tolerate and encourage it, when carried to its legitimate end, would sacrifice every feature of our faith, and give back the once conquered field to the advocates of error.

To illustrate: One man, animated by this desire to popularize our faith, concludes that if we would only desist from preaching the coming of Christ specially near, we might soon be deemed worthy of public endorsement; but that one feature of our faith is so very much disrelished at large that it prevents the spread of our faith; and that, by abandoning this feature, life and death theology would triumph over all opposition.

Another one, possessed of the same desire to popularize our faith, insists if we would say nothing about life and death, seeing there is such a strong prejudice against it, and present less objectionable features of our faith, we would soon win our way to public approval.

Still another conjectures if we would only present the theory of the final destruction of the wicked, and omit the proclamation of the sleep of the dead, a point on which bereaved friends feel sensitive, that the truth would speedily become popular. Thus, to gratify this aspiration, one sacrifices one part of the faith, another sacrifices another portion, and by the time we get through, nothing is left to popularize. Never shun the reproach which truth brings. W. S.

HARTFORD, CT.

Dear Bro. Couch:—We feel that the Lord has done a good work in Hartford, through Bro. Grant as the agent. Christians from other churches have become interested in the truths which he presents, and will ever rejoice that the Lord inclined him to visit this city. Your correspondent, though a member of another church, is in harmony with the great truths which he so clearly presents; and that all the dear people of God, as well as all who desire to be, may be found ready when the master comes, is my humble and earnest prayer. I send you a few lines also from a daily paper which may interest your readers. H.

To the Editor of the Courant:—The thirty days' appointment of Elder Grant for this city, has now expired; with two weeks added to it. And we believe he has verified, to a satisfactory extent, the statement which he at first made here, namely, "I have come here to show from the Scriptures, that the coming of the Lord is near, and to prepare the people for it." So that we judge from the expressions of some of the churches that the large audience at the Fourth church, Sabbath evening, were a little disappointed in not hearing something of the Lord's coming. But as he is very courteous, he would not speak in another church, upon a subject which has, perhaps, been too unpopular, except by request. His next appointment is in Thompsonville, and he doubtless would give a lecture here on the prophecies if desired, before he leaves this part of the country. Though he has immersed but eleven at this visit, some at the South, and some at the North Baptist churches, from children up to old age, yet it seems that a good influence has reached all the churches. He has visited, with his great and instructive historical chart, which is seven feet wide by sixty-eight feet long, some of the larger cities on both shores of this continent. And it would not be surprising if he was invited to lecture and preach beyond the Atlantic. Mr. Moody's first meeting over there was very small, but becoming well endorsed at last he has returned to do a great work in his own land. The elder seems to be a man of great endurance, which he attributes to his having been a strict vegetarian for many years past. Last evening these meetings came to a close with the communion, at which one hundred and fifty persons, from five different churches, sat at the tables at the same time, primitive style. A church was also organized and officers chosen."

PREACHER WANTED.—Bro. Martin Bacon and myself own a good church four miles east of Bucyrus, Ohio. Now we want some good man to preach in it. We will pledge seventy-five dollars towards his support; we perhaps might raise one hundred. We live in a good rich country, and there is plenty of work for a man that will work a part of the time. I think we might build up a church that could and would support a preacher. We want a godly man, and one that will "preach the Word." If there is such an one who desires to come West and preach, let us hear from him.

DEXTER BACON.

Bucyrus, Crawford Co., Ohio.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—I wish to acknowledge the receipt of money from the brethren and sisters who assisted me in buying a horse, wagon and harness. From the church of Milltown, Calais, $12. From the church at Deer Isle, Stinson's Neck, $5. From Sister Tibbitts and Sister Potter, Burlington, each $1. From Sister Phinney, Lincoln, $1. All money sent to me shall be duly acknowledged through the Crisis.

Oldtown, Me. ELD. N. SMITH.

A NOTE.—For the information of all concerned we would say that our recent "Cost-look Conference" was one of a new style and order,—"of tools one new" Conference was made, "so making peace." It is "The Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec, Northern Vermont and Northern New Hampshire." This should have been stated before. It was an inadvertence.

"SONGS OF FAITH."

"Songs of Faith" is the latest collection of New Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, by J. H. Tenney, Rev. E. A. Hoffman, P. P. Bliss, Ira D. Sankey, James R. Murray, T. C. O'Kane, Asa Hull, Rev. R. Lowry and other well known writers, and is pronounced the best book for Revival, Devotional, Praise, Camp Meetings, etc., yet published. It contains Moody and Sankey's most successful songs, and a large number of new gems. Dealers are ordering "Songs of Faith" by the thousands. The Religious Telescope, Dayton, Ohio, thus speaks of this new book:

"This new collection is the same size as No. 1 and No. 2 prepared by Messrs. Sankey and Bliss. It has, in all, over 240 choice pieces. Among these are many of the most soul-stirring compositions of our day, such as "Hold the Fort," "The Ninety and Nine," "What a Friend we have in Jesus," "What Shall the Harvest be?" "Resting at the Cross," with many others. Besides these there is a larger number of living, heart-inspiring, original pieces of music and words than we have seen in any book of this kind. The use of this book will show its merit to be second to but few, if any, of our time."

Two editions are published. Bound in boards, words and music, 35 cents by mail; $30 per hundred. Words, only 6 cts. $5 per hundred. Published by S. Brainard's Sons, Cleveland, O., and sold by most book and music dealers.

The piece of music on the first page of this number of World's Crisis is taken from the above book, by permission. AGENT.

Gospel Hymns No. 3.

The Third No. of Gospel Hymns are now ready, and for sale at the Crisis Office. Price 35 cts. each, postpaid. AGENT.

THE events occurring at the close of the last century (French Revolution) probably bear but a faint analogy to what the world is yet to witness. Prophetic students are constantly insisting, and rightly, that this was the mere first outbreak of an era of convulsion and change; the curtain only rose and fell, as it were, on the great drama of events, in order to let the nations have a foreshadowing of a far greater outbreak that is yet to come.

During the present century Europe has, more or less, been in a constant state of agitation. To-day western Christendom presents a similar aspect to the eastern world. Lawlessness is rife; this is exemplified alike in Church and State. It is a fact that cannot be too often insisted upon—viz., that the temporal power of the western apostacy (the Papacy) stands at this moment wasted and consumed. The last Pope-king has passed away, and his successor is a mere priest—a king without a kingdom. It is a knowledge of this portentous fact that is at the bottom of the terrible struggles now being made by the spiritual power of the Church.—Christian Herald.

"JOURNEYINGS OFT."

BY S. B. MABRY.

I have just returned from a three weeks meeting held in connection with the Conference of Feb. 27th, at Geneva, Ill., of which Bro. E. H. Burrington is pastor. His health is rather poor, yet he is continuing in the good work of the Master, and doing what he can to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord. Although there was considerable sickness, and some of the church not able to attend but part of the time, yet on the whole the attendance was good, and by the blessing of the Lord an excellent spirit prevailed in the meetings. Many were convinced of their duty, and a number manifested a desire to serve the Lord. Some are expected to be baptized and unite with the church soon. The cause of the Lord was strengthened, and the hearts of many were encouraged. We look for more fruit by the faithful labor of church and pastor, and trust the revival spirit may continue.

We were glad to meet Bro. I. C. Welcome, who had an appointment there on his way home East. I was highly edified in listening to his discourses, which were timely, and was sorry to part with him and Bro. Burrington, also the church and friends; but I am glad to know I have a place in their affections and sympathy, and hope for the glad meeting in the soon coming kingdom.

On Tuesday noon I bade farewell to friends and brethren, and the little ones who came up to the train to bid me good-bye, and started on my way to Bro. Stocking's of Lindenwood, who sent his son to meet me at Monroe, and brought me to his house. I found some afflicted with colds. We are still in the land of the enemy. Bro. and Sr. Stocking have been some years in the faith delivered to Abraham, and have done considerable from year to year for the cause of truth. We trust they will be amply repaid with a home in the heavenly kingdom. I went to Holcomb, took train the same evening and went to Rochelle, the home of Eld. Geo. W. Button. He is pastor of the church at Afton, Ill. Is now residing here. I went to see him, but he was not at home. Hope he may be kept constantly in the field to labor for Christ. Time is too short for churches to allow their faithful ministry to be idle while the fields are whitening for the harvest. Let there be a spirit of faithfulness and a sacrifice this year on the part of our churches and ministers commensurate with the importance of the work of saving the perishing, is our humble prayer.

Came in the night by way of Dixon to Amboy, and found my home in safety. I am thankful for rest for a few days. Brethren, pray for me, that I may be constantly engaged in winning souls until Jesus comes.

WE COULD NOT.

I wish to say to many brethren who have written to me from Minn., Iowa, Wis., Ill., and New York, to call on and preach to them, that I could not consistently arrange to comply on so many roads, and in the limited time I had to remain West. I have done the best I could to serve the churches and preach Christ to the people.

I. C. WELLCOME.

P. S. We hope to be in Maine by May 10th, and able to fill calls to preach in New England, as formerly. I. C. W.

From Bro. B. P. Morris.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I have been sick about ten months. The Scriptures say "the prayer of faith shall save the sick;" and "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Now, Christian friends, will you pray that if it is the Lord's will, I may be restored to health?

Lebanon, Me.

Obituaries.

WORTHINGTON. In North Bennington, Vt., March, 11th, 1879, of paralysis, Bro. Shaler W. Worthington, aged forty-five years.

Bro. Worthington came out in the Advent faith in 1854, under the labors of Bro Henry Pratt, in North Adams, where he then resided. He removed to North Bennington about seventeen years ago, and has resided there since that time. He has engaged in the manufacture of cotton cloth, and with his partner, Mr. John Lyman, was doing a thriving business. They have employed about one hundred and seventy-five persons in their two mills. The community will not soon recover from the loss they have sustained in the death of our brother. He was a thorough, practical and energetic man, and had the love and respect of the community and those in his employ.

He dearly loved the truths that we as a people hold, and his time, money and influence have been cheerfully given in support of the same. His house has ever been thrown open to receive the children of God, and especially have Advent preachers received a hearty welcome, and been helped after a godly sort. Sister Worthington deeply feels her loss, and their children—three sons and two daughters—realize that they have lost as affectionate a father as children ever had. He and his wife have for a number of years been members of the Advent Christian Church in South West Hoosick, N. Y. The funeral services were held at his residence, and a large number of people were present, and evidently were sincere mourners. Our brother was stricken down very suddenly, having been able to attend to his business until within about a week of the time of his death. We confidently believe that he sleeps in Jesus, and as we saw him lowered into his silent resting-place it was with the expectation that he will live again to die no more. Sermon by the writer from Job 19: 25-27. W. O. HIGLEY.

HOLMES. In Tuftonboro, N. H., March 13th, 1879, Augusta, wife of Henry Holmes, aged about twenty-eight years.

Suddenly and early in life has this husband been called to mourn the loss of a loving and faithful companion. She leaves two children, one an infant. May the God of the fatherless watch over the two little ones, and administer consolation to the afflicted husband and the rest of the mourning circle. The community feel that they have sustained a great loss by the removal by death of so good and kind a neighbor and sister. She made a profession of religion about two years ago, was baptized at Melvin Village last May by Elder John Parsons, of Northwood, and has sustained her Christian character until the time of her death.

"Thou wilt sleep, but not forever,
Jesus died and rose again;
Soon he'll come in clouds of glory,
Thou wilt rise with him to reign."

AUGUSTA E. SHANNON.

HOWLAND. In Bingham, Potter Co., Pa., at the residence of Bro. Samuel Monroe, Nov. 25th, 1878, after a painful illness of one year, Sister Rhoda Howland, aged fifty-six years.

Sister H. was formerly a member of the Free Will Baptist Church. About two years since she embraced the doctrine of the Advent near, in which faith she continued till her death. She died in hope of immortality at the first resurrection. May the same hope sustain the afflicted family. A discourse was preached by the writer to an attentive congregation from 1 Thess. 4: 13.

E. C. COWLES.

BURTON. In Lakeville, Ct., March 5th, 1879, of cancer, Sister Eunice Burton, aged fifty-three years.

Our sister gave her heart to the Lord in early life, and joined the Methodist Church. But when Bro. S. G. Mathewson labored in Salisbury, Ct., she listened to the cry, "Behold He cometh!" and with joy she received the truth, and has since been looking for her Lord's return. Many a weary pilgrim has been cheered in listening to her exhortations and prayers. Our sister suffered for nearly two years all the excruciating torture attending that awful disease. She went to Rome, N. Y., twice, but all to no profit. Her dying counsel to me was never to advise any to go there. Her last days were days of the greatest agony, but she rests in hope. And although we sorrow deeply, yet not without strong hope of very soon seeing her in the Holy City. She leaves a husband and four children, who deeply mourn their great loss. May the good Lord sustain her husband and lead her children to seek and find their mother's God and Savior. Words of bright hope were spoken by the writer from 1 Cor. 15: 43, 44, in the Methodist Church at Ancram, N. Y.

G. A. BARKER.

JOHNSON. In South Durham, Me., Feb. 28th, 1879, Mehitabel Johnson, wife of Jotham Johnson, aged ninety-one years.

Funeral service conducted by Elder Prescott, assisted by Elds. Plummer and Stinson. On this solemn occasion a host of relatives and friends gathered from miles away, to pay their tribute of respect to one that was loved by all. She with her husband was united in holy wedlock in 1807, and lived together seventy-two years. They had a family of ten children, of whom seven are now living; the eldest sixty-eight, the youngest forty-seven. The tie that bound them together on earth has been severed, and the dear mother is gone. We remember her kind, loving words, her holy walk and her godly conversation. We are glad that Christ has taught us in his holy Word that he will come again the second time, to raise the dead, and give unto them that have loved his appearing, eternal life. Then will be brought to pass the saying of Paul, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

We shall meet in the land where the spring is eternal,
Where darkness ne'er cometh, nor sorrow, nor pain,
Where the flowers never fade, and that clime always vernal,
We shall meet and our parting be, never again.

J. P. JOHNSON.

THOMAS. In North Rutland, Mass., Feb. 26th, 1879, Sister Mary E., wife of Henry F. Thomas, aged twenty-six years.

Sister Mary fell asleep in Jesus in hope of the glorious resurrection of the just, when the Life-giver comes to raise the sleeping ones and give them eternal life. She has left a husband and little daughter, with quite a circle of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. She suffered much in her last sickness, but was resigned to the will of Him who doeth all things well. Her voice in sweet song is missed very much in the little Advent Chapel, as she has led the singing there for some time in the past, but she will sing again when the ransomed of the Lord return to Zion with songs and everlasting joy, and when sighing and sorrow shall flee away. W. G. RUGGLES.

CLARK. In Berwick, Me., Sept. 6th, 1879, of dropsy, Bro. Solomon Clark, aged seventy-one years.

Our beloved brother found Christ among the Free Will Baptists in early life. About twenty years ago he became a believer in the second personal coming of Christ and its kindred doctrines. He died in the faith of Christ's soon coming, giving to all who came to see him a word of warning. To the writer he said, "Tell the people at my funeral that Solomon is dead, but is going to live again." He was an affectionate husband and a friend to all. We laid him away to sleep until Jesus comes. May the Lord bless and sustain the lone widow and many friends that mourn.

C. S. SHATTUCK.

WOODARD. In Ontario, N. Y., Jan. 19, 1879, of rheumatism of the heart, Chauncey Woodard, aged seventy-five years.

We believe Bro. Woodard died in hope. He never made a public profession during our acquaintance with him, but he gave evidence that his trust was in Christ. He loved to converse about the precious promises, and we hope to meet him in the coming kingdom. A large concourse of people attended his funeral, where words of comfort were spoken by Bro. Delong, the Presbyterian minister, from John 16: 7. I was requested to preach the discourse, but could not reach the place on account of the Railroad being blockaded.

JAS. E. WELLS.

RICKARD. At Fitch Bay, P. Q., Feb. 3d, of cancerous humor, Sister Sarah L. Rickard, widow of the late Abner Rickard, aged sixty-two years.

She was a great sufferer, yet she endured it with patience. For many years she has been waiting the consummation of the Christian's hope. She was ever at her post of duty, both in the house of God and her own home; but mother's voice is hushed, and she sweetly sleeps until the morning dawns, when she will awake in His likeness, and be satisfied. The writer tried to speak words of comfort and consolation to the mourning children, and a large assembly of relatives and friends, from 1st Thess. 4: 12-18.

MOORE. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Worcester, Mass., Feb. 28th, 1879, Mrs. Emeline Moore, aged sixty-eight years.

Sister Moore was an earnest Christian, and one very much beloved by all who knew her. She leaves a large circle of friends to mourn. She was converted in 1812, and was a firm believer in the soon coming of Jesus. She leaves a husband and one daughter, who feel their loss keenly. May God keep them in this their hour of sorrow. The writer tried to comfort the mourning friends by pointing them to Jesus as the Resurrection.

M. A. POTTER.

CANTERBURY. In South Belchertown, Mass., Dec. 28th, 1878, Sister Canterbury, wife of John Canterbury, aged eighty-three years.

She embraced the faith of the near Advent of Christ in Bro. Wm. Miller's day, and had meetings in her own house for sixteen years. She was a great sufferer during her last sickness, but rested in the Lord, and died fully in the faith of rising at the resurrection of the just. Funeral services attended by Dr. A. M. Higgins, of New Bedford.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, April 2. A dispatch to the Daily News from Rangoon says the official announcement of the defensive and waiting policy of the Indian Government has produced a bad effect, as it is considered an acknowledgement of weakness.

The King of Burmah has summoned all his subjects capable of bearing arms.

Sweden is passing through a severe commercial crisis. A prominent railway has broken down financially, and the shareholders are liable to the last penny, but the example of the City of Glasgow Bank was not lost on them, and all means were adopted to get rid of the shares before the final smash.

A fire in Hayti has destroyed the town of Miragoane, and in three hours five or six thousand persons were rendered homeless, and a million dollars' worth of property had vanished in smoke.

London, March 24. A Pesth despatch, dated Sunday night, says a furious storm has again damaged the dykes protecting Csongrad, Szentes, Vasarhely, Zombor and Tittell, which the inhabitants have been making every effort to strengthen for twenty days.

A Calcutta correspondent states that complete anarchy prevails at Mandalay. The bulk of the inhabitants would welcome the British troops. The hopes that an explosion will be averted are growing faint.

The London Christian states the facts that 1885 of the 5241 shares of a registered brewery company at Carlisle are held by clergymen.

By the final treaty between Russia and Turkey, the latter will have to pay the Czar $166,000,000 and $5,335,000 to Russian subjects in Turkey for damages sustained during the war. Of course Turkey can't pay this, but it is not unlikely that Great Britain will foot the bill, and foreclose on what remains of the Ottoman Empire for her pay. Turkey owes England now about $1,000,000,000.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Danville, Va., April 3. A severe tornado passed over Brown Summit, N. C., to-day. Several houses were blown down, scattering the furniture broadcast. One boy was killed and many persons seriously injured by falling timber. Trees and fences were blown to pieces. Great damage was done in its passage.

St. Paul, April 1. A Sioux Falls (Dakota) special to the Pioneer Press says the prairie fires reached the suburbs of the town and were only checked by great exertions. The wife of John Forbion a farmer, was burned to death in attempting to save the barn.

The people of the South, like ourselves, are suffering from a cold and backward spring. Heavy frosts have damaged early crops in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C., to the extent of a quarter of a million dollars.

Valparaiso, March 29. Warlike preparations are being made on both sides. Bolivian troops are congregating at Calania on the frontier. Two thousand Chilian regulars have embarked, and a fleet has sailed from the Bolivian coast. The warlike feeling in Valparaiso is intense.

The Peruvian Chambers have been convoked, in consequence of the threatening aspect of the situation. Meanwhile the Peruvian fleet is ordered to the Bolivian coast.

The men on top of Mt. Washington, N. H., are having a hard time of it. An almost unprecedented gale has been blowing at the rate of 182 miles an hour. Thursday the velocity ranged from 138 to 144 miles, a really frightful rate, as it is estimated that in the worst of the East Indian cyclones the speed is but about one hundred miles an hour.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

Revival meetings will be commenced March 23d and held every evening at Morgan Chapel, corner of Shawmut Avenue and Indiana Place, and continue as long as the interest demands.

Believing the interest and the field warrant the inauguration of these Protracted Meetings, and feeling that God is with us in our endeavors to save the perishing around us, and that he will stand by us in every hour of need, we give a call in the name of God and our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to every Christian to come and labor with us for the salvation of their fellow creatures.

Christian workers will find that the field here is already white for the harvest, and is only waiting for the laborers. May many come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and in that great day he will say unto them, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "Come over and help us." Elders J. Hemenway, E. A. Stockman and L. F. Baker will be with us.

NOTICE.

All persons wishing to communicate with me by letter, or otherwise, will find me at 144 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the first week of each month until further notice. The remaining portion of each month at Athol, Mass.

J. HEMENWAY.

Quarterly Conference.

The Third New Hampshire Quarterly Conference for the present year is to be held at New Durham Ridge, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, April 23d, and continuing over the following Sunday. Those who attended our Conference at Wolfboro will not need to be urged to come to this one. To others we say, come and see how blessed it is to greet those of like precious faith, and to unite with them in labor for the perishing.

C. H. SWEET,
J. F. LIBBY, } Quar. Conf. Com.
G. C. BOWLES,

Connecticut Conference.

The Connecticut A. C. Conference will hold its Semi-Annual Session at Yalesville, commencing Wednesday, April 23d, and continue over the Sabbath. Business day will be Thursday, the 24th. It is to be hoped that the preaching brethren will need no other incentive than to know that this call is made in the name of the Lord. Come, brethren, let us rally for the work of saving the perishing, and see if a blow cannot be struck that shall tell for God and the salvation of souls. Will the churches see that they are represented? Let there be a general rally, as there is important business to come before the Conference in which all are interested. H. W. PERKINS, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The next Annual Meeting of the Advent Christian Conference for the State of Kansas will be held in the North Western Evangelical District No. 2, commencing Thursday, Sept. 25th. It is about half way between Clifton, Washington Co., and Clyde, Cloud Co., Kan., on Dry Creek, in Washington Co. A Campmeeting will be held in connection. People coming by R. R. can inquire at Clifton for Bro. G. P. Boutwell; at Clyde for Bro. James Hayes. Wood, water and hay will be provided on the ground, also the State and District tent and a cook-house with stoves will be there for the accommodation of all.

Churches and ministers will please take notice and report by letter or delegates; if by letter, direct to me, at Clyde, Cloud Co., Kan. Come, all who can, as this may be the last Annual Meeting we will have. Come with the Spirit of the Master, praying that good may be done in the name of the Lord. THOS. R. COMSTOCK, Evangelist of District No. 2.

NOTICE.—The next meeting of the Quarterly Conference for the Second District of Kansas will be held with the A. C. Church at Salem, Jewell Co., Kansas, commencing Thursday, May 29th. Churches in the District will please take notice and report by letter or delegates. Also ministers will please do the same. The District Tent will be pitched for the occasion. Come one and all with the Spirit of the Master, and may God bless our efforts.

THOS. R. COMSTOCK, District Evangelist.

NOTICE.—After six weeks' confinement at home on account of the sickness of my wife and neighbors, I am now at liberty, and can go out again into the field. I have now no appointments and will answer calls. Address me at Chicopee Falls, Mass. I desire going on my yearly visits down East in May and June. I want to see old friends once more if it is the Lord's will. H. MUNGER.

NOTICE.—All parties are hereby informed that no appointments will be accepted at St. Johnsbury, Hardwick or Cabot, Vt., without previous arrangements with the proper authorities, who will take charge of the matter of publishing the appointments. "God is not the author of confusion." "Let everything be done decently and in order."

L. C. MCKINSTRY, in behalf of all interested.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference at Northfield, Me., beginning April 23d, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday, and longer if it is duty. Come, all who can, with a mind to labor for the salvation of the people. There will be baptism Sunday afternoon.

For the church, RUFUS SNOW.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference at Jonesboro, Me., beginning Wednesday evening, April 30th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. Let all come praying in faith for this meeting, that good may be done.

For the church, RUFUS SNOW.

NOTICE.—I would notify my friends, brothers and sisters in Christ, that I am about moving to the town of Friendship, Me., to settle. My time will be divided principally between Friendship and Cushing, as the brethren of those two places may arrange. My address will be Friendship, Me.

HORACE M. YORK.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Church at Clinton, Mass., have removed from Good Templar's Hall to Conant Hall, Church Street. Regular meetings as follows: Sunday services 10 30 A. M.; 2 and 6 30 P. M.; prayer meeting Wednesday evenings at 7 30 P. M.

ISAAC BARNES, Corresponding Elder.

NOTICE.—All persons interested in the Rhode Island Campmeeting Association will bear in mind that the Associational Year ends the first Monday in May. All dues must be paid on or before that date. J. P. HAZARD, Treasurer.

NOTICE.—Brethren who desire to preach in Franklin, N. H., will please correspond with B. C. Stevens or Mrs. S. G. Pike, Preaching Committee. B. C. STEVENS.

NOTICE.—The Beebe Plain Campmeeting will be held this year from June 21st to July 3d. Only one meeting will be held on the ground this year, and it is proposed to make it the best possible. Particulars hereafter. L. C. MCKINSTRY, Sec.

NOTICE.—I am now at liberty to preach the Gospel wherever the door may open. Address me at "World's Crisis" Office, Boston, Mass.

N. M. DAVIS.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon), to insure insertion for the coming week.

Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent, unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister or ministers of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquital.

☞ All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—OZIAS GOODRICH, Boston, Mass.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 6th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

BY ELD. H. F. HILL.

For sale at the Crisis Office. Price [illegible] $1.25. I. C. WEL[illegible]

IS MY NAME WRITTEN IN HEAVEN?

"I tremble as I ask,
Is my name there?
Once, on a beautiful day,
I seemed to hear Him say—
Cast off thy care,
My triumph share;
My blood hath sprinkled thee divine,
And thou, poor sinner, art forever mine.

But I'm a mourner yet,
My years decline;
Nearer each day to death,
I draw the painful breath;
The night's close in,
I weep and pine,
And fear, if ever I was his,
I've forfeited my seat in heavenly bliss.

And I must know—
Is my name there?
Oh! if Thou would'st respond,
And say "It is," what fond Delights I'll share,
What burdens bear.
No cross too heavy for the load
Of him whose name is written with his God.

Surely upon thy hands,
O Son of God,
And in that crimson tide
That stained thy pierced side,
The thorn, the rod,
The pathway trod
Up Calvary's heights, my name was traced
In living lines, never to be erased.

So I will trust in thee,
Heavy and slow,
Ever midst gloom and care,
Yet never quite despair,
Weary and slow,
I'll go, I'll go,
My appointed time that thou hast given,
In hopes that God hath writ my name in heaven."

MISSION WORK IN MAINE.

BY H. K. CHOATE.

The third Mission Meeting of the A. C. Conference of Maine was held at Naples Village in the Union Meeting-House. We went to this place by invitation of our dear Bro. John C. Libby, who formerly lived in Biddeford. Much is due Brn. Libby and Hyde, who, laboring together by the grace of God, planted the church at B., and stood by it in its early and trying days. How true it is that one "may plant," and another "enter into their labors."

While at Biddeford in December last, at the York Co. Conference, Bro. L. Boutell received some of the early history of the church at B. He said Brn. Libby and Hyde would work hard through the cold winter days, and take all or nearly all their surplus money and pay it out to support the meeting, while Bro. Boutell would do their preaching, and visit from house to house doing pioneer work. God blest the labor. The people would come out, and these brethren would suffer and work on, and thus the church at Biddeford was established.

Brethren, the field is just as white and ready for the harvest as then, and "he that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth unto life eternal." Who will go this suffering way? I found that Bro. Libby had the same spirit, energy and love for the cause in Naples as he had in Biddeford.

After leaving Mechanic Falls Monday at the close of the meeting, in company with Bro. J. A. Libby, I went to West Poland, and stopped for the night with Bro. Clarke Hibbard. We found a quiet home here, with loving hearts to care for us. Tired, and suffering from troubles of body and mind, it was blessed to find a home among sympathizing friends. In the morning we started for Naples, arriving there about four o'clock P. M. We received a hearty welcome from Brn. Libby and Hill. After a warm supper we all packed into a pung and sleigh and started for the village, which was some two miles away, to announce our mission work. We found at Bro. Libby's Bro. A. W. Taylor, who had come to help us in the work. We had about forty out to hear. It appeared to me a large part of them came out to see if we were really human beings. They stood and gazed at us as though we were Chinese jugglers.

Bro. Marshall, the Methodist minister, located at the village, came in, and I took him cordially by the hand, and said to him that we had come among them to promote vital piety and preach the coming of the Lord. He was rather inclined to hold me off. I did not notice it, but pressed him to take a seat on the stand, which he declined. Bro. J. A. Libby preached an excellent discourse, after which we had several warm addresses, the Methodist brother taking part.

Wednesday morning I started for the village to secure a boarding place. I was directed to the village inn. I called and told the landlord my wants. He informed me that he could not accommodate me, as he was about to visit a neighboring village to attend a quarterly meeting. I thought it quite remarkable to close a hotel in a village of this size to attend a meeting. I remarked to him I guessed my "stripe" had something to do with his not receiving me.

We held a meeting Wednesday afternoon, with a few out. Bro. A. W. Taylor preached to good acceptance. The meeting in the evening was quite well attended. Bro. Taylor preached, as he intended to leave in the morning.

Friday came only to bring a cold snowstorm. I felt somewhat discouraged, but left it with the Lord to help, and give us such weather and meetings as would be for the best good of the cause. In company with Bro. Libby, in the storm we started for a home we had on the day previous been invited to accept, some six miles away. The Lord who careth for us sent out one of those Marthas to invite us to her home; so away we went, Bro. Libby singing as he pounded his hands to keep them warm. At last, after several inquiries along the way, we espied a quiet farm-house partly sheltered by a forest of elms. To this place our horse turned off to bring us to the home of Bro. Wm. Burton. We were cold and covered with snow, but found a blazing fire and a warm welcome from these dear friends, and we "thanked the Lord and took courage." Praise the Lord! He knows just how to [illegible] good homes for his children. It cleared [illegible]y about noon, so that we held a meeting. [illegible] Lord helped us preach to them from a [illegible]tation of St. Paul's second letter to Timothy—"Preach the Word." There was a good congregation, and the prejudice which first appeared was fast passing away.

Bro. Jared Whitman came on to help us. He preached an excellent discourse in the evening to a good house. He was liked much. Saturday afternoon we had an able discourse from Bro. J. A. Libby, followed in the evening by Bro. Whitman.

Sabbath morning came clear and cold, with a badly drifted road. We started for the meeting, which was four miles away. [illegible] never felt better courage in my life to [illegible]k roads and preach the gospel. So away we went, with the friends that had cared for us, to hold our last meeting. After driving some two miles we came to a stand still in a snow-drift with depth enough to arrest any further travel in the road. We were obliged to part with our friends, they to turn back home, and we to take the field and break roads for our faithful horse. We finally broke through and arrived at the meeting-house to find a few out, but we had an excellent meeting, one of the best of the season. Bro. Libby preached them a good sermon, after which we turned the exercises into an inquiry meeting. I called on all present; found some had backslidden from the faith, but they promised to be more faithful. At this meeting Bro. Thos. Eades, a Methodist brother, took a part, with Bro. Gammon from the Orthodox. The Lord blest them. We stopped with Bro. Gammon Sunday night, who seemed much comforted by our coming among them.

Thus closed a meeting commenced with much prejudice on the part of many of the citizens, which finally broke away only to bring these dear people nearer to us in the ties of Christian love. One young lady, a member of the Association Baptist, said that when she was informed of our coming among them, she would not go out to hear us; but she came, and the Spirit reached her heart, and she acknowledged the whole truth. May the Lord bless her, and when the Son of man shall come, may she come to the kingdom of God as a fruit of this winter campaign among the hills of Western Maine.

We were invited to return, and promised to, if the Lord will, in June to hold a Tent Meeting. Bro. Libby left an appointment to go in two weeks, which he has filled, and I am informed that he has repeated his visit. I am also informed that quite an interest has grown up from our humble work at Naples. We hope to hear that many from this quiet village have decided to follow the lowly Nazarene.

I wish to tender thanks to Brn. J. Albert Libby, Benj. Hill, Dr. Sawyer, Brn. Gammon, Kelley and Burton, for their kindness to us while among them; also to Brn. A. W. Taylor and Jared Whitman, with whom we met for the first time to labor. They both rendered good service.

WESTERN JOTTINGS.—No. 7.

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

My last left me with an engagement for one more meeting at Armstrong Station. That I filled Monday evening, March 3rd. Bro and Sr. Fassett were with me. The audience was large and very attentive, while I preached the Word of life to them from 1 John 5: 11–13. Many of the hearers were Methodists, some Seventh-day Adventists. The truth seemed to be very satisfactorily received by all the Christian believers. Tuesday we parted from our old and tried friends, and with Bro. Hamlet returned down Crow River, through St. Michael's—a Roman Catholic town—of beautiful timber and valuable grass marshes, to Monticello, where we found our brother so far recovered as to attempt a journey with me to the lower part of the State.

The 5th we left his interesting and dear family, who had shown me much kindness, and took the train for Minneapolis, where we were cordially received and cared for by Bro. Wm. Chandler and his faithful wife. The next day we visited old friends who had formerly lived in Maine, and in the evening filled an appointment in Fourth St. Chapel. It was a precious season in the Lord. Bro. Bunsell had spent four weeks with this church, and they seemed much revived under his faithful efforts; but he had been called home by sickness in his family, yet is expected to return at an early period.

The 7th we took the train for Sleepy Eye Lake, calling on friends at Kasota, with whom we dined and spent several hours in discoursing on the plan of grace and the promise of eternal life through Christ. Taking the evening train we met several ministers of the German Methodist Church, returning home from their Sunday-school Convention. We could readily distinguish that they were a clean class of men, as the "news" and "tobacco boy" came through the cars to sell cigars, for every one refused to purchase. We distributed tracts among them, which soon opened a talk on religion. One of the ministers, a fine looking and intelligent gentleman, told us of a class of Seventh-day keepers, who taught that "the unconverted have no souls." We ventured to suggest that he did not understand their views, as we were often falsely accused of teaching similar views.

This opened a long, and, we trust, profitable Scriptural discussion on the nature of man, the gift of immortality through Christ, and the future punishment of the ungodly. We found he had been puzzled and baffled by his theology, and we trust he will henceforth study his Bible with better light, and find new and important truth upon this subject.

Arriving at Sleepy Eye Lake, to revisit our Bro., Dr. J. W. B. Wellcome, we found them in trouble. One of their sons, eleven years of age, had been shot the evening previous with a revolver, fired by a young man, clerk of a store, who was annoyed by a set of thoughtless boys who were playing "tick knock" on the window of his store. This boy was among them only as a looker-on, but, like "poor Tray," was caught "in bad company." The clerk came out and fired five shots. One took effect, the ball passing through the hip of the right leg into the thigh of the left leg, inflicting a dangerous wound, but it is hoped not fatal. This should be a warning to all boys not to attempt such fun, nor associate with bad company.

We found that Eld. Case had appointed for us to preach on Sunday to fill the Baptist appointment. My brother, Eld. M., preached in the A. M., and then by invitation of Bro. Robinson, the Methodist minister, again in the P. M. I preached in the evening on Life in Christ, a theme which is beginning to awaken much attention in that community.

Tuesday, March 11th, we parted from the Dr. and family, and took wagon for Manyasha, a new town on the Southern Minnesota R. R. We rode sixty miles over the beautiful prairie on a windy day. The land is excellent, but little of it yet cultivated. We passed but two towns—St. James and Cedarville,—saw no forests or native trees, excepting a few on the borders of several of the many fine lakes which dot this broad prairie. At Manyasha we found a few of our kindred whom we visited. There are a few Christian people in this place who are trying to raise the gospel standard. Eld. Lay, a Free Baptist preacher, is preaching in these parts, and appears to be a man of God. Learning that my brother and myself were in the place, he visited us, and arranged for me to preach Sunday. I complied, and preached in a small school-house, full of attentive hearers, on the grace of God and the blessed hope. I was then invited to go to Shenburne, and preach to the Congregationalists in the evening.

We took tea with a Bro. Hernden, who had been brought up by Adventist parents, and is himself a believer, together with his wife and brother and wife. They are deeply interested in the cause of Christ. We had a pleasant visit with them, and in the evening I preached to a full house on Rev. 21: 7, and sowed some seeds which the Lord may cause to grow. My brother took part in the services, and several excellent testimonies for Christ followed.

IN LABORS MORE ABUNDANT.

R. M'CULLOCH.

Dear Brethren in Christ:—Since our return from the great Campmeetings in the East, early in September, we have found no time to idle away, or to use in any manner that would not glorify God, be the means of strengthening the church, bring sinners to a saving knowledge of the truth, and thus prepare a bride for the Master, when he shall come to gather his weary church to their long looked-for home and kingdom.

We commenced our labors on our return in new fields, in connection with our regular pastoral work, and the result has been that quite a large number have become deeply interested in the truths of God's Word, while others have embraced the truth fully, and are defending and spreading it as far as it is in their power. Although opposition meets us at nearly every step, yet God's silent, unseen, but almighty power is carrying his work forward in a manner that makes our hearts rejoice. New fields are constantly opening, and calls come from far and near to come and preach the truth and labor to save the perishing. So numerous have been the calls that we almost determined to abandon all pastoral labor, and devote all our time and energies to evangelistic work. Still it may be our duty a small part of the time to look after the welfare of the churches, that "nothing be lost." But the Lord willing, we expect to devote a large portion of our time in new fields with the tent and otherwise. The fields are "already white for the harvest," and we need consecrated, valiant men of God to carry the last dispensational message this world will ever hear to the perishing. God give us such men. We have never been so fully in the work as now, and the demand is increasing every hour. Time is short. My heart pulsates more quickly than ever as I realize the very near approach of the Savior, and the work to be done to save the perishing.

Our cry is, Oh, Lord, give us strength to do our work nobly in these last hours of peril! The dangers thicken on every hand. The downward way was never so thickly crowded as to-day. Marriage has come to be almost a mockery, and unchastity, if not the rule, is alarmingly prevalent. Commercial honor and integrity are measured by law; and charity for the erring and unfortunate is almost a thing of the past; while nothing seems so sweet and savory to the public mind as the scandal and gossip that is retailed at clubs, sewing societies, etc. Surely we are amid the perils that betoken the coming of the King of kings and Lord of lords. "All hail the morn of glory nigh." We sigh and groan for redemption, when our loved ones, who are now pillowed in the silent valley of the dead, shall awake to eternal life.

Bro. Sheldon's masterly arguments upon the weeks of Daniel seem to be almost overwhelming, and beyond the power of man to successfully refute. It certainly looks like God's arrangement, and if so (and we believe it is) how near we are to the judgment and the resurrection of the dead. In view of these things we lift up our heads and rejoice.

Bro. Sheldon assisted us in a meeting at Sparta for three weeks, and the result was glorious. The truth took deep root, and as a result, fifteen have already united with the church; some of them men of ability, who are capable of spreading the light wherever they go. We feel that God is raising up standard-bearers, that will aid us greatly in our work in Ohio. Others will unite with the church at the earliest convenience.

After closing our meeting at Sparta, Bro. Sheldon came with me to Nevada, and stayed for ten days, which proved a great blessing to the church here. This church has been a unit since its organization, but recently the enemy of all righteousness made a strong effort to divide and break it up through the bringing in of "damnable heresies;" but the good Lord has overruled the matter so that our people are still of one heart and mind, and have come upon higher ground. Our meetings are the best we have had for a long time, and all seem determined to live nearer to the Lord than ever before, and let their light so shine that others may be led to glorify God.

Nevada, March 18th.

REVIVAL NOTES.

BY C. R. HURD.

The Protracted Meeting effort at Water Village, N. H., a few weeks since, resulted in a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit in that community, whereby over twenty persons, some of whom were prominent men in that vicinity, came to the decision to become followers of Christ.

At Pleasant Valley, Wolfeborough, N. H., the Quarterly Session of the New Hampshire State Conference convened recently, which was favored with a special revival interest, of which a correspondent of the News, the local paper printed in that town, speaks as follows: "The Second Advent Conference, which closed Sunday evening last, has awakened a remarkable interest in this place. No less than twenty persons, who at the commencement of these meetings were not professors of religion, have publicly manifested a desire to become Christians."

At South Hiram, Me., extra meetings held there of late have been the means which God has blest in giving a good and increased interest in religious matters in that section, and some twelve or more persons publicly acknowledge themselves benefitted by the meetings in being reclaimed or converted.

At West Newfield, Me., the cause of truth has been advanced, and the lovers of Jesus much encouraged of late by the reclaiming and conversion of a number of the unsaved ones.

WAKEFIELD, N. H.

This is comparatively a new place for the dissemination of our distinctive truths; yet since one year ago the religious "right-about-face" has been remarkable. At the beginning only one or two could be found who knew or cared much about the "blessed hope." Now we can count many who have turned from idols to serve the only living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. Recently we had the pleasure of organizing a church of ten members, with some ten or a dozen more to join in May next, or as soon as they become disconnected with other churches. Others have confessedly seen great light, yet refuse to leave the church to which they belong, and identify themselves with Adventists, evidently for fear of losing social caste and religious respectability. They are not alone. There would be a big family if they were all together. But praise the God of heaven! there are a few that dare to be loyal to their convictions, and in the integrity of their conscience, boldly confess the light and truth they have seen; and we wish the preaching brethren would give them a call when convenient. They are poor, many of them, in this world's goods, yet rich in faith, and heirs to the kingdom which God has promised to them that love him.

R. F. EMERSON.

A LITTLE WHILE.

BY FRANCES HOWARD.

Only a little longer waiting,
Till the shadows flee away;
Then, songs of praises gladly singing,
Enter the gates of day.

Only a little longer mourning,
On waves of sorrow tossed;
Then, in the beauty of the Father's mansions,
Meet with the loved and lost.

Only a little more of sorrow,
Of earthly toil and pain;
Then, when released from weary burden-bearing,
Life—for immortal gain.

Only a little longer! Pilgrim,
Canst thou not wait awhile?
Canst thou not bear earth's buffetings and turmoil,
To win the Father's smile?

Christ bore for thee far deeper insults—
He suffered much for thee;
For thee he left his home, and for him, pilgrim,
Canst thou not wait patiently?

In that "sweet home," where all is gladness,
There thou shalt win thy quest;
There thou shalt meet the loved ones gone before thee,
And enter into rest.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Sr. M. L. Durand.

Bro. Couch—Receiving a letter from a dear sister in Mass., asking whether I was laboring now in the gospel field, and if so, where and how, suggested the thought that other friends might be interested in the reply to these queries, and with your permission I will take this sort of a wholesale way of giving an account of myself during the past few months. This is a sample of my employment, as the months cluster into the year's coronet, as the cycles of time are even now wreathing around the "last days," emphatically.

We have been spending this cold winter in Connecticut, and I will give a running sketch of labor among old friends and true. I have attended one hundred and thirty meetings in eighteen different places, spoken forty-three discourses, led twenty-one social gospel meetings, given testimony either called upon or voluntarily thirty times in social meetings, attended the Prophetic Conference, one District and two State Conventions, and several of Bro. Grant's meetings in Hartford, where I trust much good fruit may appear.

During this trip with its varied labors, I am again reminded that I am not entitled to be called a prophet, as such "receive not honor among their own countrymen or kin;" for if I have ever been the recipient of any honor it has been where I have resided and was best known. Meriden is the birth-place of our two oldest children, one of whom sleeps where the little head-stone bears our name, and there we "freely spoke of the joy the gospel brings," and where we met many old and valued friends. Among them we we had a pleasant visit with the parents of Bro. Charles Harvey, who is now in Oregon. We also spoke in Bradford (the birth place of our youngest son), where we resided from 1858 to 1862, and in the M. E. Church in Cheshire, our native town, also in New Haven Co., where we were converted, and bowed around its altar at our first communion, and were "published as intending marriage," just thirty-five years before,—a novel way of celebrating the anniversary; and although a new generation has grown up, yet there were old familiar faces and hearty greetings, for we had returned and resided there the ten years preceding our removal to Saratoga Springs, eleven years ago the coming May.

I have preached ten years for the Advent Christian Church in Bridgeport, Fairfield Co., and attended their weekly prayer-meetings, though I had engagements in other places to fill during some of the weeks between the Sundays. I am pleased to speak in corroboration of the note of Bro. C. E. Messenger, in the Crisis of January, which referred to the spirit of labor in the church, and especially of the union and harmony at their annual meeting Jan. 1st—I left them Dec. 17th, having been there eight Sundays—and I can attest its truthfulness with no false coloring or flattery, as I have been there two Sundays since. Their prayer-meetings, which are the life-blood of churchly activities, are well attended every Tuesday and Thursday evening, and then the younger members had such a laboring zeal, that one, called the "Missionary prayer-meeting," to be held whenever new doors may open, was by the trustees given to be conducted by those workers (some of whom had very recently embraced the truth in the love of it), as they felt the Spirit and Word of God should teach, and no doubt it will be productive of good, to both the church and individuals; and when the Lord of the vineyard shall present the award due to faith and its resulting works, the A. C. Church of Bridgeport will find much to fill up the completeness of their joy, by seeing among the saved those with and for whom they have prayed.

I cannot close this perhaps already too long letter without saying a very little about the consummation of our "blessed hope." I need not enumerate the signs; we are seeing with our eyes, and hearing with our ears "these things," which, with all their horrible features, make us rejoice in the knowledge that our redemption draweth nigh. But the culmination of every evil the world has ever known, and the last great "shaking" once more of the earth and the heaven will, after all, be too soon for some to do all they might to pull men out of the fire, hating even the garment defiled or polluted by fleshly lusts.

Ho! ye errand doers of the King, hasten into highways and hedges, reason of "righteousness, temperance, and a judgment to come"; for soon "the night cometh wherein no man can work." Your sister in the army, waiting for orders from the King.

P. S.—All letters addressed to us at Yalesville, Conn., will be received until we go home to Saratoga Springs, N. Y., as soon as the weather melts away the snow-drifts.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Dear Bro. Couch:—Permit me to offer a few thoughts through our beloved Crisis, for the consideration of its readers, on the signs of Jesus' soon coming, which may be meat for the church due at this time.

Among the evidences which Jesus gave his disciples was this: "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke 21: 26. But in the twenty-fourth of Matthew and thirteenth of Mark, which are parallel chapters with Luke twenty-first, he brings the disciples, step by step, over the entire length of Gentile time, until its close. In Matthew he goes over the ground three times. He first closes by saying to those who will live until he comes, "He that shall endure unto the end the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness: then shall the end come." Vs. 13, 14. Here we find at the end there will be something which the church, to be saved, must endure. Here are the perils spoken of by Paul, in Timothy, 3rd chapter. This gospel of the kingdom—a definite or distinct gospel,—the truths of Christ's coming and the establishing of his kingdom on earth, are a witness to all nations, not to convert, but to witness that one is to come as king; then shall the end come. Then after referring to the abomination spoken of by Daniel, he brings us down through the tribulation on his elect (not on the infidel Jews), and then says, "If any man shall say lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not;" for signs shall be given by false teachers, such as would deceive the very elect if it were possible. Take notice, I have told you before. "If false teachers shall say unto you, He is in the desert, go not after them."

Who says this? Do not the Mormons or Latter-Day saints say he has come in their church? Or "if in the secret chambers, believe it not." Do not the New Jerusalem Church or Swedenborgians, which say he came spiritually one hundred and thirty years ago, fill this picture? and Spiritualism says he has come, as spoken of by Daniel, Matthew and Jesus. Then he gives signs in the sun, moon and stars, after the tribulation days, and then "distress of nations, with perplexity, sea and waves roaring," which doubtless refers to the tidal waves of late; then the powers of heaven shaken, and men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things coming on the earth.

Men's hearts,—not the people of God; not those who are waiting; for they are to look up; they are to rejoice when they see all these things come to pass, for by it they know their redemption draweth near. But men will be looking after things coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. The powers of heaven must be the atmospheric heavens. Paul says (Heb. 12: 28), "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." Do men begin to fear, looking after those things which are coming on the earth? May not this text be completely fulfilled in what the astronomers are now looking for as coming next year? If the passing of one planet has the effect on this earth as has been noted in the past, what may we expect when four planets shall pass the nearest point to the sun in one year? May it not truly be the fulfilling of Jesus' sayings, "The powers of heaven shall be shaken, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn." Will there not be mourning if these things come as men say they will? Will they not cry bitterly when they see the sign of the Son of man in heaven? All things bespeak the time near at hand.

Oh, brethren and sisters, be all ready, for just beyond this dark night of weeping the morn of blessedness will dawn, which never will be be-clouded by sin or death. Oh, sinner, seek a shelter from the coming storm, in Christ, and be gathered with his people.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

Bro. J. Couch:—Since I last wrote you I have been out to Primrose, Ohio, where I preached nine discourses on the great questions of Christ's coming, resurrection, restitution, kingdom of God, holiness of heart, etc., to a very attentive congregation in a church recognized as the "Church of God." The faith and hope presented to us in the sacred Scriptures is finding a home among the residents of that place. Some twenty or more have taken their stand on the side of truth, and the prospects appear very fair, with proper culture, for a strong class to be raised up who shall hold up the standard of truth in that place. Some intelligent minds have taken hold of the truth, who are doing good service for the dear Master. Dr. Flora, formerly a disciple, is a wide awake man, and capable of defending the faith and hope to good advantage. Eld. Shaneour, highly commended for his deep piety and love for truth, has already endorsed the greater part of what we confess to be truth. He heard me preach eight times, and endorsed all I said with but one exception, and that was the keen edge I set on the use of tobacco. Although he did not use it himself, but despised it, yet he thought I lay the sword of the Spirit too strongly upon some of his good brethren who did use it.

Well, let the truth of God turn its furrow through all tobacco-users' stomachs, until they can be made to realize that their bodies should be made fit temples for the Holy Ghost to dwell in. If the money that is paid out for tobacco among brethren was put into the Lord's treasury to sustain gospel instruction by ministers who are hindered for want of a competency, thousands of souls might be saved. May the gospel plow run deep in this direction, as well as in all others. Praise the Lord for sweet salvation from idol worship of any kind. A full consecration of all our powers to God, and a perfect willingness to obey him in all things, is what all need to make life a pleasure and the kingdom of God a certainty. Let us be pure, for the promise is "the pure in heart shall see God."

Reading, Mich.

From Bro. S. Woodruff.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Omens bespeak that we are nearing home. An unbelieving world heeds not the warning of God. They are passing along to the day of their doom. Spring-time is opening again. Does any one doubt it? No. None dispute it. Although the trees have not yet put forth, yet men say summer is close at hand. Oh, that men would in like manner discern what are the indications of these times, and heed the Master's warning, and get ready to meet the King in his beauty, who will be admired by all them that believe.

Dear brethren, a little while, yea, a few short weeks, and our mission tent should be in the field. Come prepared to our next Conference to act. Let us be in earnest about this matter. One brother writes me that he will volunteer. Let others consider the subject. Let the Mission Tent this summer tell for God and his truth. Time is short. What is done in the field must be done quickly. Not as a horse rushing into the battle field, but in solemnity and the fear of the Lord.

Let us try to save the lost and perishing. Who will put their shoulder to the wheel and have this work go forward? The Spirit is willing. The good Lord strengthen us for the work. Let it be done. The Lord grant us his presence. Let the work commence at Yalesville, Ct. Let it commence in our own hearts to-day, if it has not already, then we will see the work go forward when we meet at Yalesville, April 23rd, at our next Conference session. Come filled with the Spirit of the Master, then it will be well with us, great shall be our peace, and our labor will not be in vain.

From Sr. A. E. Bristol.

Dear Bro. Couch:—Thinking the brethren and sisters scattered abroad would like to hear of the work in Galesburg, I take this opportunity to say that the work began here two years ago last December. We organized a church at that time, consisting of seven members. During the next eighteen months about thirty were added. Bro. C. D. Berry commenced his labor as pastor with us July 1877, and continued until January 1879. The work has been gradually increasing until this present winter, when the Lord by his Spirit, has visited this place in great power. Sr. M. J. Janes, of Iowa, commenced a series of meetings about the first of February, and continued them nearly three weeks, without the aid of any other minister. She preached every night, attended the prayer-meeting every afternoon, and visited in families between meetings.

The Lord saw fit to send Bro. Grundy, of Hesperia, Mich., this way, to assist her in preaching the truth and exhorting those out of Christ to secure an interest in the kingdom of God. The truth was preached in love, and the Spirit sent it home to the hearts of the unconverted, and during the meeting about forty requested prayers. The most of them were middle-aged people. Fifteen have been buried by baptism into Christ's death, and we expect a number more to follow soon. Bro. Grundy will probably be our pastor for the coming year. May the Lord bless his labors. I believe he will. He is a good earnest worker in his Master's vineyard, and has much of the Holy Spirit to help him. Brethren and sisters, pray for the little church in Galesburg, that it may prosper, and that God's richest blessing may rest upon it.

Galesburg, Mich.

From Bro. J. Ridley.

Dear Brethren:—It has been some time since I have written you through the Crisis, but I have not been idle. My faith is strong in the Lord. I expect redemption in a little while. I am doing what I can to "feed the flock of God," and gather the perishing into the fold. The Lord has been graciously smiling upon us and blessing us. Bro. F. A. Baker, (under whose labors I was led out into the Lord's vineyard years ago in Maine), having settled of late not very far from us, has been with us for a few weeks, and over thirty have made a start for the kingdom. I baptized three persons last Sunday, and others will follow soon. Financially times here are hard. The wheat crop, upon which main reliance was placed, was a failure here last season, which, added to the general stringency of the times, makes money very scarce. Praise God for the hope of a home in that country where the blight and the mildew will not come.

Dear brethren, Jesus is soon coming to remove the curse and fill the earth with his glory; therefore be of good courage. "See that ye fall not out by the way." And my dear unconverted friend who may read these lines, I entreat you to give up all your sins. He is all ready to save you. Delay not, but come to him now. Before you lay this paper aside accept Jesus. The judgment impends. Come to the shelter.

Burr Oak, Iowa.

From Sr. Mary H. Tirrell.

Dear Bro. Couch:—My health is very poor. I think I am inclined to consumption. My strength is failing, but I believe that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." I desire an interest in the prayers of all those who have faith in God's promises that I may be restored to health.

STUDENT'S DIET.

A correspondent says: "The use of stimulants by students is a growing evil. I have known young ladies who felt weak, to drink strong tea between meals to brace them up. I know a young lady who is in the habit of taking quinine just before going to church for recitation, because it makes her feel brighter. And I have known instances of the opium habit being formed by students.

I am glad you are discussing this subject in your columns, and hope the discussion may do lasting good."

There is a disease known to physicians as "gastrodynia," which is frequent among the poorer classes, and is caused by the use of tea and coffee in place of nourishing food. In curing this disease the opium habit is very apt to be contracted, as opium is the agent employed in its cure. Students and all others should know that there is no substitute for wholesome, nutritious food. The stomach may seem to bear imposition with impunity, but its final resentments are terrible. For a brief time stimulation seems to produce great results, but in the long race those who avoid liquors, tobacco, tea, coffee, quinine opium and all the class of unnutritious stimulants come out top, and are physically happy all the time they are running the race.

Soda biscuit is an article that should be eschewed by all students, also greasy food, fried meats, rich pastries; fruit and the cereals, with milk, eggs, fresh meat, oysters and fish, will make them strong to study, strong to succeed, strong to enjoy.—N. Y. Tribune.

OUR HOMES.

Houses and farms, bank stocks and bonds are all good things to have, and especially when the dividends fill the capacious pocket book, and promise comfort, ease, and luxury. But it has been observed by thoughtful people that wealth is not an unfailing source of happiness; nay, it has often proved an annoyance and even a burden to life. There is something that often comes with wealth that mars the joys that should accompany it, and, before the owner is aware, it it has sapped his humanity, and he stands out soured, vain, and selfish; a being [illegible] make angels weep and devils laugh and chuckle. When the Savior of men was upon the earth he gave an impressive lesson to one who came and inquired what he should do to have eternal life. He said he had kept all the commandments from his youth up, and asked: "What lack I yet?" The answer was: "Go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor." The advice, we are assured, made the young man "sorrowful." But the further impressive words were uttered: "I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." Under such teachings, and with the experience that wealth brings many evils in its train, it seems strange that the human family should jeopardize every hope, and tire the limbs and worry the brain, and stain the hands in the eager chase for riches. The question should come to-day to these merchants on Change, the business man in his counting-room, the professional man in his wearisome study: "What am I striving for at this opening of the year 1879?" Aside from morals and religion, which we leave to the pulpits, what ideas have we formed for a year's happiness? We take it for granted that our readers agree with us that the world was made for happy men and women. Its beauty and variety and bountiful supplies of comforts and luxuries teach us the fact more forcibly than words can express it. Happy men and women are not found outside of happy homes. We pity the millionaire who smiles at the simplicity of the proposition, and equally the man who boasts in his pride that he can purchase with gold this precious commodity. It is something that gold will not buy, and any amount of wealth will not prevent a bankruptcy and its banishment from the home. If a single reader at the opening of this new year feels that his home is not the ideal place he has in the years gone cherished and anticipated, it would be well to stop and inquire the reason.

Does the tired wife, shut up in the nursery, with annoying duties of domestic life, for days, and weeks, and months, light up with a smile at your coming? Do the little ones stand at the window and peer into the gathering gloom to note your earliest approach, and make the house resound with joy when the door swings to admit you? No? Well, there is something wrong. Husband and wife might well stop and ask in all sincerity shall we "make home happy" the coming year? Wealth alone will not do it; the honors of the world and the rounds of fashionable life soon grow insipid, and we must ever turn to the home, whether palatial or humble, to find this object of life. If there were some patent method for obtaining it, or if it could be purchased, what a demand there would be. And yet when it lies at our doors, or is placed in our hands, we hesitate to pick it up and fail to grasp it. The fact is, too many are looking for great things and great events, when the sum of human happiness is almost wholly made up of the little and apparently insignificant things about us. It has been said that "familiarity breeds contempt." This can only become true between husband and wife and parents and children when the nobility of manhood and womanhood has been forgotten and laid aside, and selfishness and vulgarity have taken its honored place. If the occupants of some of the homes who have seen happiness departing during the past year, would, in turning the new leaf, remember some of the lessons they once well understood, the change would be magical.—Sel.

SIGNS OF CHRIST'S COMING

Why drag thy chariot wheels, O Time?
How slow the moving hours!
When will thy buds, O "blessed hope,"
Expand to perfect flowers?

When will the black and weary night,
So full of sins and sighs,
End, and the dawn of righteousness
Upon the world arise?

Crowns tremble 'neath his "iron rod,"
Thrones sway in every blast,
Dark shadows of events to come
Upon the world are cast!

The stately pillars of our pride,
On which we placed our trust,
Like Jonah's gourd, in one brief hour
Are levelled with the dust.

The pestilence, with fetid breath,
Comes up from slum and pen,
And stalks through hall and pauper hut
To take the lives of men.

Are these His signal flags unfurled—
His watchfires in the night—
To tell us of His near approach
Who brings the promised light?

Then lift your heads, ye w[...]ing ones!
Look upward through you[...]

"The human mind" being a part of Deity, from thence springs the doctrine found all along the ages—

"The mind immortal as the gods";

which, in a new and more subtle form, is the reproduction of Satan's first lie, "Ye shall not surely die; . . . . ye shall be as gods."

The Philosophy of the East. Following Zoroaster the Chaldean, there appeared another Zoroaster, the great Persian philosopher, who improved upon the philosophy of his predecessor. He wrote the "Zendevesta"—Zend signifying life, living; and this book was called "The Word of Life." He was the great philosopher of the Parsees, and of the whole East. His philosophy was: "The human soul is a particle of divine light, and is one of the spiritual beings proceeding in the course of emanation from the Eternal Fountain of intelligence, and which will return to its source and partake of immortality." From this it appears that "the Eternal Fountain of intelligence" is light. The human soul is a particle of this divine light, and constitutes a spiritual being, emanating from it at birth, and returning at death to its original Source, and partakes of immortality, being a part of Deity! How much a God, or "Fountain of intelligence" light is; how much of a being "a particle of light" is, is for these wise men to determine. And when "the human soul" is "returned to its Source," its independent existence must cease.

Absurd as was the Zoroastrian philosophy, it was adopted by all the Eastern nations, including vast India. The Gymnosophists of India taught: "The human soul is a particle, an emanation of that intellectual fire by which the universe is animated; and at death, being disengaged from the grosser material body, is reunited to the Fountain of all being—the Soul of the world."

Dr. Good wisely remarks: "If we turn to the oldest hypothesis of the East to the Vedas of the Brahmins, and the Zendevesta of the Parsees, we shall find a full acknowledgment of the immortality of the soul, but only upon the sublime and mystical doctrine of emanation and immanation, as a part of the great soul of the universe, issuing from it at birth, and re-sorbed into it upon the death of the body, and hence altogether incapable of individual being, or a separate state of existence."

I would call attention to the fact that Christian doctrine has been corrupted by this ancient philosophy, as will be seen by this verse from Dr. Edward Young's "Night Thoughts":

"He, the Great Father, kindled at one flame

(Concluded.)

But some man may now say that the kingdom was set up, in the sense of being established or confirmed, when Jerusalem was destroyed and the Mosaic, ritualistic service overthrown and taken out of the way; for Christ said (Matt. 24: 14) that when this gospel of the kingdom had been preached to all nations for a witness, then the end—of the Mosaic dispensation, age or world, the same man will say—should come. And Paul said, in Col. 1: 23, that "the gospel was preached to every creature under heaven" in his day; and furthermore, Christ sa[...] in Matt. 24: 34, that the then living generation of men should not pass away until all things specified by him in his discourse should be fulfilled; which is in harmony with the 14th verse and also with Paul's statement.

Verily I [...] things shall come [...] Jerusalem, Jerusa[...] left unto you desola[...] see me henceforth till [...] is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. 23: 34–39. Surely they did not use that language when the Roman general "encompassed the city with armies" and "the wrath of God came upon them to the uttermost."

Upon the application of Col. 1: 23 to Matt. 24: 14, we remark only that Paul's declaration had reference more to the universality of the gospel in its application to "every creature"—both Jew and Gentile—[...] to its extent. The word rendered "world," in Matt. 24: 14, is not oikoumene, habitable—literally, "preached in the whole habitable world"; gee, earth, implied or understood. But in Colossians the phrase is, "was preached to every creature"—ktisei. Collating Ephesians and Colossians in relation to "the mystery," any one can see at once that Paul is not saying that when he wrote the gospel had been preached to all the nations on the habitable earth; but prior to the fall of the city it had been preached to every class of men irrespective of birth, position or nationality, and does not constitute a fulfillment of Matt. 24: 14 at all.

Of "this generation" (v. 34) W. C. Boon in "Prophetic Key," vol. 1, p. 513, says: "I have scrutinized the most essential part of every proposition—the predicate. In this sentence the principal predicate is modified by the subordinate one, heos an genetai, in Matt. and Luke, and mechris hou genetai in Mark. The participles heos and mechris—"until"—never send their force through the period of time embraced in the predicate, but stop near the beginning of it—"The law and the prophets were until [heos] John." Achri would mean till the end of John's ministry. The verb also—genetai—from ginomai, etymologically and historically, always implies a beginning, never an ending. It is used about 675 times in the New Testament, and at only one other place did our translators make it express the very opposite of its radical and essentially inherent sense, by rendering its present participle thus: "Being ended" (John 13: 2), that word achri throwing its force through the time embraced in the predicate, together with a verb (pleroo) that does both imply, express and assert an ending, but not a beginning, may be found in Luke 21: 24—"Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." If plerothosi means "be fulfilled"—i. e., finished, ended—at this place, how came genetai to be used in the verses (Matt. 24: 34; Mark 13: 30, and Luke 21: 32) under consideration to mean the same thing?

Again, genetai is aorist, past tense. Surely Jesus said, "This now living generation shall not pass away till the fulfillment of all these things in this prophecy has begun." (The quotation is Boon's.) John G. Wilson, editor of Prophetic Times, in Dec. number, 1878, page 288, on the same subject says: "The 34th verse simply states that the generation then existing should not pass away till all these things—this whole course of predicted events—should begin to be, or begin to come to pass, as the verb is rendered elsewhere, and is indeed its primary meaning. It was only the beginning of that course of predicted events which that generation were to see." That is common sense and historic fact.

We must notice one other passage before [...]sing this chapter, recorded in L[...] 17: [...] kingdom [...]od is [...] [...] recently characterized as "children of the devil." Righteousness, peace and joy by the Holy Spirit do enter into the hearts of men, but men do not enter into these elements of the kingdom, nor does the church enter into men's hearts, but men are to "seek . . . . the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and men are to take, possess and enter into the kingdom.

That the Pharisees were expecting God's kingdo[...] and more than looking for its [...] to con[...] their day, is an unquest[...] undeniable fact; but with all their a[...]uteness they discerned not "the King among them." The Diaglott translation reads, "God's Royal Majesty is among you." In a foot-note, the translator says: "Basileia here refers to the person to whom the title and honor of king belonged, rather than to his territory or kingdom." Prof. Whiting, an able Hebrew and Greek scholar, says this clause ought to be rendered, "The King is among you." Dr. A. Clarke, in a note on the 21st verse, evidently understood it as relating to the Christ. He says: "Perhaps those Pharisees thought that Messiah was kept secret, in some private place, known only to some of their rulers; and that by and by he should be proclaimed in a similar way to that in which Joash was by Jehoiada the priest. (See 2 Chron. 23: 1–11.) Now Christ turns from the Pharisees and says to the disciples, 'Days will come when you will desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and you will not see it.' Here (in v. 22) 'days of the Son of man' mean the same as they do in verse 26—'as it was in the days of Noah, so will it be also in the days of the Son of man'; and both of these refer to the same time indicated in verse 30—'in the day when the Son of man is revealed'; all of which synchronizes with 'his times' in 1 Tim. 6: 15, and carry us forward to 2 Tim. 4: 1, when 'the Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom.'" This fully answers the question in Luke 17: 20, relating to the time when the King shall come.

2. In the shining realms of bliss
We shall see Him as He is,
And the fair sunny fields and verdant vallies roam;
Where the living waters flow,
Pain and death no more to know—
O how sweet to rest with dear ones safe at home.—Chorus.

3. O, how glad that happy day!
When we hear the Saviour say,
Hail! ye ever-blessed of my Father, come;
From your toils now have release,
Enter into joy and peace,
Sweetly resting with the dear ones safe at home.

LUKE 10: 18.

BY J. P. MARQUAND.

"I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven."

Our text says that Satan or the devil fell from heaven. It is certain then[...] he no longer has any place in heaven [...] God, Christ, and holy angels reside. Where did he fall to? We are told in the 12th chap. of Rev. that he and his angels were cast out into the earth. "Woe to the inhabiters of earth, for he is come down unto you having great wrath, knowing that his time is short." His career among men has been one of trial, sin, sorrow, pain and death. But turn to the 20th chap. of Rev., and there we find his destiny. He is cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are; and in the 15th verse of the same chapter we read that "whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 21: 8, gives a description of those characters, who go to that place.

Is it not better to turn away from sin? It is the cause of all our wo[...]. Satan was a liar and murderer from the be[...]ning, and abode not in the truth. Christ calls him "the wicked one;" the apostle John calls [...] "the accuser of the bret[...]en;" and [...] says "God will bruise him under our [...]ortly," and also says, "Resist the [...] he will flee from you."

[...]atifying thought that Christ, by [...] sufferings, death, and inter[...] [...]stroy him that has "the [...] and that this world will [...] Christ will reign [...] death will [...] the commandments of God and looking for his mercy unto eternal life. Let us strive to enter in at the strait gate, even if it takes away all our earthly joys and props. Let us obey and follow Christ, and overcome the world, the flesh and the devil. It is not pleasant to pass through severe trials, temptations and chastisements, but rather grievous; but "afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness." It is not pleasant to pass through persecution, and be neglected by others, and suffer reproach, and be accused wrongfully; but if we exercise patience and forbearance, God will open to us a door of escape, and fill our hearts with sweet love and tenderness. David said, "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Ps. 37: 25.

We are certain that evil has only a transient existence. God has decreed its overthrow and extinction. Satan and all his hosts will be overthrown, even as Pharaoh was cut down and destroyed, and "the Lord shall triumph gloriously."

HOLINESS; OR, ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION.

EXPLANATION OF SEVERAL SCRIPTURE PASSAGES BROUGHT AGAINST THE DOCTRINE.

BY SILAS HENN.

The well known and often quoted words of Paul, in Rom. 7, beginning with, "But I am carnal, sold under sin," and ending with, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" are considered sufficient to overturn this doctrine. But when the apostle uttered these words, he was not describing his own state, as a believer and an apostle, but the state of one who was under the law. There is abundant evidence that they do not refer to his spiritual state after he became a Christian. He was not a wretched man after that change took place. Such despairing expressions are totally inconsistent with the condition and experience of one who is regenerated by divine grace, and believes in Christ as mighty to save.

The believer is not dead, in the sense that the term death is here used; he has been quickened to a divine life, he has already realized the blessed deliverance. Paul's description of the soul's weak and fruitless strivings, "For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I [...] the unreprieved [...]able to himself [...] he was seeking salvation by the observance of the law. He was more zealous than most around him in obeying the commandments of Moses: he was exceedingly upright, sincere, and was earnest in conforming to, and contending for, the traditions of his fathers, but all this failed to remove the secret uneasiness of his soul. But as a believer in Jesus Christ, he found through him the blessed freedom from bondage which he sought in vain through obedience to the Jewish law.

Speaking of the 7th chapter of Romans, Dr. Steele says it "was never designed to be the ideal Christian life, but is rather the portrayal of the struggles of a convicted sinner, seeking justification by the works of the law."

With an air of satisfaction and triumph, as if it were an excuse for yielding to temptation, the following text is often quoted to prove that sin exists consciously in all believers. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." 1 John 1: 8. Evidently it was not the intention of John to teach this doctrine. The apostle plainly refers to past sin, though the present tense is used. This was a usage not uncommon with the Scripture writers. A number of instances might be advanced in which the present tense is employed when past things are intended to be understood. The apostle Paul, in 1 Tim. 1: 15, uses the present tense where the past was evidently meant. "Christ Jesus," says he, "came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." When Paul uttered these words, he was living a holy, blameless life, and was not, in any sense of the word, the chief of sinners. Indeed, he was not then a sinner at all, in the Scriptural sense of that word, for he had become a saint. He simply meant to say that he was once the chief, the greatest of sinners.

But further: the admonition in this text was not designed for Christians who, through faith, had been cleansed from all sin, but for those who were only partially sanctified, or whom John calls "little children," and who were in peculiar danger of being deceived and led away by certain seducers, who rejected Christ, and denied that they had sinned. Such were many of the Jews; and through this and the following chapters the truth of God is defended in opposition to their false theories. Though Christ came to them, they received him not; they did not receive him as the Messiah, and therefore did not believe in his blood as an atonement for sin; and rejecting his atonement, they denied their need of it by saying that they had not sinned. It was against this error that the apostle John directs this warning, and it was intended specially for babes in Christ, or weak believers, who were so liable to be led away by those false teachers. Believers who had obtained, not only forgiveness, but cleansing and purification, were in less danger than others of ever denying the fact that they had sinned. Let any one read through this epistle, and judge candidly of the scope and drift of the whole, and he will perceive this to be the design of the writer in the verse and the context under consideration.

It does not follow that because the apostle used the personal pronoun "we," he in[...] [...] himself and all his fellow-believers, [...]nced,—the pure in heart. [...] in speaking of the [...] bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God." James 3: 9. No one surely will affirm that James intended to be understood as saying that himself and his fellow-apostles and disciples employed their tongues in cursing as well as blessing. By the use of this word he doubtless meant men generally. There are other instances in which the sacred writers use the personal pronoun "we," when they meant mankind, or men in general.

But we would call your attention to the 6th and 9th verses of the third chapter of this epistle, where he says, "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." Now here is evidence sufficiently clear that the explanation so often given to the passage under our notice is not the true one. If the common were the true explanation, then the apostle plainly contradicts himself in these words. He also speaks of God dwelling in us, and we dwelling in him, and his love being perfected in us, all of which expressions are inconsistent with the passage in question, if understood in the sense which so many put upon it.

In this same epistle, the apostle declares that "he that committeth sin is of the devil." But if those theologians are entirely right who interpret 1 John 1: 8, as teaching that sin dwells in all Christians, and therefore that all Christians sin daily, it follows that all Christians, as well as others, are of the devil."

The apostle Paul says, "I serve God with a pure conscience." But if his conscience was pure, there were no sin spots upon it. He also says, "I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offence, both toward God and toward man." But if his conscience was void of offence, it could not be conscious of sin. Now if we are to accept the common explanation of 1 John 1: 8, we must consider that Paul was self-deceived, and that the truth was not in him.

The words of James also are sometimes urged against this doctrine. "For in many things we offend all." James 3: 2. The word "we" in this passage refers to mankind at large, and not to the apostle himself and his fellow-apostles; for he adds, "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, which shows the possibility of not offending, and the possibility of becoming perfect.

Some passages in the Old Testament are thought to contain conclusive evidence against our view of entire sanctification. 1 Kings 8: 46, is one. "If they sin against thee (for there is no man that sinneth not"). The first part of this passage indicates how the last part should read. If their sinning was a necessity, an absolute certainty, why use the words, "If they sin against thee"? Now if the last part of the passage is rendered, "For there is no man that may not sin," it gives consistency and force to the first part. And with this rendering there is nothing that gives the least possible support to the notion that Christians cannot live without sin. And any one reading, with a sincere view to know the truth, the fifteen verses preceding the one just quoted, will perceive that that is the sense intended by Solomon.

Job 9: 20, is another of those passages: "If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me: if I say, I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse." This confession was Job's, and at the time he made it, it was suitable to him, but it would not have been suitable to him at every period of his life; for at one period Jehovah said of him that he was "a perfect and an upright man." Job 1: 8. The patriarch had been reviewing his life, and conscious of his past sins, he felt that he could not justify himself before the Lord. But what proof can be found in this confession that believers may not be pure in heart? To found such an argument on Job's words is an outrage on all sound principles of biblical exposition. Christians live under a very different economy to that under which patriarchs and prophets lived. Even if it was impracticable for the saints under the old dispensation to live without sin, which we do not admit, it would not prove that believers under the gospel dispensation must necessarily sin. Our light and our privileges are much greater than theirs.

HOW THE GENTILE WORLD IS SAVED.

BY J. S. CLARK.

The twelve and seventy disciples were sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; consequently their labors were confined to the Jewish people, according to the commission in Matt. 10: 1–15. And except another commission had subsequently been given, we do not see how the Gentile world could have been reached by the gospel of Christ. We believe Christ himself was governed by the restrictions of this same commission. See Matt. 25: 21–28. He could not offer to the Gentile world the kingdom of God.

The Gentiles are said to be "aliens f[...] the commonwealth of Israel, and st[...] to the covenant of promise, [...] hope, and without God in [...] Question: How can the Ger[...] Answer: "But now in Chri[...] were sometimes far off, are [...] blood of Christ." Eph. 2[...] fore the Gentiles are m[...] blood of Christ. We follow the S[...] Mount of Olives, [...] instructions co[...] the Garden [...] the cross, death and the tomb; and now, if death has power to hold him down, a Gentile world is lost (and in fact all men). But the third day he burst the bands of death, and triumphed over death and hell. Subsequently, when about to leave his disciples to go away into heaven, he gave them and the church of all ages a new commission, recorded in Matt. 28: 19. In Luke 24, he expressly states that it behooved him to die, and rise again the third day, that repentance and remission of sins might be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

After this commission was given, the disciples did not again preach the kingdom of God at hand, only presenting the signs of the last days. And Paul said the Man of Sin must first arise—before the coming of the kingdom of God. But from the giving of this last commission, the Gentile world, together with the Jews, are only saved by the blood of the crucified Redeemer. Hence Christ becomes the Savior of all men. "Whosoever will may come."

FOREWARNING.

The prophet Jeremiah was sent by the Lord to warn the people of what was coming upon them for their wickedness and idolatry, and though at first he said, "I cannot speak," for I am a child," yet the Lord promised to be with him, and put his words in his mouth. And when he understood the terrible judgments that were coming upon the city of Jerusalem and the people of Judah, he felt that he could not hold his peace. And although they would not believe him, but derided and insulted him, and mocked at his prayers and exhortations, so that at one time he said he would no more speak the word of [...] Lord to them, yet even then he could [...] [...]ear, for it was like burning fire [...] [...] his bones. If the watchman see the sword coming and warn not the people, and any be taken away in their iniquity, their blood will be required at the watchman's hand. Ezek. 33: 6. Can any of the watchmen whom the Lord has called to speak his Word, hold their peace now, and refrain from warning the people that a far more terrible day of destruction and desolation is coming upon the earth, than that which came upon Jerusalem? and that there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time, and that even now the evil is going forth, the whirlwind has begun to blow? The uprising of the laboring classes, and the banding together of the rich, is producing such a state of affairs, as will no doubt be one of the means of gathering the nations for the last great battle. Neither of these classes have sought the Lord nor inquired for him, and neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath, for he shall make a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land. Zeph. 1: 6, 18. But though "destruction upon destruction" is cried, and "the whole land shall be desolate," "for the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity," and "the heavens and the earth shall shake," yet "the Lord will be the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel." And all whose names are found written in the book shall be delivered.

The sound of the trumpet has been heard, and the nations are preparing for war. The great men of the earth are perplexed, and their hearts are failing them for fear. It is a day of distress and gloominess to many, as they look at what is coming upon the earth. And yet, is it not true that many who profess to be teachers of the Word of the Lord, are saying as they did in Jeremiah's day, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace"? telling the people that the world is growing better, and will be converted by the preaching of the gospel? that no such day of destruction and desolation is at hand, but that the swords shall be beaten into plowshares, and the spears into pruning-hooks, and the nations shall learn war no more? COMMU[illegible]

In a[illegible] entitled [illegible]ed to show that e[illegible] "Reign of Terror" in Fra[illegible]ented in the prophecies as foreshado[illegible]g the events connected with "the battle of God Almighty." Sickness prevented our continuing those articles to the close of the subject, and we will now present a few additional ideas and facts relating to it.

If the spirits producing certain results in the kingdom represented by "frogs" were "like" those, in character and work, which shall operate in the kingdoms represented by the "dragon," "beast" and "false prophet" to produce the last battle, the clash of arms in the two cases must resemble each other in the character of the agencies producing them, and of the antagonistic classes engaged. The classes engaged in the revolution in France were openly and definitely known as Atheists, Communists, and all the poorer laboring classes on one side, and on the other side were the rulers, the church and the capitalists. These parties were drawn into open war, (1) by opposing arguments, (2) by oppressive enactments, (3) by legal executions and banishments, (4) by secret executions ordered by secret committees.

These items of experience were carried so far that the parties became so exasperated with each other that, when the hour came, fixed by the revolutionists, to commence the open battle, the laboring classes, servants of the rich, the priests and the rulers, rushed like demons into their houses, stores, banking-houses, sanctuaries, judicial and legislative halls, and into the august chambers of royalty itself; and with unparalleled violence brought out the king and his family, judges, legislators, priests, bankers, merchants and landlords, shedding their blood with the ferocity of tigers, without jury, by guillotine, firearms, knives, axes, pitchforks, —anything and everything by which their pent-up revenges could be executed upon their enemies. As the prophet said, "Every man's sword was against his brother."

In this horrible way, about three millions of the frog kingdom were crowded through the gates of death, and in their bloody shrouds laid in inglorious graves.

By the bloody wave of this revolution the government, church, the titled and rich nobility were swept away, leaving not a branch or root of their former power and glory.

If the spirits which produced such classes and elements of war in France are destined to simultaneously produce like classes, antagonisms and revolutions in all the kingdoms of the world; and if such a war is to be the battle of God Almighty, the manifestation and combination of such strange and uncommon events must be very clear signs and strong proof that such a battle is approaching.

The momentous question now is, Are there at the present time such influences among all nations, producing such conditions? and does one of these classes thr[illegible] general revolution by assassination a[illegible] war of States, churches, and aris[illegible] castes as was manifested in France [illegible]ious to the commencement of t[illegible] of Terror"? We fearlessly answ[illegible] state of social life, wonderfully [illegible] that in France, does now exist in [illegible] world. Communism has spread itself [illegible] a few years over all the continents, [illegible] among all tribes and nations, regardless [illegible] their former political or religious status, d[illegible]veloping a numerous class, whose centra[illegible] idea and controlling purpose has been to obliterate all social castes in the civil, religious and financial departments, thus bringing all men upon a common grade. T[illegible] would elevate the lower and bring down [illegible] higher.

Understand this, therefore, it is [illegible]

[illegible]d elevate [illegible]tion; and [illegible]er classes, [illegible]olution but a [illegible]em superior-[illegible]l their power [illegible] [illegible]unism would natu-[illegible]n expression of dis-[illegible] acts and positions of [illegible]ch, and cause the demand [illegible] the power and wealth by [illegible]empowered to exercise lord-[illegible] and cruel tyranny over the poorer laboring classes. It produces a restless, dissatisfied, revolutionizing element, which finds a productive soil in all who feel the gnawing of poverty, the shackles of oppression, and the sting of tyranny. Who is so blind as not to see that this element has especially within the last few years, become the ruling power of all the lower grades of humanity in all parts of the world?

This spirit has been rolling the revolutionary ball in China, where civilization has not seen the bloody fields in which it is estimated that thirty millions, within the last half century, have been buried in bloody shrouds. It is said that those revolutionary orientals have taken up arms against their ancient government, under the conviction that the gods had decreed that the old regime of social life must immediately end by limitation, and a new order be established in the hands of a "coming man."

In Japan the same restless spirit is manifested, demanding a leaving of the old order of society, and the adoption of something new. Under the action of this same mysterious power, rebellion in the empire has for a number of years existed, producing large armies, which have stained their garments in the blood of many thousands of their brethren. The Prince Imperial has been slain near his royal home, and the imperial palace burned by the torch of the revolutionists.

In India the same clamoring spirit is breathed by more than a hundred millions of the lower grades of the people, who protest against financial oppression, being taxed almost beyond endurance, to support a class of extravagantly salaried rulers and a large army to compel their involuntary submission.

He who reads the present page of Asiatic history cannot fail to see that a dark cloud now hangs over every part of Asia, the birth-place and cradle of our race, threatening a speedy and bloody revolution.

Crossing the Hellespont from the east, we look upon the prophetic Roman Continent—Europe—and hear but little from the multitudinous classes and perplexed nations but jarring, discordant mutterings of discontent. The laboring classes of oppressed servants in every nation are combining and preparing to resist unto the bitter end the governments of Church and State, with all the aristocracy who join in the confederacy against them. This we understand to be in harmony with the sacred prophecies.

Passing the straits of Gibraltar into Africa, we catch the sound of half suppressed threatenings of revenge upon the men of might and wealth who have robbed the toiling millions of the reward of their sweat and the freedom to which their birth had given them a title. From Egypt to the Zululands this same spirit is manifesting itself in some form, and threatens a fearful and bloody conflict.

Taking the trackless path of Columbus across the Atlantic, and running the eye over the Western Continents, we see the red flag unrolling in all the countries and states, exhibiting the Galican mottoes, "down with the rulers;" "down with the priests;" "down with the nobility." The cry of the laborers against the employers, and the capitalists against their servants is sounding louder and louder everywhere in the cities, on the mountains and in the valleys; from the statesman and plowman; from the millionaire and the beggar; each calling for confederation and a preparation for sanguinary conflict.

These communistic developments, with their present specific principles, arrangements and purposes, are less than a hundred years old, and had their birth in France, and are to-day permeating the society of all kingdoms, churches and peoples of our excited world. Wonderful fulfillment of God's unfailing Word.

THE GOVERNMENT OF GRACE.

The stronger our human passions, the more efficient they are to do work for God, when they are put under the control of God's grace, and the more capable of committing grievous sins. If a man has an impulsive, daring, pesistent nature, with strong emotions, powerful will, and fearless in danger, independent of friends or foes in his purpose, he will, under the control of the flesh and Satan, be a great sinner, a disturber of the peace, and often a terror to the State. But when those strong elements of humanity are put fully under the controlling power of grace, they lose none of their natural forces, but are turned in another channel, to do more noble work. Such persons are constituted to do more good or evil than those who have less vital force, or those more tame and passive, with a weaker will and less courage.

A man who would be a fearless soldier in the heat of battle, or a dauntless sailor in a terrific storm, would be unblushing in the defense of unpopular truth, or a courageous missionary among the heathen if controlled by grace. A man who would enlist his whole soul and devote his time and means to defend his political creed, and to give victory to his political party when controlled [illegible] unsanctified nature, would, when truly [illegible] do the same things for his relig-[illegible] the church of Christ.

[illegible]son is truly regenerated, his [illegible]wers and propensities are [illegible]but energized by another [illegible] other principles, seeking [illegible]d are governed by the [illegible]d. If a man's strong-[illegible]eneration is to seek [illegible]ll be the strongest [illegible], only it will be [illegible] of earthly honor to [illegible]strongest constitu-[illegible]late earthly treas-[illegible]ll continue after [illegible]make most prom-[illegible]ions a posses-[illegible] God. [illegible]tifies and uses in the service of Christ the constitutional forces and elements of our natures given us by God. THE COVENANT OF LOVE.

We enjoyed the privilege of legalizing the holy matrimonial covenant between Elder Frank E. Blaisdell, of Belgrade, Me., and Sr. Mary A. Hodgdon, of Moultonborough, N. H., at our home in Haverhill, Mass., May 14th, 1879. May pure love, Christian fidelity and loyalty to Christ bring to them true happiness and a glorious hereafter.

PRACTICAL EXEGESIS.

E. A. S.

2d Timothy, 4th Chapter.

"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine."

"The Word." The literal text of the gospel, precisely as the Holy Ghost has expressed it. Not philosophy, reason or nature—save by way of illustration. The Word is sovereign and final authority in itself. It is God's statutory revelation to man. It admits of no emendation or revision. It contains all the essential and related elements of the redemptive scheme. It is the media of power, peace and unity; the unalterable standard of righteousness and judgment. Its modes of expression are amply various, abounding in the tender, the beautiful, the grand, the terrific; a limitless field of argument and appeal. One versed in its letter and endued with its power, is thoroughly furnished for every good work. To be an able minister of the Word is the loftiest calling of men or seraphs.

"Be instant in season, out of season. Be urgent, whether the times be prosperous or adverse, whenever there is an opportunity; and when there is none, strive to make one. The Judge is at the door; and to every man eternity is at hand! Wherever thou meetest a sinner, speak to him the word of reconciliation. Do not be contented with stated times and accustomed places merely; all time and place belong to God, and are proper for his work. Wherever it can be done, there it should be done. Satan will omit neither time nor place where he can destroy. Omit thou none where thou mayest be the instrument of salvation to any."—Adam Clarke.

It is God's message, and takes precedence of all human and earthly things. It has the right of audience everywhere.

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine"—wholesome teaching. Paul foresaw a period of doctrinal apostacy, when needed truth would be disrelished and rejected, even by the church. And following their own carnal desires, they would wrest the prerogative of furnishing teachers out of God's hands, and heap to themselves teachers who, like themselves, would have "itching ears;" and thus assuming control of the ministry of the Word, they would pervert the functions of the holy calling, degrading it to a mere profession. We are now living in the realization of the apostle's painful foresight.

"Watch thou." M[illegible] the rise and growth of aposta[illegible] teachers an[illegible] teaching, and make the "Word" resound i[illegible] all its primal authority and power, in the ears of the degenerate church and her self-constituted, time-serving ministry.

"Endure afflictions." Whatever sacrifices, sufferings, persecutions may come in consequence of fidelity to the Word, cheerfully endure, and devote thyself heroically to the proper work of an evangelist, giving full proof of, or fulfilling thy ministry. Solemn, glorious, inspiring charge! Pronounced by lips always eloquent for the faith, but soon to be silenced by a tragical death. These words of power vibrate through the centuries, and fire, even to boldness, many a faltering tongue amid the driveling cowardice of these temporizing times. Young men, light your torches where Paul lighted his; draw your power whence he drew his.

NIHILISM.

The Nihilists in Russia are tremendously in earnest. Dark clouds hang over the Czar and his associates. The state of things in Russia is truly a reign of terror. The lives of the great men in office hang on a very uncertain thread. Their hand of oppression has been exceedingly cruel upon those who have dared to differ from those in authority, until the burdens were so heavy that there was in many cases but little choice between them and death. In this extremity, the Nihilist party arose to introduce a reform in the government, making it more like what we have in the United States. This movement alarmed the Emperor Alexander II., who has introduced very severe measures to crush out Nihilism, but his oppressive course has only served to spread what he is endeavoring to destroy, because he is only increasing the causes that first led to the formation of the Nihilist party. This association is made up of "educated and refined persons, merchants and army officers, who have been jumped repeatedly by having younger men, both in rank and age, promoted over their heads." It is said "there is not a village in Russia where a Nihilist circle does not exist; and if one is discovered and suppressed, two fresh ones take its place." The army is known to be "thoroughly impregnated with Nihilism;" and when it is fully in favor, they intend to make a grand strike, and institute a republican government.

The Nihilist association began its work in 1873, at St. Petersburg. Nicholas Tchikoetsi, a university student, was the leader. It is said that about all but the office holding class sympathize with the Nihilists. Says the National Journal: "The present situation of Russia may be likened to a volcano on the top of which is the Czar with his government, and the Nihilists are prepared to turn any accident to their favor." "The situation is critical, and there may be an outbreak at any moment." "The Russian Government does not rely upon the fidelity of its army. It has found by recent events that it cannot do so; and we have news that Russia has begun secret diplomatic negotiations, the purpose of which is to obtain help from Germany, in case of its own military power breaking down." "The Russian Government never was weaker than it is now. It cannot stop the spread of revolutionary ideas by the [illegible] established by the Govern[illegible] therefore, it resorts t[illegible] despotic measure[illegible] helplessness. The Government is aware that it cannot rely upon the nobility, or the clergy, or the merchants, or the army, and least of all upon the peasants. All those may at any moment give way and turn against it."

Some very prominent citizens have been arrested and put in prison for their sympathy with the Nihilists. Among these may be named the Princess Demidoff, the daughter of Maizen, a millionaire iron manufacturer, who employes twenty thousand workmen, and others who are members of the most prominent and aristocratic families.

The following from the National Journal, will give some idea of the manner of treating the Nihilist prisoners:

"The prisoners are kept in small, damp, dark cells, in solitary and silent confinement. A prisoner has no chance to speak to any body, cannot even see anybody, cannot get out even a moment for air. His dismal cell is his whole world. For the smallest provocation, if you should speak a word to the soldier always at the door, you are liable to be put into the worst cells, which are mere stone coffins, where you cannot move about and cannot rest in any position, and which are specially provided with insects that torture you. Multitudes of people, thousands and tens of thousands, especially of the educated classes, are being arrested in St. Petersburg, Moscow, and all other parts of the Russian empire, and imprisoned without even a shadow of trial."

It should be remembered that the religion of Russia is the Greek Catholic, and that the Czar holds about the same relation to the church as does the Pope to the Roman Catholic. The two are really the same system of religion, and the divine prophecy of the Bible very clearly indicates that the end of these anti-Christian powers is near at hand. Great events are rapidly approaching.

GEOLOGICAL SPECULATIONS.

A few years since, quite a stir was made among geologists over a human skull found by some workmen, who were sinking a shaft in Calaveras Co., California. The skull was discovered one hundred and fifty feet below the surface of the earth. Prof. J. D. Whitney, chairman of the Cambridge Scientific School, claimed that this skull belonged to a man who lived before the existence of the Sierra Nevada mountains; before the era of the glaciers; before the canons [pronounced canyons] existed, and when the rivers were running on the tops of the mountains. It is claimed that this man lived ages before the days of Adam, and that he is "the oldest known human being."

It should be remembered that geologists have taught that during the glacial or ice period, man could not exist; and this man, found in California, is said to have lived before the assumed ice period. If none could live during the time when ice prevailed, the question naturally arises, How did his posterity get over this side of the ice period? If the geological assumptions are correct, then that skull must have belonged to another race, and the present order of human beings has no connection with that one. This does not give much help to the development theory of Darwin and others. Some geologists seem to be in a very [illegible]le in their efforts [illegible] the Mosaic acc[illegible]ation.

It has been shown that the skull found very much resembles that of an "ordinary Indian." It is a well-known fact that many violent changes have taken place on the Pacific coast, some of which are certainly of recent date, and such as might have placed that skull one hundred and fifty feet under ground in less time than that required to write this article.

Some years since, a piece of pottery was found in the region of the river Nile, so deeply buried that geologists said it must have been underground fifteen thousand years, in order to have the strata formed above it. But afterwards there were certain marks and emblems found upon it, which showed it was not made till about B C. 200. A single freshet, earthquake, or sinking of the ground, may place an object many feet below the surface of the earth.

In Florida, a few days ago, a portion of land, forty feet in diameter, having a pine tree on it seventy feet high, sunk so deep that the top of the tree is now several feet below the surface of the ground. If the Indian skull, or piece of pottery, had happened to have been on this sunken piece of land, and some one, when making a deep excavation, should happen to find the skull, or pottery, no doubt some geologists would claim that the skull, or pottery, must have been deposited there for many thousands of years, or it would not have been so many feet under ground. No one need to fear that any geological fact will ever be found to contradict the account of creation given by Moses.

"A CRISIS."

Joseph T. Duryea, D. D., from Brooklyn, N. Y., has recently become the pastor of the Central Congregational church in Boston. Last Tuesday, May 20th, the clergymen of Boston, and several prominent laymen, met by invitation in the parlors of the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, for the purpose of giving a welcome to Dr. Duryea. In his speech on the occasion, he is reported as saying:

"A crisis of some sort or other was impending in nearly every country of the world; the foundations of society were being strained, and, to make the darkness more profound, the foundations of faith were being broken up. One of the most significant signs of this universal weariness was the rush for light amusements. When one had a mighty joy in his heart he didn't need to hire actors and harlequins to make merriment for him. (Applause.)

People were rushing for 'Pinafore,' not because they were glad, but because they were sad. The grandest privilege ever given a man was to stand forth as a son of consolation among his brothers and sisters. It was time for ministers to get out of their metaphysics and preach concrete facts about Jesus; and this gladly, so that the tidings should ring in men's hearts and make them glad. (Applause.) He would rather [illegible] preacher now than at any time in the [illegible] history."

Facts compel observing men to [illegible] these are strange times, and t[illegible] change is very much neede[illegible] becoming satisfied [illegible] kind must [illegible]

[illegible]

Scenes [illegible]

"And then shall appear [illegible] of [illegible] in heaven."

This will be the last precursor of the personal advent. In the midst of the perilous times, just when it becomes intolerable for saints to remain on earth, and the church begins to cry from agony of heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," the final signal will suddenly appear.

What the "sign of the Son of man" will be no mortal can tell; it is not revealed; and where God is silent let not man presume to speak. Many conjectures have been formed, but they are only conjectures, and therefore without value. That the fateful signal will not be a sound, as the blast of a great trumpet, or the voice of thunderings, like the thunderings of Sinai, is determined by the word "appear"—phaino, to shine, to be seen. It will be a visible ensign of the personal appearing of the Lord; as visible as the pillar of fire, or the bow in the heavens; more than this, as to its nature, is not plain.

But the effect of that awful omen is clearly stated: "And then shall all the tribes of the earth wail." Like the advent itself, it will be visible to all on earth. Every soul will see it, and instantly know its dreadful meaning; and in all unsaved hearts hope will die forever.

Why all tribes lament? The text says, "because of him." But he lives now, and is proclaimed in all the world, yet the "tribes" mourn not, heed not, care not. No terror seizes the peoples now at the mention of his name. His sign now is the cross, streaming with blood, pointing towards pardon, breathing mercy, offering peace. But the "sign in heaven"—in the sky—will signal the hour of change; the dispensation ended; intercession finished; probation done; the long day of mercy closed,—forever closed; the general doom begun; the era of judgment set in. "Shall wail because of him." He comes as judge; as the avenger; as the destroyer of his enemies and the despisers of his people. He comes to avenge his rejected gospel, his slighted grace, his crucified prophets and martyrs, his own holy name, blasphemed.

All now is changed; and the "tribes of earth" know well the day of doom is come at last. No prayer for mercy is offered; no plea for pardon put in; no appeal to divine clemency now, but lamentation, only lamentation. Despair, sullen, rayless, endless despair now settles like a black pall on all the guilty world.

What a scene when "the sign of the Son of man" shall appear in the sky! What anguish; what useless regrets; what haunting memories; what criminations and recriminations; what heart-breaking farewells; what sorrowful glances toward the heavenly home of the just—now lost forever, madly flung away for the baubles of a momentary sinful pleasure!

The universal wailing will not be softened by one note of holy song, one breath of solace, one kindly word or look of cheer. Over all the earth, from shore to shore, one mighty volume of unbroken sorrow will roll and surge—a boundless sea of lamentation. So opens the great assize.

THE GREAT EARTHQUAKE.

The tremendous convulsion that ruined Lisbon, a city of 250,000 souls, in 1755, will never cease to be a matter of wonder, all the more so from its vast extent and the belief by many that it marked the opening of the sixth seal. Rev. 6: 12. It shook more earth and sea surface than any other earthquake on record. I take this account of it from "Voyages to Spain, Portugal, etc., by Francis Collins." He writes:

D. T. T.

"The awfully tremendous earthquake which happened here in November, 1755, appears to have in a measure turned Lisbon upside down. The vestiges of this dreadful catastrophe present to the eye of the beholder ruins of the first magnitude, which, when considered in connection with the number of inhabitants which perished in this convulsion of nature, must solemnize the powers, and arrest the attention of every reflecting mind.

The morning of the 1st of November ushered in this dreadful day; it made its first appearance with remarkable and unusual serenity and calmness. About ten o'clock the awful visitation began, with a rumbling noise resembling distant thunder; and at the same time the earth received a shock. In a moment the city and its vicinity exhibited a scene of consternation and terror; the astonished and affrighted inhabitants running here and there for safety, without the shadow of a retreat, from the devouring element; while some were riveted to the spot among the gaping and closing chasms; others were swallowed up; many of the wretched survivors, in distraction and despair, were petrified with terror, and before recollection returned to endeavor a retreat, the earth opened and closed them in.

The large quay to which numbers had resorted, and fled for refuge, was but an illusive hope of very short duration, for here the sea also combined with the convulsions of the earth, and by encroaching in a rapid manner on its ancient boundaries, overwhelmed the whole of these survivors, who perished in the vortex. Where this quay then stood, the resort and retreat of busy multitudes, is now water, enough for ships to anchor. Forty thousand persons are computed to have perished in this dreadful calamity.

What a fund for reflection is here, when it is considered even with common attention. Here we contemplate forty thousand of our fellow mortals quickly enveloped in one common calamity, without a moment for cool reflection, hurried to 'that bourne from whence no traveler returns.' Here we behold all that the delusive world is prone to call good and great; magnificence, opulence, talents, etc., all that pride could suggest, with all that power, abilities and affluence could command; luxury and pleasure, with all its votaries of vanity and dissipation, suddenly and indiscriminately buried in one common ruin, all consigned to this great repository, till the archangel's trump shall sound, 'Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment!'

THE ORIENTAL OATH.

In ancient times the manner of taking an oath, as shown by history, was quite different from the modern practice. It consisted in killing a beast, dividing it in the middle, and solemnly walking between the two pieces, thus virtually saying, Let me thus die if I violate my oath. God accused Judah of having broken such a covenant oath, in these words: "And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof, the princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf; I will even give them into the hand of their enemies." Jer. 34: 18–20.

In the light of this scriptural statement of the manner of making a covenant oath in ancient times, we can see the strength of the oath which God placed himself under to Abraham, after Abraham had said, "Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it" (the promised land)? God bade him take an heifer, a goat, a ram, a dove and a pigeon; to divide these beasts in the middle, putting one half of each on the right hand, and the other half of each on the left hand, omitting to divide the birds, being small, but to put one on each side with the pieces,—thus preparing for an oath four times stronger than usually administered; then God appeared, not as he did to Moses, in a burning bush, but in the form of "a smoking furnace, [illegible]ing lamp that passed between [illegible] a strong co[illegible] him the lan[illegible] God "gave[illegible] so much a[illegible] forgott[illegible] land—[illegible] seed—[illegible]

a[illegible] me[illegible] Dr. [illegible] part [illegible] maus[illegible] was re[illegible] tant, at [illegible] ciples on [illegible] Jesus walk[illegible] or thirty fu[illegible] between th[illegible] Jesus often [illegible] any "about [illegible] about two mile[illegible] hundred furlongs is about two [illegible] miles.

The New Jerusalem is measured by [illegible] longs and cubits, "according to the measu[illegible] of a man" in the hand of the angel; that is, the angel used not such measures as are used in heaven, unknown to man (if they have any such), but such as are known and used by man. The twelve thousand furlongs, whether meaning so much on each side, or so much in circumference, are fifteen hundred miles. The height of the wall (144 cubits) would be either 216 feet or 264 feet, as two different cubits were anciently used. Nor is this a symbol of the church, either in its mortal or immortal stage; for the church can no more be measured by furlongs or cubits than time can be measured by the quart, or eternity by the barrel. But a sacred city, prepared as a home for the church, can be measured in the manner here specified; and though that measurement may now seem enormous, it will prove to be just right—a work worthy of a God.

Glidden. Fell asleep in Jesus, at the residence of her daughter in Northfield, Vt., April 8th, 1879, Sister Percia Glidden, in the sixty-fifth year of her age.

Sister Glidden had suffered for two years from a paralytic shock and kindred ailments; but she suffered all as a Christian. She had lost the sight of one eye, and some of the readers of the Crisis may remember that she requested prayers about a year ago that she might not be totally blind. Prayer was answered, and she was able to look upon her kindred and friends to the very last. She had been a Christian forty years, and for a number of years a firm believer in the second personal coming of Christ as an event near at hand. [illegible] two years she was unable to attend any pub-[illegible] religious services, and the weekly visits of the [illegible] were a great comfort to her. Her hope [illegible] an anchor to her soul, and she had no fear [illegible] but welcomed it as the end of her sufferings. Her hope was in the resurrection of the just, and she spoke very affectingly of the meeting "in the morning." She leaves a daughter, son, brother and sister, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss; but the assurance that she was prepared to go gives comfort to each believing heart. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

H. C. Howard.

Adams. In Haverhill, Mass., March 9th, 1879, Sister Luella F., wife of J. W. Adams, aged thirty-nine years.

Sister Adams took Mary's place at Jesus' feet early in life, and sought with unfaltering diligence the pearl of great price all the remaining days of her pilgrimage. Her devotions were characterized by retiring meekness, gentleness and sobriety, but with strong faith, earnest pleadings, willing sacrifice, purity of purpose and commendable zeal for the salvation of the lost. She was beloved in life and greatly lamented in death. Her example lives while her voice is silent. The mingled bitterness and sweetness of this life with her is passed, and she waits an hour, in undisturbed rest, for the unclouded glories and eternal blessedness of the kingdom of God. The church weeps sadly but hopefully their loss, while a husband sits in loneliness with two motherless babes in his arms. May the Protector of the defenceless and the Answerer of prayer fold them to his bosom of love.

Sanders. In Troy, Vt., April 12th, 1879, Charles F. Sanders, aged fifty-six years.

Bro. Sanders was a faithful, devoted Christian, and a firm believer in the soon coming of Jesus. He had been feeble in health for nearly twenty years, but the last three or four months of his life he suffered intensely, until finally he breathed out his life and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, to await the glorious morning of the resurrection. He leaves a wife in her loneliness to weep, but she sorrows not without hope. He made every provision possible for her comfort and welfare, arranging all his business in a manner to relieve her from special care and anxiety about it. He did it as calmly as though preparing for a journey, being sustained by the grace of God. May the blessing of the Lord rest richly upon our sister in her widowhood, and she at last greet him in "the better land." By his request words of comfort were spoken at the funeral by the writer, from Job 14: 14, 15 (a text of his own selection).

Business.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

☞ We will send the World's Crisis to ministers of all denominations for ONE DOLLAR per year, payable in advance. All ministers unknown at this office, when they send for the Crisis, will please give satisfactory proof that they are ministers. AGENT.

☞ Any person sending a name for the FREE LIST, must send a written certificate, endorsed by some brother well known at this office, certifying that the person named is unable to pay for the Crisis, and is worthy to have it free. Also 25 cents must accompany the certificate to pay postage. If the above is complied with, the application will be considered. AGENT.

☞ PRICE REDUCED.—Our friends and patrons will please notice that we have reduced the price of the YOUNG PILGRIM. We hope our brethren and friends will help us increase the list by sending in hundreds of new subscribers. AGENT.

☞ TO SABBATH SCHOOLS.—One of our old book publishers was unsuccessful in business, and went into bankruptcy. He had a large stock on hand. It was offered in lots to the public. We bought a few hundred books at a very low price, and we would say to all Sabbath Schools, if they wish to add any books to their library, or if any school wishes to have a new library, now is the time to get them. Will our brethren and friends please call soon and examine, as we shall sell as fast as possible. It is a rare bargain.

Good nice QUARTO BIBLES in same lot, at from three to five dollars each. Rare bargains. Also a variety of Sabbath School Cards. AGENT.

☞ We would say to all who wish to obtain any book or books that are to be found in the market, that if they will send us the TITLE IN FULL of the book or books wanted, with amount of price enclosed, we will forward them as soon as they can be obtained. Direct to OZIAS GOODRICH, Box 5140, Boston, Mass. AGENT.

☞ VALUABLE WORKS.—Those who wish information on the subject of "Future Punishment," or desire to give it to others, will do well to obtain a work entitled "SUNLIGHT," by Silas Henn, of England, or "TRUTH SET FREE," by the same author. The first contains 72 pages. Single 25 cts., or $2.25 per dozen, postpaid. The second contains 64 pages. Single 20 cts., or $1.80 per dozen, postpaid. AGENT.

☞ SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.—The Doings of the Prophetic Conference held in New York last fall is now published in a book of 528 pages. It is a full report of the call for the Conference, and each Address is complete and fully reported. Also there is a Critical Appendix added, which is valuable. The book is handsomely bound in cloth. Price postpaid, $2.00. AGENT.

☞ EXPOSITION OF TWENTIETH CHAPTER OF REVELATION.—This is a Tract of twelve pages, written by L. Boutell. Price, single 3 cts., 20 cts per dozen, $1.25 per hundred, postpaid. AGENT.

☞ MARRIAGE CERTIFICATES.—We have on hand, and intend to keep, a good assortment of "Marriage Certificates." Any and all of our friends wishing to purchase such, can obtain them at the Crisis Office. AGENT.

☞ TESTAMENTS.—We have some very nice Testaments in flexible covers. Single copy 7 cts., or 75 cts per dozen postpaid. AGENT.

BE CONTENT.

BY FRANCES HOWARD.

Thou desirest great work;
But bide God's time;
Whether thy life's hymn seems
Plain prose or rhyme—

Whether thy life run on
In quiet way,
Having small things to do,
Little to say;

Or, if an honored place
Great men among
Thou holdst, by skill of pen,
Pencil, or tongue,

Still, thou canst serve thy God
With loving heart,
And ready, willing hands,
Where'er thou art.

If roses lie in thy path,
Or violets,
Ever reflect on this:
God ne'er forgets

To give thee some sweet flowers.
The humblest are the best;
Thank him for what he sends,
And leave the rest.

He always sends thee flowers—
Perchance they're not
As gay as some that bloom
In garden plot—

But roses hide sharp thorns;
The lowlier flowers
Are sweeter, and fade not
In darkest hours.

DEATH—THE ANTIDOTE.

BY J. L. NELSON.

The Scriptures teach, and observation confirms the fact, that we are mortal creatures, fast tending to the inevitable tomb; and that from death no sex is spared, no age exempt. The majestic and countless roads which monarchs pass over, the way the men of learning tread, the path the warrior travels, all lead to the same place; all terminate, however varied in their route, in that one enormous charnel-house which is appointed for all living.

Mortals may believe, yea, boast, in the subterfuge—"Thou shalt not surely die"—which was conceived and declared by the enemy of all that is good in the primitive days of our race, yet one short sentence closes the biography of every man, as if in mockery of the unsubstantial pretentions of human pride—"And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: and he died." Gen. 5:5. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom. 5:12.

Thus we see that death is the portion of all mankind. What is the state of man while in death? Is he conscious or is he unconscious? These questions have vexed the minds of millions, who have imbibed false notions of the nature of man, and have, therefore, called forth much vain speculation without any satisfactory answer. But when we turn for an answer, not to the traditions of men, but to "a more sure word of prophecy," we find the matter is therein made plain. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish" Ps. 146: 3, 4. "For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Eccl. 9:5, 10.

No matter what stations of honor we may hold in life, we are all subject to death, and sooner or later must yield to its withering stroke; and were there no antidote, sad indeed would be our condition. Our death would simply be eternal, both in its nature and duration. "For if the dead rise not ... then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." So then without a resurrection there can be no future life for the dead.

But we rejoice that there is an antidote in the resurrection, and as Christians we have a "blessed hope" even in death. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order. Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. 15: 21–23. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5:28, 29.

Skeptics, whose minds are corrupted by the vain philosophy of men, may scoff at the idea of a physical resurrection of the dead, nevertheless the promises of the Lord are sure. And professing Christians, schooled in the traditions of Plato, may, if they choose, glorify the "King of Terrors," and chant, "death is the gate to endless joy," but God forbid that we should thus rob Christ of the glory due to him and bestow it upon Satan.

Death deserves honor for nothing but killing men. Beyond this his power does not reach. To him who is "the Resurrection and the Life" belongs all the honor and glory of our resurrection from the dead; and according to his words it is at the resurrection, and not at death, that we will be rewarded. "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke 14:13, 14. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27.

Comforting thought! The antidote is soon to be administered. Earth's dark and dreary pilgrimage will soon be ended; and ere long the golden rays of the "bright and morning star" will tinge the eastern horizon. Then the cry "awake ye that dwell in dust" will call forth the countless sleepers from the confines of death, and judgment and reward will be rendered. Are we ready for the event? Are we living "soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zea[illegible] 12–14. I[illegible] they that [illegible] may have [illegible] enter in[illegible]

Shu[illegible]

W[illegible] [illegible]CES.

[illegible]o-day, white-wa[illegible] [illegible]t of Christian ci[illegible] [illegible]more affinity for Chr[illegible] [illegible]as for holiness, is a sham[illegible] [illegible]deception. And magnificent c[illegible] [illegible]ith formal popular divines, vieing in pomp and regal splendor with "barbaric kings," and far removed in spirit and gospel simplicity from the king's highway, are not of God. And yet, strange to say, millions risk their salvation, their all for eternity in these bogus institutions or imitations of the real church of Christ. Nay, the great mass of professing Christians do not appear to know the importance of the Constitution and by-laws of the lowly Nazarene, and they have not the courage or time to examine the statutes for themselves; but will depend on a counsellor who for a stipulated fee agrees to examine the Law, with all its latest additions and amendments up to the present date.

Alas! how unlike the primitive church and early Christians. "Nothing could be more unadorned than the primitive worship," says the church historian. "A plain man, chosen from among his fellows, in his common garb, stood up to speak, or sat down to read the Scriptures, to as many as chose to assemble in the house appointed. A back room, and that probably a mean one, or a garret, to be out of the way of observation, was their temple."

In their preaching or talk, says Mosheim, eloquence and art gave place to the natural and fervent expressions of zeal and charity. "As pride and worldly-mindedness must go hand in hand, continues the historian, "assumed pomp and dignity required not a sort of maintenance very different from the state when the pastor wrought with his own hands (like Paul of Rome) to maintain his necessities, and labored by day that he might serve the church by night."

The idea of priesthood had yet scarcely entered into the Christian sanctuary. But on the dissolution of the whole Jewish economy under Adrian, when the power of the associated clergy began to put forth its bud, the ambitious and desiging suggested what many of the rest received in their simplicity, namely, that the succession to these honors now developed upon themselves; the bishop stood in the place of the high priests; the presbyters were priests; deacons Levites, so a train of consequences followed. Thus a new tribe arose completely separated from their brethren, of clergy distinct from laity—men sacred by office, exclusive of a divine call and real worth, to add greater sanctity to the priesthood, and the not unpleasant adjunct of the divine right of tithes attached to the divine right of Episcopacy.

Now look at nominal Christianity in its aggregated form. Its general attitude is tolerant of sin, and it aims no well directed blows at the sources of evil. Its power is scarcely repressive. It is, in short, a stumbling block to the heathen abroad, and a hindrance to the half-hearted at home. That such things are true of the visible church is a humiliating and frightful consideration. Alas! the sigh of the great apostle comes floating down the ages: "I would they were even cut off which trouble you."

To suppose that a Christian can vie with the world in dress and equipage, flare into passion when his will is crossed or his opinions sifted, indulge his lust under legal cover like any voluptuary, and grasp as greedily for wealth as any worldling, is a total misapprehension of the nature and purpose of Christianity.

"Indeed, it is enough to make the angels wring their hands to witness simply the spectacles around the Lord's table in some churches. What an array of millinery and God-abhorred vanity! What a sad contrast to the manifestation of the Divine idea of life in Christ Jesus! The swells, and carnal fungi, and lust-flaunting placards that characterize this solemnity in some localities, are enough to awaken the loudest laugh of hell!" "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you?" The high calling of God links us to the consummation of his ends, according to the order of the cross. To ignore this, we falsify our profession, disappoint the angels, and cheat the world. Ah, me! what an eye-sore and heart-ache are fashion-mongers to the angels. We deal treacherously with God by thus misrepresenting him to the world. He asks exhibitions of the beauty of holiness through us. O brother, sister, our high calling is to mirror the glory of God, the majesty of righteousness, the winning pathos and grandeur of self-sacrifice. Alas! what are some of us doing but belying our profession, caricaturing the God-man? A dandy Christian! A saint in ribbons and ruffs, gold chains and rings, rigged in devil-invented, vanity-fostering paraphernalia. The elect of God fluttering in the revolting silliness of self-display at pic-nics and world-aping celebrations and Christ-mocking coteries, is not our high calling. If good as the scribes and pharisees externally, in the days of our Lord (and we fear multitudes of church members are not), weighed in the balances should be found wanting; for mere negative piety has never disturbed the peace of the world. It furnishes no motive for action. It inspires no enthusiasm. It has furnished no missionaries, no crusaders, no martyrs. —Christian Standard.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO SENSATION.

The Banner publishes the following, because its truthfulness demands large publicity. And the Banner feels sorry that the deteriorated state of piety in the fashionable churches of our country makes such animadversions necessary. The article comes from a Bloomington secular journal—Brick-a-Brac:

"There is too much sensational preaching now-a-days. The fact that ministers of the gospel are compelled to resort to sensational sermons, and to advertise their sermon in advance, forms one of the saddest commentaries upon modern religion. This has been the case in Bloomington, where ministers, after seeing their congregations melting gradually away, Sunday after Sunday, have resorted to the sensational phase, and were rewarded by full seats and fashionable congregations. The devil must be getting vigorously aggressive, for Christianity finds it necessary to surround itself with every device to attract worshipers. Imposing and costly church buildings, with magnificent trappings, and upholstered furniture; great organs, the peals from which shake the very foundation stones of the house of God; vocal choirs whose praises, as they rise heavenward, are so smothered in artistic and operatic effects, that it has been suggested that an interpreter be sent along to render the anthems in plain English or good Dutch; elegant gilt-edged, morrocco-covered service books, with dainty envelopes to enclose the contribution for the heathen, together with such gorgeousness and splendor as to eclipse the pretensions of a first-class opera house; and over all and above all, a forty or fifty thousand dollar mortgage. And here, with the glad sunshine shut out, and the light filtered through stained glass, and amid expensive elegance and gushes of music, a fashionably dressed congregation sit and listen to a sensational sermon, and believe they are worshiping God. This is modern religion.

It was altogether different years ago. Then religion was pure and simple. People went to the modest but comfortable church house without consulting the papers of the day to learn what the attraction would be, for they knew the man of God would direct their thoughts toward heaven, without rosy rhetoric or technical circumlocution. Religion was plain, and without other inducement than the desire to serve God, and so live that when called before the court of last appeal, they will be placed on the right hand of the Father. A little more religion and a great deal less show and vanity, and the world will take a mighty stride toward the universal christianizing of mankind.—Banner of Holiness.

WESTERN JOTTINGS.—No. 12.

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

April 25th, left Rochester for Albany, stopping at So. Butler to meet a call of Eld. R. H. Bateman. He met us at the station and took us to his hospitable home, where we were kindly entertained by himself and wife. Here the message of the soon coming of our Lord was faithfully preached many years ago, and a good society raised up, which passed through various trials and scatterings under various s[illegible] messages, until it was utterly broken down by the dogma that the wicked would not rise from death. But under the earnest efforts of our faithful Sister Jennings, the brethren again rallied, and determined to try to build up and let their light shine. They secured the labors of Bro. Bateman the last year, who entered at once upon the work of leading sinners to Christ, and with the help of a few faithful members and the blessing of God, the church has rallied, and many have been converted and baptized by him.

Saturday evening attended a gospel temperance meeting, which is affecting much good, and spoke to the people on the importance of faith in Christ to produce a true reform; also of the necessity of quitting the use of tobacco to ensure real temperance work. Sunday spoke to a full house on the great redemption through our Lord Jesus Christ, by his universal atonement and conditional salvation, Brn. Bateman and B. P. Stevens assisting in the service. It was a good day and a joyful season. In the evening spoke again on the physical, national and moral signs of the immediate coming of our Lord to redeem his people.

Monday visited Bro. Stevens and family, three miles away, and found them still waiting for the Lord. Monday evening preached our last discourse to that people, and, by request, related to them our experience in being healed of a ruined spine and paralysis by the power of God in answer to prayer, fifteen years ago. We are glad to see that the church in Butler is doing well, and growing under the labors of Bro. Bateman. April 29th we parted from this dear people, who showed us great kindnsss, went to Albany and put up with Bro. J. R. Mitchell, where we found a hearty welcome. Bro. M. has for several years labored with his hands to provide for his family, and then on the Sabbath preaches the gospel of the kingdom to the remnant of a once large church of Advent believers.

Albany was visited by Brn. Miller and Himes early in the history of the Message, and they did a great work by the Lord's blessing, and a large church was here gathered. Since then it has been several times rent into fragments by the false messages published by men who never gather, but always pull down what others build up, if allowed to sow their cockle. The cause has been so wasted in Albany that our ministers have abandoned going there to preach. But Bro. Mitchell has not given it up. Having learned that it is wrong to gather Christian society, and then allow false teachers to come in and poison and pervert it, he has decided to do so no more, and his brethren are united in it. They have therefore hired a hall in Greenbush, just across the Hudson River, and are occupying new ground. The Lord has blessed the effort, and the truth has reached many hearts. Many of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist Churches have become interested and attend the meetings. Sinners have been converted, and a good congregation gathered. They hold prayer-meetings at the house of Brn. Morrill in Albany.

They lack one important work. There are men among them (who sustain other churches) who love the faith, and get their spiritual food at the Adventist meeti[illegible] who have means to build a meeting[illegible] and to support Bro. Mitchell, wh[illegible] highly esteem, and call a good preacher and faithful Christian worker; but he is obliged to work six days at a trade and preach on Sundays. He is scarcely known to any Adventist preacher, is not ordained, but should be. There are candidates now awaiting baptism.

Wednesday evening we preached to a good audience of deeply interested hearers, on the atonement and its results. The Lord gave his blessing, and we enjoyed a precious season with this people. They remembered us after a godly sort. Thursday evening we preached in Albany to an audience of very good hearers. Many of them were of the old stock of believers. The Lord gave us a very precious season.

One point of interest worth recording we wish to mention here. In all our travels among the brethren we find no case of any one who has carefully read our books—"The Plan of Redemption," or "The History of the Second Advent Message," who afterwards turn to adopt the non-resurrection, or the Seventh-day keeping views. We think this speaks well for the books, and for those who read them. It would be of much benefit to many others who need light on these subjects, to read them.

Friday morning we bade adieu to Bro. Mitchell and family, took the train through North Adams to Boston, passing under a mountain three miles, where day was turned into night, through the famous Hoosic Tunnel, and on among the mountains and rocks, which assured us that we were once more in New England. We arrived safely in Boston, and think of getting home after about four months travel and constant toil in the West. Thanks to our God.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Sr. M. J. Janes.

Dear Bro. Couch:—With your permission I would like to say a few words through your valuable paper, for the edification of the household of faith,—knowing how much they love to hear from the reapers, scattered here and there through the vineyard, who are gathering up the few last heads which remain.

Through the kindness of a dear daughter, I was permitted to visit my native State—Michigan—and see for the last time a loving mother, living at Muskegan. She now sweetly sleeps in Jesus; but "there will be a glorious dawn."

Jan. 2nd, by the kindness of friends, I was permitted to enjoy a real "feast of fat things" in the Lord at the Annual Meeting of the A. C. Conference of Northern Mich., held at Hesperia. It was soul-cheering to listen to the words of life as they fell from lips of young and old, whose hearts burned with the love of God. It was good to be there, for God of a truth was with us by his Spirit. Bro. H. Pollard labors for this church as pastor. He is surely the right man in the right place. He has a warm place in the hearts of his people.

We stayed and continued the meeting two weeks, and God gave us souls as seals of our ministry. The church rejoiced and was glad. Some came eight miles through the storm; others came with ox teams two or [illegible] miles [illegible] night. God blest [illegible] the people have a mind to work.

In company with Sister M. A. King, we went to Sylvester and stayed one week—Bro. John Bower's field of labor. God has aided Father Bower to do a great work in all this region. We felt like babes in the presence of this old veteran of the cross; yet we realize that "it is not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." The Lord gave us one kid, and the church was encouraged to press the battle to the enemy's gate. Sister King will continue the meeting, and God will bless, for he is with her of a truth. Surely God hath poured out his Spirit upon his handmaid.

Jan. 28th, came to Burlington, Calhoun Co., Mich., our old home. Attended the Union Conference, and met many old and tried friends and brethren in the Lord. Several started to serve the Lord. Brn. T. C. Grundy and J. R. Berry continued the meeting. It did me good like a medicine, and cheered my heart, to see so many old and true friends. I pray that we may soon meet where partings will be known no more.

Feb. 1st, went to Galesburgh, where Bro. Berry, a young man faithful in the Lord is pastor. Found the church had been praying especially for this meeting, that God would own and bless his own truth, and the result was just what might have been expected—a rich harvest of souls. To God belongs all the glory. That church has a way of working in all its strength that is truly commendable. No drones in that hive.

March 8th, after four weeks hard labor, left this little church to aid Bro. J. R. Preston in his field in Branch Co. Bro. P. has this entire county all to himself. He is doing a good work in the name of his Master. At our first meeting at the Grove school-house we organized a church of eighteen, and there are more to follow.

Next to East Gilead, and held a few meetings. Found the brethren and sisters at work. We all felt that it was good to serve the Lord. Thence to Algansee; found them a good deal discouraged, for trials and contentions had crept in and divided the flock; yet some faithful souls were determined to see the end of the race, and reap the reward of the faithful. They revived the prayer-meeting and Sabbath School, and God will bless them if they continue faithful. O how much grace we do need to keep us in the narrow way, amid the perils of these last days! We had lived on both sides these two last named places, and consequently found many old friends.

April 1st, came to Reading, Hillsdale Co., and preached three times to large and attentive audiences. We found a home with our much esteemed Bro. and Sr. Seymour, from whose lips we heard of the speedy return of Jesus for the first time thirty years ago. We then hoped to die and go to heaven; we are now waiting for God's Son from heaven, and hope to be made like him then.

"O glorious home of heavenly rest!"

We found them still holding on to the truth just as loyal and willing to do for the Master as ever. We once lived near here, consequently found a hearty welcome, and enjoyed visiting with many friends[illegible]

April 24th came to Sal[illegible] Co., our first [illegible] youth. [illegible]ere we spent many ha[illegible] as we labored together for God and the upbuilding of his cause. Father and mother still live to praise God for his goodness, and are still clinging fast to the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus and being made like him. Father is eighty-six years old, and mother eighty-four. In dear old Michigan I passed all the best days of my life. All my struggles with self, as I began to feel that I must preach the gospel, and was afraid it was all a temptation of the Evil One. Here I yielded to God's will, and the peace and joy that followed was unspeakable and full of glory. For months not a cloud passed between me and my God.

Many hundreds of weary miles husband and I have traveled in this State, that we might give the trumpet a certain sound, and tell the people that Jesus was soon coming to bring reward. But he fell at his post. His work is done; but Jesus is soon to come, then all the faithful ones will come forth to hear their Lord say, "Well done, good and faithful servants; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." O Lord, hasten the glad day.

My address until further notice will be Muskegan, Mich., Box 581.

From Sr. L. Foote.

Dear Brn. and Srs. of the Crisis:—I have been thinking for a long while that I would write you. I realize in some degree the times in which we live; that the perils are thickening around us; that wicked men are "waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." How very few there are who love God, love his truth, and love his precious will to do. It looks to me that the world is full of reading, but the Word of God sadly neglected. Men are walking in darkness, and, according to God's Word, the judgment will come upon them as a thief. I feel to cry out in my heart, O that men would repent! O that they would believe the gospel, that they might be saved!

How I do rejoice that I ever found Christ; for I know "he is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." He has truly led me in a way which I knew not; and I praise God that he is coming back to earth again, to make all things new and to set up his everlasting kingdom. O brethren, will it not be glorious to see him and be made like him, and to dwell with him forever? O, I hope to be there. By his grace assisting me I will try and overcome, even as Christ overcame and has sat down on his Father's throne.

My dear brethren, we have everything to encourage us. Let us hold fast whereunto we have attained. How blessed it is to walk in the narrow way! If we continue in it, we shall outride the storms of this life, and enter the port of peace. O, I long for that day to come, when there will be no weary nor sad ones, no care-worn faces, no more wrinkled brows; but all will be fair, and our happiness be complete. May we so run as to obtain. May we ever trust in the Lord, for they that put their trust in him shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever.

"He leads us on
By paths we do not know;
Upward he leads, although our steps be slow;
Though oft we faint and falter by the way,
Though storms and darkness oft obscure the day;
Yet when the clouds are gone
We know he leads us on."

Salisbury, N. H.

From Bro. W. K. Dowey.

Beloved Brn. and Sisters:—Through the kindness of our Heavenly Father, I am still the spared monument of his goodness and mercy. I have not walked a step for two years, being confined to the house by the rheumatism in my knees, so that I cannot straighten them. They are set at right angles; but thanks be to God, I do not suffer any pain unless I attempt to straighten them out, and then the pain is so severe that I cannot endure it. My hands are likewise drawn up, so that I cannot do any work only to mend clothes. I have earned only about one dollar for two years. I have not heard a gospel sermon for over four years, but have had a few prayer-meetings at my house. The only religious reading I have is the World's Crisis, except I get a book out of the Sabbath School of the Methodist Episcopal Church. There is no Advent preaching here, and there never has been but a few sermons preached here on these truths, and they were as usual opposed by the other denominations, hence did not do any visible good.

STRAIGHT PATHS.

"Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed."—Heb. 12:13.

Such is the command of the apostle; but there is evidently a careless disregard of it among many of the professed Christians of to-day, as is shown by their lives and testimony. When we see those who profess to be followers of Jesus joining in the world's pleasures, and clad in the world's garments, we are led to believe that they have little care as to the paths they are making, and whether younger Christians coming after them will be turned out of the way, or established in the way, by their example. 'Tis true, they are often heard to confess their sinfulness—their wanderings and short-comings; but seldom are they heard to warn others of the dangers that lurk by the way. They are never heard to tell the new-born soul to beware; that they should not love the world, but should come out, and be forever separate from it—from its sinful fashions and pleasures. No, we do not hear this; but we do hear these wordly conformed professors ridiculing the very idea of plain dress for Christians; and with all their might do they uphold church fairs, festivals, parties, etc., laughing to scorn any who desire to lift their voices against them. Thus the crooked paths are being made, and scores of precious souls are being turned out of the way by those who should be "lights in the world."

Take the evil of fashionable dress—that great and deadly evil, which is so f[illegible] spiritual life, and which is a ruling [illegible] and especially the besetting sin of [illegible] heart. Oh, for a voice like a [illegible] sound forth words of warning [illegible] in the churches. Are we adorned [illegible] "modest apparel which becometh [illegible] professing godliness?" Everywhere and [illegible] tian ministers are bound o[illegible] the Master to "preach the [illegible] forth sound doctrines; and every [illegible] minister, at least, has solemnly [illegible] God and the church to "be ready with faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word."—Selected.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

(Selected.)

None will have such a dreadful parting with the Lord at the last day as those who went half-way with him and then left him.

The Master says to this busy, greedy, restless world, "One thing is needful." Do you possess it? He says to the unsaved millions, "One thing thou lackest." If the one thing you lack is the one thing needful, you are poor and wretched and blind, even though you call the world your own.

When we know God as he is, we have found a friend who knows us better than we know ourselves, forgives us when we cannot forgive ourselves, and, in the midst of our mighty despair, breathes around our heart the perfumed breath of a new and divine hope. All our faculties unfold in their true method and order.

All men cannot be great, according to the human measure of greatness; but all can be good, which is far better. In striving after Christ-likeness we are on the direct and only sure road to true greatness. Christ is the greatest of all beings, and the aspiring souls that approach nearest to him are the greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

In that glorious morning of the resurrection the saints shall put on their new fresh suits of flesh, richly laid and trimmed with glory. Those bodies which in the graves were dust and rottenness, when it delivers them back again, shall be shining and excellent pieces, absolutely and everlastingly freed from infirmities, deformities and natural necessities.

LAYING UP TREASURES.

BY J. E. GIBSON.

Jesus commanded us not to lay up treasures upon earth, but to lay up treasures in heaven; "for where your treasure is there will your heart be also." Jesus said to the young man—"Go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." But he "went away grieved, for he had great possessions. And Jesus looked around about, and said unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." The Master shows that it is difficult for those who have treasures to become heirs of the kingdom. Paul says, "We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out; and having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptations and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil." Therefore we should be contented with food and clothing.

The covetous are classed with fornicators, idolators, etc., therefore let us be very careful about having our hearts set upon things of this world. Let us fix our eyes on the mark, and press forward, knowing that the prize is at the end of the race. I hear men every day prophesying that great calamities are coming upon the nations of the earth; and their hearts begin to fail them, for fear, and for looking after the things that are coming upon the earth, as Jesus said. But those who trust in the Lord can now [illegible] their heads, and rejoice to know th[illegible] redemption draweth nigh.

OIL YOURSELF A LITTLE.

Once upon a time there lived an old gentleman in a large house. He had servants and everything he wanted; and yet he was not happy, and when things did not go as he wished, he was very cross. At last his servants left him. Quite out of temper, he went to a neighbor with the story of his distresses.

"It seems to me," said the neighbor, sagaciously, "'twould be well for you to oil yourself a little."

"To oil myself?"

"Yes; and I will explain. Sometime ago, one of the doors in my house creaked. Nobody, therefore, liked to go in or out of it. One day I oiled its hinges, and it has been constantly used by everybody ever since."

"Then you think I am like a creaking door," cried the old gentleman. "How do you want me to oil myself?"

"That's an easy matter," said the neighbor. "Go home and engage a servant, and when he does right, praise him. If, on the contrary, he does something amiss, do not be cross; oil your voice and your words with the oil of love."

The old gentleman went home, and no harsh or ugly words were ever heard in the house afterward. Everybody should have a supply of this precious oil, for every family is liable to have a creaking hinge in the shape of a fretful disposition, a cross temper, a harsh tone, or a fault-finding spirit. —Selected.

"TAKE THE SAFE PATH, FATHER."

A gentleman said to his pastor, "How can I best train up my boy in the way he should go?" "By going that way yourself," wisely replied the minister. This reminds us of a story told by Dr. Thompson, author of "The Land and the Book." He had climbed nearly to the top of a steep mountain, lifting his feet carefully along over the projecting rocks, when faintly from below he heard a silvery voice call out, "Take the safe path, father; I'm coming after you." [illegible] stood still as he realized the dan[illegible] [illegible] lamp to precious boy. If fathers only re[illegible] the boys are indeed coming [illegible] would [illegible] must [illegible]

[illegible] much [illegible] simple, [illegible] and we [illegible] us more harm [illegible] good." In Dresden [illegible] there is, [illegible] but one private school where American girls are admitted, for similar reasons.

"'Stablished."—"Father," remarked a young man, "try and go to the meeting this evening. The sermon will be on the second coming of Christ."

"No," said the Presbyterian deacon, "I am 'stablished."

The next day the deacon and son went to the timber for wood. After the load was on, the deacon ordered the horses to go, but they refused. He asked the boy what the trouble was. He answered,

"Father, they are 'stablished."

Too many are like the deacon to ever go in at the door. Christians are not bigots.

A boy once heard his father remark, "It was a poor rule that would not work both ways." One day while at play he found eight bricks and placed them all on their ends, and pushed the first over, and that knocked the next, and so on until all were down. He then raised one to see if it would lift up the rest; but the remaining seven did not move. He went to his father and told him what he had done, and the rule failed. "My son," said the father, "brick and mankind are alike; both made of clay, active in knocking each other down, but not disposed to help each other up." How true!

[illegible] the same, by the bless[illegible], thy will.
[illegible] expected that Eld. A[illegible]
[illegible] to preach the [illegible] ine ear reclining,
[illegible] ear, and thou shalt live;
The Lord who calls is gracious—
He's near, and will forgive.

Oh! Christian, hast thou wandered
Far from thy Master's way?
Return and seek his favor,
He will not say thee nay.

Oh! seek him while he waiteth;
Oh! find him while he's near;
Now is the time accepted—
Now, while he calls, he'll hear.

Come, then, each one that thirsteth,
While love and mercy wait—
While Jesus Christ is pleading,
Ere 'tis too late, too late!

THE HIGH ROCK.

BY REV. DANIEL MARCH, D. D.

The divine law was given to man written by the finger of God upon tablets of stone. The revelation was in the language which God had taught in Paradise, and the writing was upon mater[illegible] which God ma[illegible]e when he made the world. The principle[illegible] of the law were from everlasting, and th[illegible] tablets upon which it was written were [illegible] solid substance of the globe. [illegible] holy place, where the divine voice spake, and the unseen hand delivered the written stone into the hands of a man, was a sanctuary of rocks.

No fluted columns nor sculptured walls, no pictured dome nor long-drawn aisle, no work of art or of man's device, adorned the awful scene of the divine legation. The Ancient of Days was enthroned upon the rock, and his temple was the high place of the hills when he gathered the tribes around his seat and gave forth laws for the government of the world. The pillars of that awful sanctuary were splintered peaks, heaved up by the inner fires of the earth and sculptured by the storms; the walls were naked crags rough-hewn and hoary with centuries of age; the sky was the dome; the clouds hung their drapery around; and when the Divine Legislator descended to his throne of rock and gave forth his law upon tablets of stone, the proclamation was made in mighty thunderings, the mountains did quake and the everlasting hills bowed in worship.

From that time forth the rock in Horeb became a holy place to all readers of the Scriptures, and the sacredness attached to that ancient sanctuary of the mountains made without hands became associated permanently in devout minds with the rock. It was only the abuse of a just and sacred feeling that led the self-torturing ascetic to make his home in a cave of the rocks, and to think it a holier place than the home consecrated by daily duty and pure affection. All that science has learned of the laws of nature, and all that history has recorded of the past, leads us to look with religious veneration upon the ancient rocks.

The successive steps by which God built up a world, and made it habitable for man from the dark and formless void of earth are recorded upon the rocks. The strata that go down in orderly succession deeper than the deepest mine, and the fossil remains of sea-shells piled high as the mountains tell us all that we know of the mode in which the Divine Architect lifted the present beautiful order of hills and valleys and plains out of the deep. Whoever would read the creative work of the six unmeasured days in Genesis, must study the tablet stone.

Many of the great and critical events in the world's history since it became a home for man to take us back to the munitions of the rocks and the sanctuaries built without hands,—many of the most precious and consoling promises of divine revelation are set forth under the similitude of a rock. When, in a meditative mood, we look upon a great rock old as the centuries, or upon a humble memorial stone set up by human hands, we are reminded of truths and scenes and events that stir our hearts with the most profound and sacred emotion. It is, therefore, entirely proper and natural that we should still try to draw living streams of divine instruction from the rock, both in its literal and symbolical character, even as Moses brought refreshing waters for the thirsty tribes from the rock in Horeb. And every line of truth, followed up to its true source, will lead us to the Rock of Ages.

There is much to be said of the rock or common stone as a sacred memorial. When Jacob journeyed from Beersheba to Padan-aram, he lighted upon a solitary place as the shadows of evening gathered around him, and he laid down for the night to sleep, with the heavens for a covering, and the bare earth for a bed, and the rough stones of the roadside for a pillow. And there he dreamed that a shining pathway rose from earth to heaven in his sight, and angels were coming and going as multitudes meet and pass on the crowded street. Above, was the glory of Jehovah, and the voice which called to Abraham out of heaven called to him with words of promise and protection. When the lonely wanderer waked out of sleep, and rose up early in the morn to renew his journey, it seemed to him that the vision of the night had made the solitary place the house of God and the gate of heaven. And there he set up a memorial stone, to remind him in subsequent years of the night when the Lord God of his fathers Abraham and Isaac met him in the way to Padan-aram. And when he returned with great riches to the land of his inheritance, he sought out the place of that anointed stone, and there he set up an altar to the God that answered him in the day of his distress. And from that time forth the tenth of all he had he gave to God.

This is the true way for men to make holy places in all time and in all the earth. Let them commemorate the hour when God met them in their wanderings with messages of peace. And it would be well for all who make good promises in the time of trouble and distress to set up a memorial of their vows and to keep the covenant made in affliction ever before them in the day of prosperity. It were better that all our good promises made in our best or darkest moments should be graven with a pen of iron and in the rock forever, than that they should be forgotten when the world surrounds us with its temptations, and this earthly life promises all that we want.

It were well for us all to set up a sacred memorial of the time of distress and agony, when we offered up the prayer, "Oh, God, deliver me from going down to the grave," and the prayer was heard; of the time when poverty came upon us like an armed man, and we vowed, if ever prosperity should return, to give the tenth of all our gains to God; of the time when the Spirit touched our hearts and we had great joy and peace in our souls, and we were ready to answer to every call of duty, "Lord, here am I; send me."

All have rememb[illegible]nces of times when the kingdom of heaven was brought very nigh, and it seemed [illegible] to enter. All ha[illegible] been met in the journey of life by special providences of the Almighty God, even as Jacob was addressed by the divine voice at Bethel. All have resolved, in moments of tender feeling and awakened conscience, to lead better lives and to walk more closely with God. Let a memorial of such hours and experiences be kept freshly in mind, as if you had graven them upon stone, and set them in your habitation to be ever before you. Go back to the best hour you ever had in all your life, and take it up and bear it with you in the future, as the wind bears the cloud and the cloud bears the rain. Let the promise which pain and poverty or peace and pardon drew from your trembling heart be the memorial of past mercies, and the watchword of duty in the future. And so from all your wanderings you shall come back to a holier sanctuary than Jacob found at Bethel, and to a greater inheritance than his posterity possessed in the land of Canaan.

And this custom of preserving sacred memorials of the past is as appropriate and profitable to communities and nations as to individuals. The people that have no history can have no power. The people that forget the past and dishonor the ashes of their fathers, will leave nothing for others to remember when they are gone. The earth to which the martyrs of truth and liberty have given their blood is holy ground. Pilgrims from far-distant lands go there to weep and to kindle the fire of feelings and purposes with which they inflame the world. The dungeon where the persecuted prisoner has for years trodden the length of his chain backward and forward, until his bare feet have worn a path in the cold stone, becomes a sanctuary and the damp floor an altar, and every mark upon the rocky pavement and mouldering wall appeals from earth to heaven, from man to God.

When Joshua, the captain of the conquering tribes of Israel, had reached a good old age and was about to die, he gathered the chief men of the nation under an oak that stood beside the sanctuary of the Lord in Shechem. There he took a great stone and set it up under the tree, and over it he rehearsed God's marvelous dealings with the nation in bringing them out of Egypt and giving them the goodly land of Palestine. There he made them renew their solemn covenant to put away all strange gods and to serve the Lord alone forever. Then he said, "Behold, this stone shall be a witness unto us. For it hath heard all the words of the Lord which he spake unto us. It shall therefore be a witness unto you, lest ye deny your God." It would have been well for Israel in after years if they had gathered oftener together beneath the quiet shade of that sacred oak in Shechem and listened to the dumb testimony of that witnessing stone against all their departures from the living God.

The rocks have ever been a refuge for the exiled and persecuted benefactors of mankind. When David fled from the face of the demon-haunted Saul, he sought a hiding-place in the rocks. When Jezebel had sworn to make the life of Elijah a sacrifice to her heathen gods within twenty-four hours, the prophet hurried in wild dismay, day and night, over the whole length of the Arabian desert, until he had hidden himself in the rock of Horeb. When the Son of God appeared on earth for the redemption of the world, the first shelter of his feeble infancy was found in a cave of the rocks. When the early Christians were hunted down like wild beasts, they made for themselves homes and sanctuaries in the rocks of the mountains and in stony excavations beneath the surface of the ground.

So the rocks have many times afforded a refuge for men of whom the world was not worthy. In times of darkness and peril the instructors and benefactors of mankind have been found in caverns and dungeons more frequently than in palaces. The rough work of pulling men out of the fire and saving them has not ordinarily been done in silken robes nor with strict attention to the refinements of taste. Rude John Bunyan sent forth a voice from Bedford jail which has compassed the earth in many languages and directed millions of pilgrims on their way to the Heavenly City. In the rocky chamber of the Wartburg, Martin Luther translated the Bible into his native tongue, the rude and strong speech which he learned in the miner's cottage under the shadow of the Thuringian forest; and, putting that wild torchlight into peasants' hands, he scattered the darkness of ignorance and superstition and awoke all Europe from the sleep of ages. In the rocky cave of Bethlehem, Jerome transferred the ancient Scriptures into the living Latin of his time, and so gave utterance to the Word of God for the millions of the world-embracing Roman empire.

Paul is believed by many to have sent forth from the rocky dungeon of the Mamertine prison those great words of faith and victory which for eighteen hundred years have nerved martyrs at the stake and opened heaven to the vision of the dying. The forerunner of Christ cried in the desert, and sent forth a warning voice from the rocks of the wilderness, which awakened in the hearts of the Jewish people renewed expectations of their coming Messiah. And so always, in the great eras of history, the instructors and benefactors of mankind have been banished and imprisoned, and the world has been indebted to caverns and dungeons for voices which have arrested its own progress in the pathway of ruin.

If you would go back to the starting-point of great truths and mighty reformations, you must stand with the shivering band of pilgrims on the bare rock of an ice-bound coast; you must worship with hunted fugitives in the glens and caverns of wild mountains; you must look for Galileo and Bunyan and Bonnivard in the gloom [illegible]; you must go down into the chamber of horrors and see men tortured, not accepting deliverance that they may be faithful to the truth; you must thread the subterranean galleries of the Catacombs, and hear the cheerful songs of men who must hide themselves in the earth because they would be faithful to their Master in heaven; you must stand in the bloody arena and see men torn in pieces by wild beasts, while the applause of a hundred thousand spectators rises hoarse and horrible as the roar of the deep upon a rocky shore. To such sources must we trace the streams that now carry healing and salvation round the earth. The new day of light and liberty has been ushered in by men who were compelled to wander in deserts and mountains and to seek homes in dens and caves of the earth. If we have reason to hope for better things in the future, it is simply because some have been found ready to suffer the loss of all things for the testimony of Jesus in the past. When the sea shall give up its dead in the final day, and deserts shall bear witness to the sufferings and prayers of Christian exiles, it will be seen that many times in the world's history truth found its only refuge in the sanctuary of the mountains and the munitions of the rocks.

It is said in the Scriptures of a good king that he should be as a hiding-place from the wind and a covert from the tempest. Such men are the kings for conscience' sake, monarchs and martyrs in the imperial realm of truth—men who would rather die than do wrong. One such man is a covert from the tempest for millions. It is such kings of righteousness that stand as rock-built lighthouses on the great deep of human passion to guide all wanderers in the safe way.

There is a lighthouse, well known to navigators, [illegible] Channel, standing in so peculiarly exposed a situation, [illegible] can fail to wonder how it keeps its place. After a storm has ceased, and there is not the slightest breeze to ruffle the face of the deep, so strong is the ground swell of the sea against the base of the structure that the waves dash up with a tremendous roar to the full height of the tower, and envelop the topmost light in a canopy of foam. And when the tempest is abroad in its wrath, and the ship flies before the fury of the storm, and eager watchers are waiting the wreck on the shore, then the remorseless deep, as if enraged against the beacon-light which disappoints it of its prey by warning the mariner of the fatal rock, dashes with a still mightier force and louder thunder against that strong-built tower to bury it beneath the waves. And so, night and day, summer and winter, for more than a hundred years, the great deep, with all its force of wind and waves, in breeze and gale and storm, has been mining at the foundations and storming at the battlements of that beacon in vain. It falls not, for it is founded upon a rock. The lonely light-keeper, confident in the tried strength of the column by which his narrow chamber is supported, sleeps sound while the storm roars around him and the multitude of the billows lift up their voices on high. And the mariner, returning from his long voyage to the most distant lands and the uttermost parts of the sea, as confidently expects to see the light of that still shining beacon as he does to recognize the hills and shores of his native land rising to view from the waste of waters. So stands the righteous man resting upon the eternal rock of God's truth—a guide and a covert to many others amid the war of opinion and the tempests of passion with which the earth is shaken. It is only because God has given the world such men in the past that we have peace in our time and the hope of better things for the future. And nothing is so worthy of the loftiest and purest ambition of the human heart as to be able to stand firm as a rock when the strongholds of truth are assailed by many foes, and the sacred interests of humanity are endangered by false or feeble friends.

A lonely, rocky headland standing out from the Grampian Hills in Scotland is called Crag Ellachie. The Clan Grant, whose turf cottages are in sight of its hoary head, have adopted for their war-cry, "Stand fast, Crag Ellachie!" The wild warriors of the hills serving in the armies of England have carried that cry around the world. And every time it runs along the line in making the terrible charge or resisting the fierce attack, the brave Highlanders assume to themselves the steadfastness of the rock which looks down upon their own homes. The remembrance of that rugged and storm-beaten crag has nerved the heart of the Scottish soldier when shivering in the icy wind of the North or fainting in the noon-day heat of tropical climes. Wherever the hour of peril finds him, and his thoughts wander away to the home of his childhood, the cry comes from that hoary rock, "Stand fast!" And so from all the defenders of the truth in all time there comes to us in the hour of trial and temptation the cry, "Stand fast!" The example of their constancy rises up amid all the conflicts of the past, like the rocky headland facing the storm or holding the beacon on the shore of the sea. Let us assume the strength of their faith and courage while we take up the cry that comes to us from far-distant [illegible], and give it new life and power by our fidelity, as we pass it on to all the tried and tempted—"Stand fast."—"Our Father's House."

PERILOUS TIMES.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come."—2 TIM. 3: 1.

That we are living in a time of especial peril, none can deny who are acquainted with the state of things now existing, and who understand the signs of the times. Iniquity abounds; and hence the love of many waxes cold. We ought to be wide awake in [illegible] now; it [illegible]. If [illegible] lived prayerless lives, let us begin to visit the throne of grace, and seek pardon for past indifference, and strength for time to come, and do it with devoted hearts and earnest minds.

How is it with the nominal churches? Pride, folly and fashion have their votaries among church members as much as anywhere. Who dare rebuke sin in high places now? Ministers must preach to suit the people. He may make a fine appearance, or may be very eloquent, and win the favor of the people, but such preaching often fails to reach the hearts of his hearers. What we most need now is men who are constrained by the love of Christ, and love for the perishing; men who shun not to declare the whole counsel of God, and who can speak from experience of the power of God, and thus carry conviction to the heart. The times are perilous because there is such a lack of this. If the devil can get into the church, he will use every effort to promote discord. How was it on the day of Pentecost? They were all gathered together with one accord in one place. And we know how the power of God came down upon them.

The time is near when the "Prince of peace" will reign. God help us to realize the solemnities of the judgment. The world is madly and blindly rushing on; the way-worn pilgrim rejoices that his toils will soon be over. The faithful servant of God, who, like Noah, is forewarning the world of its final doom, is scoffed at, and laughed to scorn. I pity those who are now lulled to sleep by the delusive cry of "Peace and safety." Oh, for a realizing sense of the state of things, and the importance of living by the moment, or we may be found sleeping. If we have been remiss in duty in days gone by, should we not begin now to do the will of Christ? Let us go to work [illegible] burning, and pluck [illegible] day; will we improve them? The closing hours of time are upon us; shall we squander them in idleness?

Lift up the warning voice, watchman, upon the walls of Zion! While the popular church is saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming," as also says the evil servant who makes no profession, let us constantly be on our guard; remembering that "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." We must stand up boldly for the truth, or lose the witness of our acceptance. Now is the time for moral courage. Will we do our duty in the fear of God? With heaven in view, do not be discouraged. Though dangers thicken, we are not left in darkness. We had better be on the Lord's side, if we do have to bear reproach, than to be found on the left hand at last. Jesus made himself of no reputation. Do we deserve better treatment than our Lord and Master? The doctrine of his soon coming is unpopular, but if we neglect to proclaim it for fear of man, we may be lost forever. How strange that any one calling [illegible] a Christian [illegible] dislike to [illegible] coming. [illegible] ell might [illegible] the [illegible] latter-day apostasy [illegible] come." Let the [illegible] the Bridegroom cometh, [illegible] or not. The world must receive its last warning. The true church of Christ is sounding the alarm, and if the warning is unheeded, woe to those who reject the truth. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus.—Prophetic Times.

"BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH!"

BY CHAS. W. WARD.

The great declaration of the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ is given much prominence in the Word of God. That he will come again no sane-minded person can dispute, save they deny the truthfulness of Jehovah's word.

In these last days—these days of "perilous times," of pride, of ignorance and stupidity, there [illegible] many theories abroad relative to the coming of the Son of man. Some believe that he comes in his providences, in famines, pestilences, cyclones, tidal waves, etc.; others think that death (forgetting or not caring to know that Paul calls it the "last enemy"—1 Cor. 15: 26) is the coming of Christ. Admit, then, that he does come at death. To the righteous man he comes, and, as he breathes out his last breath, receives his soul, or really the man himself, and carries him away to the presence of God, to enjoy forever the bliss of heaven. But how is it with the ungodly? Does he come to his couch and take his polluted soul, and carry it to the dark and infernal regions of the damned and hand it over to Satan, who casts it into the fiery abyss to be tormented day and night forever and ever? Such foolish and unscriptural views are held by many well-meaning Christians. But it is readily seen that the theory of death being the coming of Christ is founded upon the notable falsehood and assumption of the natural inherent immortality of man. Take away the foundation, which is immortal-soulism, and the remainder of the structure falls of itself.

There is another class who believe and teach the coming of Christ to be spiritual and invisible, which will come to pass in the conversion of the world. But there is still another class who, more in accordance with the Scriptures than the others, assert that "this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." While there are many Christians who believe in the real, literal, personal coming of Christ, they seem to look upon it with gloomy forebodings, as a day of darkness and terror, and the Scriptures declare that it shall be a day of that character. "Howl ye, for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty." Isa. [illegible] There is in store for this world [illegible] a fiery deluge, which shall come from the hand of the Almighty: "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it." Isa. 13: 9.

It is true the coming of Christ is for some purpose; it is an event which is necessary, and not a mere display of Heaven's royal powers before an astonished and trembling world. Many of the greatest events and occurrences of this world are for a mere empty show, but the God of heaven makes no such random display. Every act of Jehovah has a purpose, and that purpose always ends in the desired result. So the coming of the Son of God is for a purpose. "To lay the land desolate" and to "destroy the sinners thereof out of it" is, we learn from Isaiah, one of the purposes of this coming.

But the question arises, What effect will it have upon Christians—upon those who are waiting for him? Will they be condemned and made to tremble before his presence? Hear the Lord Jesus himself—"I will come again, and receive you unto myself." He is represented in the Scriptures as coming under and in different characters; sometimes as the King of kings and Lord of lords. This character or title is expressive of royalty and power. In Matt. 25: 6 we read of him, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." Now the title of Bridegroom has certain characteristics. It is applied to those who are about to be married. Is marriage an event of darkness, of fear and destruction? It may be considered the most important, the happiest and the grandest epoch of life. The marriage festival is generally the scene of mirth, joy, pleasure and rejoicing. Then Christ our Savior is represented as coming as a Bridegroom. This pre-supposes a marriage and also a bride.

The church, or the true and faithful in the church, are the ones who constitute the bride of Christ. Then we read in Rev. 19: 7-9 of the marriage of the Lamb. From this we understand the relation between Christ and his church is that of the bride and bridegroom. He is said to come after this bride, and receive her unto himself, and take her away, and they are united in marriage. They then become one.

In view of Christ's coming as the Bridegroom it should make all true Christians rejoice and love his appearing. Why is it so many are frightened at the news of his coming? Simply because they have been mistaught, and look upon the coming of Christ as an event of terror and darkness, feeling and believing that they will have to stand before an angry Judge and have all their dark sins paraded before a gazing world. Ah! but it is not so. "He that believeth on Him hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation [or judgment], but is passed from death unto life." The dark scenes of the judgment are for the sinner; but to the believer the Savior says, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." Christ is coming as the Bridegroom to the believer, and surely there is nothing in the character of the Bridegroom to frighten the bride. The coming of Christ will be the brightest event in the life of the Christian, and the darkest to the sinner.

THE HUMAN AND THE DIVINE.

In matters appertaining to the salvation of the soul, both the human and divine are involved, and often so blended together that we cannot separate them, nor can we always discriminate between them. Hence, even the devout and sincere, are continually liable to give too great prominence to that which is human, rather than to that which is divine. All fraternal combinations and associations may be turned to good account, and yet even these may become a snare. Notwithstanding their excellence as incidental aids, if we depend upon them too much, they involve us in difficulty and darkness. It is not well to lean too much on even good men. The best of men may fall away, and when they come to be fully known, may develop some unlooked-for infirmity or defect. Therefore, whoever depends upon man for a model, or for support, will come to grief and disappointment. This is why the prophet of olden time said, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?" We are therefore admonished not to "put our trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help." The Almighty has declared "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord." The Scriptures abound in similar enunciations of the folly and peril of human dependencies. This evil is sometimes manifested in the fact that the worship of God is not enjoyed, unless conducted by some agency which we prefer. In nothing is there such a deplorable proclivity to lean on men as in this. It should never be forgotten, the true object of all religious ceremonies and observances, is to worship God. Moreover, such ceremonies and observances are profitable, simply as they tend to fix the mind and heart upon God alone. All forms of worship are liable to be abused, and substituted for that which they were intended to represent. Hence, in all cases, the more simple and unostentatious such observances are the better. The "Friends," in some respects, have the best modes, in the fact that they have none. Yet even they have experienced the difficulty of which we speak.

External forms are only useful, as they are employed for the purpose of directing our attention to the inward spirit life. All religious associations with men, of whatever kind they may be, are good and profitable, simply to the extent which they may carry us beyond themselves. It matters not, whether it be a favorite preacher, or a special friend, or particular place or mode of worship, or anything else in this line, if we hang thereon, we shall only be hindered and embarrassed in our progress in the deep things of God.

That we may succeed as we should, we must, as far as possible, confine our thoughts to Him who is "mighty to save." In his character and life, we all may find an example it is safe to imitate. His guidance and teaching will always lead us into a place of security and repose. His presence and society will make our paradise, and furnish to us sources of comfort and content, the world can neither "give nor take away." O what liberty, victory and joy they have who are always "looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." In him, no defect or short-coming will ever be discovered. His promises will never be forgotten, and he will delight to dwell with us and in us, and turn all evil into good. All our crosses, losses, sorrows, privations, temptations and trials, he will cause to "work together for our good." In this we may see how important it is to get out of self, away from all human helps, and into God.

Outside of all forms of theological statement, and ecclesiastical affinities and relations, and beyond anything and everything merely external, there is the hidden refuge of the soul, and a "feast of fat things" to be found only there. Every one may have this "fountain of life" in his own soul. Each individual may thus have fellowship with the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Such persons may be in, but they will not be of the world. Of course they will be pronounced fanatics and extremists. The world will not understand them, and half-hearted professors of religion will [illegible] and denounce them. Yet they will have a peace that "passeth all understanding" and a joy unspeakable and full of glory."—Standard.

THE SANCTUARY OF GRIEF.

Grief is a delicate and fragile flower, fading even more easily than joy, but never wholly dead. Like the rose of Jericho, though seemingly dried and withered past recognition, yet, if but one warm breath pass over it for a moment, it will bloom again with renewed freshness. "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful," and those who seem to forget have often the saddest hearts. In each and all of us life is two-fold; two beings dwell within us—one active, busy, absorbed in the duties and pleasures of this world; while the other is sadly and dreamily living in the past, treading with tears the former paths, stopping to remember a look, to pursue a shadow. Yes, even the frivolous man of the world has his memories. A gentle voice re-echoing from the past; one confiding word; one "touch of a vanished hand;" something sudden, unexpected, and lo! the floodgates are opened and the waves of sorrow are rushing over him; his heart beats quick, he seizes once again with a passionate intensity the image of his beloved one,—it is his, it is not dead, and the joyous loving past lives again for him.

But when we see light returning to the eyes that wept when life begins to flow again in its wonted channels, then we are apt to say, "that which is finished is finished, and the memory of the dead has perished forever." Not so. After those first days when the anguish of separation is lacerating the heart, and it cares not to conceal the depth of its wounds, there comes a reaction, an overpowering desire, a craving for isolation; a holy jealousy takes possession of the soul, the gates are barred against intruders, the doors of the chamber of death are sealed, the brow is taught to deny everything, tortures, memories; while within, ah, within! the lamp of sorrow is burning with a[illegible] ardent glow, and many a passing word [illegible] the heart-strings quiver with[illegible] the lips are [illegible] ay, and per[illegible] heart will [illegible] in a sacred still[illegible] est sympathy [illegible] ished forth [illegible] perhaps [illegible] perhaps [illegible] are poured [illegible] springs of [illegible] depth, [illegible] are ring[illegible] even [illegible] would [illegible] cordant [illegible]

LAME[illegible]

BY [illegible]

"Wherefore doth [illegible] plain?"

The most illus[illegible] some point in the[illegible] complaining or murmur[illegible] day of his birth, and so did Jeremiah. [illegible] less we are fully sanctified, and Christ dwells in our hearts, we shall murmur [illegible] the dispensations of Providence. Then how necessary to have our wills, thoughts and feelings all swallowed up in the will of God. How necessary that we be baptized by the Holy Ghost, and have our conversation in heaven.

If we are Christians indeed and in truth, we shall be earnestly desiring the fulfilling of all the prophecies and all the precious promises of God; we shall be looking for the Messiah, not to come again as a suffering victim, but as the rightful Ruler of this earth. We shall behold him as a conqueror, and invested with regal dignity. We are told that the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and to this end we devoutly pray, "Thy kingdom come." Oh[illegible] day, [illegible] will see this earth mad[illegible] [illegible] like the ange[illegible] [illegible] we shall endeav[illegible] [illegible] and help to [illegible] evil habits. In our [illegible] strive [illegible] we can never conquer; we must [illegible] the Holy Spirit to help our infirmities, and teach us how to pray.

[illegible] Almighty knew that in this world of sin and [illegible] we should be discouraged, tried and [illegible], and therefore he bids us remember how the old Jews murmured, and the earth opened [illegible] they were buried, and also that the plague [illegible] and destroyed them. Every Christian kno[illegible] by experience what to do in the hour of temptation. He must seek divine counsel and strength, and never yield the battle to the enemy. It is the little vexatious acts and petty things of earth that irritate and annoy. How necessary then to flee to the stronghold; to get our Lord to help us carry the heavy load. He can make it light and pleasant, and cause the heart to thrill with joy. He is a present help in every time of trouble. Does not God pity us in our weakness, remembering that we are but dust, and has he not promised divine protection and guidance?

When we get to the end of the race we shall know why it was necessary for us to pass through so much trouble and discipline. It was to wean and purify our natures, and fit us for the kingdom of God. This will go on until we are complete in Christ, and without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. None of us are exempt from these trials; they are incident to the flesh and the conditions of this mortal life. As we are now living in the last days, we may expect a great influx of wickedness, and this will appear not so much among the openly wicked, but also among professors of religion. They are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, heady, high-minded, having a form of godliness, but denying its power; disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection. The apostle Jude speaks very plainly of these characters, and calls them "murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts."

The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. He is even at the door. He is the Judge of quick and dead. Very soon we shall hear his voice. He cometh to judge the earth with righteousness and with his truth. Are you ready? Have you made any preparation for that event, or are you without oil in your vessels, or are you among the wise or foolish virgins?

THE JOY OF SERVICE.

He who wants the joys of Christ's service must first be in Christ's service. Consecration must precede comfort in the believer's life. He must look to Jesus for direction, before he calls on him for assistance. His first thought in the morning must be, What can I do for my Master? not, What can my Helper do for me? So long as he is looking at Jesus merely as one to give him help, and comfort, and peace, he will fail to find what he looks for. But when he looks at Jesus as one whom he loves, and lives for, and is ready to die for; as one whose badge of service he is proud of, and whom he enjoys doing anything and everything for,—then he will have health and comfort and peace, according to the order of nature in all devoted service, and according to the specific and unfailing word of Jesus in this particular sphere.—Sunday School Times.

A NEW YEAR.

[illegible] ow enter upon the seventh official [illegible] Editor of the Crisis. [illegible] ave very [illegible] y desired and [illegible] ould be [illegible] to be [illegible] m the responsibility, excessive [illegible] ing trials to which the posi[illegible] us. But we did in our hearts give [illegible] se into the hands of Him who compre[hends the circum]stances the situation, the peculiar circu[mstances] surrounding his church, the ex[treme] dangers to which the waiting B[ride] is exposed, the necessity of a faith[ful] proclamation of the gospel of the kin[gdom], and waited, confidently expecti[ng th]at circumstances would make manif[est] the Divine Will to which we coven[ant]ed with God we would submit. As the representatives of that part of Christ's Church which we especially serve decided very unanimously that it is our duty to occupy the Editorial Chair the coming year, we receive their decision as the voice of the Lord calling us to serve the cause of our Redeemer in this trying and responsible position the coming year.

We have never commenced an official year with so deep a sense of the difficulties of the position, the sacredness of the trust, the interests involved, and the accountability incurred, as at the present time. God's servants have been called many times to lead his church through threatening perils to severe tests of faith, and to occupy dizzy heights of prophetic positions; but never have they been called of God to proclaim so important a message, to invite the church to so severe a test of faith and to such an elevated position of Christian experience—a fitness for translation—as at the present time.

The Editor of The World's Crisis certainly occupies a position of fearful responsibility. He speaks directly every week to about fifty thousand people and indirectly to millions. He who fills the chair should be a man of God, sanctified and holy, elevated above human ambition which seeks for fame and wealth, and above party strife, sectarian bigotry, or self-indulgence. The paper should not be allowed to publish that which is designed as a retaliation for supposed or real injury, personal accusations, or to magnify or present sarcastically, the errors of others. But it should present the truth as being so strongly supported, so beautiful and important, that error will appear in contrast so unsupported, deformed and useless that unbelievers will voluntarily dismiss the error and heartily embrace the truth. The Crisis should constantly, prominently, kindly and unwaveringly publish "present truth," the signs of the times and the infinite necessity of a preparation of heart for speedy translation. It should be a faithful exponent of all gospel truth, but constantly present as the great head light of the train, bearing this generation to the last judgment, "the gospel of the kingdom," which witnesseth for God that the day of doom approacheth.

These are solemn and awful responsibilities. Who is sufficient for such sacred duties? We tremblingly accept the mandate of the Great Head of the Church, and bow before the altar of Deity to receive the trust, the qualifications and needed assistance. We have devoutly covenanted with our God, the Association, and do now with all our readers, that by the grace of Him who dwelt in the bush, granted in answer to the prayers of his people, we will truly and faithfully employ the ability we have to perform the duties above suggested for the coming year of grace. Should the year be cut short by death or the glorious revelation of the Bridegroom, we hope to be found at our post of duty, watching with arms in hand to receive from the Captain of the Lord's hosts an honorable discharge. We earnestly entreat all the faithful in Christ to pray for us, that we may be found giving the household of faith meat in due season when the Master shall appear. J. C.

ENDURANCE.

To endure is to bear; to suffer; to continue to suffer privation or distress without complaint or an effort to be relieved. It implies consent or willingness to suffer, which is produced by a sense of blessings resulting from the endurance.

A man will endure a painful surgical operation, believing it will result in the salvation of his life. So it is in Christian experience. The martyrs suffered protracted tortures, being confident that patient suffering with Christ would end in triumphant glory with him. In fact Christian integrity and patience is tested by endurance in trial.

To accomplish this proof of character in every believer God has provided that all must endure self-denial and cross-bearing every day. It was necessary therefore to require all to do that, and occupy such a position as would be contrary to our natural inclinations, thus demanding a constant endurance of abstinence from that which the flesh unlawfully lusteth after, in all our habits and associations in life. This endurance is not only required to bear the common burdens of self-denial, but also of dispensational and special persecutions.

God's people in all ages have been despised and rejected of the world and a worldly church, tempted by Satan, and worried by the lusts of the flesh, so that a constant warfare has been their lot, requiring the grace of endurance at all times.

Whenever God has called his people to advance into a new position or proclaim a newly developed truth, they have been called to endure new and special trials of faith and opposition from the world and that part of the church which refuses to advance out of the old theological ruts made by the schools, or leave the frigid regions of ritualism, where they have drifted in the currents of popular and worldly aspirations. No man or class of men ever attempted to proclaim a newly developed truth or establish by divine authority a new dispensation of grace without meeting combined and murderous opposition from an infidel world and a lifeless church. The true testimony of God always denounces the sins of the present generation and attempts to lead the church into the position required by God's Word to be occupied at that present time. Such testimony can never fail to produce antagonism in all who are not walking with God as did Enoch.

Walking implies advancement; progression; from one place to another; from one position to another; from faith to faith. God advances by the presence of his grace and Spirit, and the application of "present truth," from dispensation to dispensation, from the bestowment of special blessings and the execution of specific judgments, down through the annals of human probation, and the dark history of sin and the Satan's batteries are always opened on this long line of storm and battle, where the Divine Presence and true church is found, so that the loyal people of God who walk with him have from the beginning of this warfare between truth and error had to endure reproach and death for Christ and the truth's sake. Noah, Lot and Moses nobly stood up in the heat of this battle, each in his day, and fought for the inspiration and special importance of present truth, against which the world, the flesh and the devil, have ever been uncompromising antagonists.

The Scriptures clearly teach that the last of these battles will be fought as the closing scene of the gospel age, and that it will be the most fearful contest of a six thousand years' war. Satan will come in "great wrath, knowing that he hath but a short time," and make a last desperate charge upon the "remnant" of Christ's church. It is represented as the "hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world," to try the faith and patience of God's people. It is the time of which Jesus said, "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

Is the church of God now passing through that hour? and is Satan now bringing into line of battle his last reserves? and does the din and wail of battle now sound at every point on the lines? Is the courage and loyalty of the veterans of the cross now tested as severely as at any time since Eve tasted the prohibited fruit? We most solemnly believe that it is so, and that the servants of Christ now commissioned to lead the hosts of the Lord are required to encourage the weary, fainting soldiers of the Great King to endure the trials of disappointment and conflict a little longer, when complete and eternal victory will be gained, and the glories and blessedness of Messiah's kingdom be forever enjoyed. "EVERLASTING FATHER."

Dear Bro. Sheldon:—I heard a preacher say a few days ago that if Christ actually died, heaven was without a God three days. Proof: Isa. 9: 6—"He is called the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father"; claiming that he is very and eternal God. Please explain through the Crisis in what sense he is the "Everlasting Father," and why called, the "Mighty God." Your explanation will be thankfully received and read with pleasure.

Yours in love, JOSEPH HAMILTON.

REPLY.

Christ is called the "Everlasting Father," not in the sense of being his own Father, but in the sense of being the "Father of the age," as the text is sometimes rendered. Christ is God, for "unto the Son he [the Father] saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever" (Heb. 1: 8); but he is God the Son, or Son of God, instead of being his own Son. The Son could die, while the Father remained alive. As Adam is the father of the mortal race of men, so Christ is counted the Father of the immortal race, being the "second Adam," and the first one changed to an immortal state from among the dead. Christ stands at the head of the immortalized race; through him flows eternal life. "The gift of God is eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ." W. S.

QUERY.

"ABSENT FROM THE BODY,"—"DESIRE TO DEPART AND BE WITH CHRIST."

Mr. William Sheldon:—Dear Sir: Don't know whether you are a preacher or not, but suppose you are. Have read your articles in the Crisis, "Does Death Kill," and "The Great Judgment," besides many other productions from your pen; but I have been particularly interested with the two mentioned, and think they are unanswerable by those who maintain that a dead man is alive, and that in fact, according to their theory, there never has anybody died since the creation; only the old shanty in which they lived has died. Will you please give an exposition of the first nine verses of 2nd Cor. 5; also the 21st, 22nd, 23d and 24th verses of the first chapter of Philippians? Wish you God speed in your labor. May God raise up more men to declare without fear a whole gospel—men having fai[th in] the teaching of the blessed old Boo[k she] reads. I was educated to believe that wh[en a] person died he at once knew everything; but I now believe that "the dead know not anything"; and the blessed hope I now have is sweet to my soul; it is my meditation by day and by night in all my waking hours. Oh! the coming of Christ, the saints' inheritance, the resurrection of the dead, and the reward which will then be given. Hail, happy day! and may God hasten it in his own time.

Yours truly, T. E. WILSON.

Bethel, Vt., July 15th, 1879.

REPLY.

Having so fully examined these texts in "Life Beyond Death" and "The Disembodied State," we will here only paraphrase them.

1. "We look not at the present things which are seen, but at the future things which are unseen; for the present things which are seen are temporal, but the future things which are not seen are eternal. Because we know that if our earthly home of this temporal state were dissolved by the fire of the last day, we have a New Jerusalem building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in its nature, now reserved in the heavens. For in this temporal state we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this temporal state do groan, being burdened with mortality: not because we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of eternal life. Now God hath made us for this self-same thing, who also hath given us the first-fruits of the Spirit. For the reason that mortality is to be swallowed up of life, we are always confident, knowing that while we are at home in the mortal body, before mortality is swallowed up, we are absent from the Lord (for in this mortal state we walk by faith, not by sight): we are confident, I say, that mortality [shou]ld be swallowed up of life: and willing rather to [illegible] from the mortal body, and to be present with the Lord. Therefore we labor, that, whether thus present or absent, we may be accepted of him." 2 Cor. 5: 1-9.

2. "As always in the past, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death. For to me to live is to magnify Christ, and to die is gain in escaping persecution. But if I live in the flesh this is the fruit of my labor; yet which I shall choose I know not. For I am in a strait between the two, while rather having a desire to depart by translation, and to be with Christ; which is far better than to live in persecution, or to escape it by dying: nevertheless, to abide in the flesh, instead of being translated, is more needful for you. And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you, instead of being translated, for your furtherance." Phil. 1: 20-25.

In these texts the apostle says not a word about being absent from the body at death, but at the time mortality is to be swallowed up of life,—at the resurrection. Nor does he speak about having the soul depart, but Paul himself desired to depart, though he tells us he did not expect to. David once expressed a desire to fly over the heads of his enemies into the wilderness, to obtain rest; but he did not expect his desire would be realized. So Paul desired translation, though he did not expect it then. W. S.

NEW NONSENSE.

"Deceiving and being deceived" is still a feature in the devil's system of progression—progression from bad to worse. This fact is being demonstrated in Wisconsin as well as elsewhere, where a new candidate for notoriety is claiming public attention, by the [illegible] the Peter, and to have been once crucified with his head downward, and that he is soon to be the controller of this universe—the future King of earth. The following is an extract from a circular which he scatters where he preaches:

"Question. Who is 'The Coming Man,' that is so much talked of?

Answer. He is 'the Son of man,' spoken of in Matt. 25: 31, etc.

Q. Who is 'the Son of man'?

A. He is man's son, for whom the Son of God suffered and died.

Q. To what nation and people does he belong?

A. He is an American by birth, and a mongrel of Jewish origin.

Q. In which of the States was he born?

A. He is a native of West Virginia.

Q. How old is he at present?

A. He was born on the 17th of February, 1826, and is now in the fifty-fourth year of his age.

Q. Where did he receive his early education?

A. Twenty-three years of his life was spent in American slavery, and seven in English prisons.

Q. In what does he differ from other men?

A. He differs from other men in faith and spiritual understanding.

Q. Of what church has he been member?

A. He was a member of the M. E. Church in the State of Virginia; when as a fugitive in Canada, he was a member of the A. M. E. Church, but at present he does not belong to any of the 666 so-called churches of the age.

Q. How may persons inform themselves in regard to the faith and spiritual understanding of 'The Son of Man'?

A. By reading his writings, which at present consist of [illegible] publications, on the most imp[ortant] [illegible] of the age."

He is preachi[ng] [illegible] localities, and of course a [illegible] to hear him. He is caref[ul] [illegible] up a [illegible] at each meeting, e[illegible] intent o[illegible] well till he receives his crown. W. S.

MISSION WORK IN MAINE.

My first effort in the Tract and Mission work was on the 29th of June. I started for Bro. Libby's in Litchfield to have an evening meeting; but a thunder shower came up and we did not have any. Next morning (Sunday) I left some tracts for him to distribute, and then started for Sabattus in a rain storm; preached to them twice on that day, and a goodly number were out. The little church here is striving, in the midst of the perils of the last days, to let their light shine. They gave $7.25 for the Mission and Tract cause.

From there I went home to make arrangements to go with Bro. George W. Weeks to Washington, to hold a Fourth of July meeting. So on the third of July I started for Washington, and arrived at Bro. Thomas Dearing's at four o'clock, and then walked two miles to Washington Centre, where the meeting was appointed, and stopped at Bro. Farrar's, where I found Brn. H. Hemenway and Edward M. Andrews, who came to help in the meeting. At Washington Centre Bro. Farrar's family are all that believe in our faith; the rest are Free Baptists and Methodists. But they had a kind spirit, and gave us the liberty to go into their house of worship to have our meetings, and quite a large number came in and worshiped with us. The result of the meeting was, three made a start, some were revived and one was baptized. We trust lasting good was done, but we leave it till the judgment.

From there we have preached in Newcastle, St. George, Bowdoin and Bowdoinham. We are now making arrangements to have a tent meeting at Warren, to commence on the 7th of August and hold over Sunday. Pray for us.

H. S. MITCHELL, Tract and Mission Agent.

IN THE FIELD.

Visited Dayton July 27th, in company with Sister M. E. King, who preaches here once in four weeks. This is a new but rich farming country. I found a home with Bro. Ames, who with his companion are doing what they can to save men. The fruit of their labors is apparent. This field is white for the harvest. There should be a meeting of days held there.

August 3d, came to Big Prairie. As we came in sight of the Pine Log meeting-house, situated in the brush, we wondered where the people were to come from; but there was a house full of attentive listeners. God helped to preach. Praise his name!

Wednesday, August 6th, preached at the Crab Tree school-house. This is a new country. Found eager listeners. It is truly a marvel where so many people come from; but when we remember that six and eight miles is not a great way for the people to go to meeting, the mystery is solved. It is a [illegible] word.

August 10th, I was at Big Prairie again. The rain kept some away, nevertheless we had two good meetings in the name of the Lord. Hope to meet some of this tried people in God's kingdom soon. Found a hospitable home with Sister Barton, who kindly cared for all my wants; and I find the blessed promise true—"No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." Praise the Lord, O my soul!

Came to Croton on Tuesday evening,—a little village distant seven miles. Found one who heard of a soon coming King in '43, whose heart still yearned for her absent Lord. A fair audience came out to hear, and listened with marked attention while we endeavored to locate the time of the reward and the home of the saints. They have a nice house of worship here, but no regular meetings. I believe with judicious management this town might be taken, in the name of the Lord, and victory turned on Zion's side. God grant that it may be so.

HOME.

BY W. J. WARNER.

We love home, and it is right that we should. To home influence will be accredited the salvation of many a soul in the reckoning day; and were it not for the prayers that arise from hearts that sympathize as only parents and companions can, the pathway would often seem more thorny and the clouds darker. The thought that mother prays has sent many a thrill of joy and ray of light to the pilgrim's heart.

I left my home in Vermont, May 19th, for Jesus' and the gospel's sake, and the thought was not without weight that when we met again it might be to stand before our God to hear the welcome "Come," or the sentence "Depart." And the thought still [illegible] separated, soon the morning will dawn, and then together we shall go home never again to be torn from the embrace of those we love.

After nine weeks of visiting and labor in Northern New York, I came to Wisconsin, arriving Aug. 3rd. It was not for pleasure or profit that I came, but because the love of Christ constrained me in obedience to the conviction that it was his will. I came by boat, and was some sea sick, and I am thinking that sea sickness is not altogether unprofitable; and if some of us could get sick enough of riding on the foaming billows of sin, on time's troubled sea, as to give us a thorough cleansing from self-love and worldly ambition, we would find ourselves more healthy Christians and better prepared to eat and relish the food that cometh down from heaven, and to manifest more of the vigor of true Christianity.

They were not long in getting me to work here, as I arrived Sunday morning and spoke at three and eight P. M. for Baptist and Methodist brethren. I expect I have found a warm-hearted people, and [illegible] they are as re[illegible] they [illegible] be eager to [illegible] bountiful ha[illegible] man for his la[illegible] would be as eager [illegible] of truth that come f[illegible] they are to harvest the[illegible] that nothing be lost, they would certainly have a treasure laid up in heaven.

A thought comes to me on the wings of faith, laden with the sweet meats of joy and peace, that while as message-bearers we have to leave all, we can find a home, an abiding-place, in the will of God. Here under the shadow of the Almighty we can find rest and quietness. The Lord says, "My people shall dwell in a peacable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting-places."

O what a privilege, amid the hurry and bustle of a thoughtless throng, to be quietly and peacefully resting in the Lord! And when clouds darken our pathway, to have the assurance within that all is well. O the unspeakable privilege of communing with God as friend with friend! He that is alone with God certainly has good company; and if we would oftener be content to "wait upon the Lord," we should find ourselves better fitted for the dark hours and many trials of this life. We need all the strength that grace affords to stand amidst these last day perils, that finally we may, having done all, stand at God's right hand clothed in immortality.

THE TRUMPET OF ALARM.

Rev. M. A. Fox, at Oregon, Wis., recently preached a sermon which embodied his views of the future. He says of the rising storm: "As a minister of Christ, thankful for the privilege of being his witness, and charged in his providence with the ministration of the gospel in this place, I deem it my duty to sound an alarm, and warn the people of what they may expect. Let no one be deceived; the strong delusion of the latter days will prevail to an extent little thought of. The belief of the lie of those days will wonderfully obtain ascendancy. The 'unclean spirits like frogs,' going out to the whole world will arouse to a conflict, which will force the conviction of an antagonism involving strategy and skill, and power and intensity, beyond the conception of the many, who, vainly dreaming of progress and advancement to a golden age, will find instead the blackest and thickest storm. It is quite possible that in the views I present I may be regarded as a visionary enthusiast, proclaiming what some have caricatured as the 'gospel of despair;' be it so; we cannot put darkness for light, nor mistake bitter for sweet. There may be a few, however, who will give my words a passing consideration, and if these few live a very few years, when they shall be in the midst of the storm, my words will have weight.

"Bitter opposition to Christ and to Christ's people is becoming so clamorous, and so bold, that we are compelled to recognize it. We do not intend, however, to engage in discussions with these scorners; we think the very best refutation of their principles is the practical working of those principles; 'the tree is known by its fruit.' In the columns of the leading papers, in public lectures in the obtruded volume, are violent and bitter attacks upon the Bible, upon the church and its ministry, which convince us that we are now in the intense wickedness that Revelation has assured us shall mark the latter day; and to this fact we would fain arouse attention, and to the duty to which Christ's witnesses are immediately [illegible]

LAWYERS.

BY C. P. DOW.

The legal profession is one of the learned professions. Lawyers have become a sort of necessary evil. Why complain? they are producers (?) of vexatious and costly lawsuits. The Italian proverb is appropriate to the case. Going to law, which means to employ and pay a lawyer to help you to get your rights, is, with them, to "sell a cow for a cat." And it is so with both sides in every case. The winning side gets sorely beat—by the lawyers, who usually manage to pocket the money; and if there is none then there is no case.

Jesus said, "Woe unto you, lawyers," or expounders of the law. He spake of those who had to do with God's law. But that law was the civil code of the Jews; so the case did not differ much from what it is now. Lawyers now have to do with the civil code, and it makes a difference which side they are on with their pleading. It is deemed to be their duty to help their client, and so, if their adversary has just claims, they, with all their tact and shrewdness, "make the worse appear the better reason," and do their best and utmost to defeat justice.

What about the consciences of such a class? War is said to be a school of vice. What about the legal profession? But the lawyers are well dressed and respectable! So the miller might be said to have fat hogs, but it might not be said whose grain they were fattened upon.

But we must not indiscriminately reproach the lawyers; there are good men and true among them. Necessary evils; and a large number of them are required, as the following table from the Albany Law Journal will show: In 1877 New York had 5,913; [illegible] Illinois, [illegible] Missouri, 2,683; Ohio, 2,563; Indiana, 1,663; Massachusetts, 1,270; Connecticut, 391; New Jersey, 888; Virginia, 1,075; California, 1,115; Kentucky, 1,552; Rhode Island, 163; Delaware, 84; Vermont, 72; all the territories, 56. In the several large cities, thus: New York, 1,283; Philadelphia, 992; New Orleans, 310; Newark, 118; Jersey City, 115; Cincinnati, 294; Chicago, 629; St. Louis, 594; San Francisco, 433; Washington, 370; Brooklyn, 729; Buffalo, 176; Boston, 343; Baltimore, 342. How much talent, study and means are thus devoted as expressed by the above figures!

Let all the statistics for the civilized world be put down, and it would sum up a host. Sin as a cause, and wrong doing as the result, has produced the occasion for this army of talkers and counselors. Rampant crime gives them business, and money is their reward. No need of this class in the great and good future. One final court,—from it no appeal. No advocate but Christ will affect the decisions of that tribunal. Christ will then cease pleading, and no well-trained lawyer will have a hearing. Solemn day! How great a change! Some lawyers may stand there justified, and others condemned. So with all classes. Certainly, except they repent they with less honorable sinners will perish. Let the lawyers believe on and obey Christ.

SIXTEEN new cases of yellow fever were reported Sept. 1st at Memphis.

"LIFT UP YOUR HEADS."

BY J. A. BARNEY.

Who spake these words? Christ spoke them to his disciples. For whose benefit were they spoken? In a certain sense they were intended to enlighten his immediate disciples. They were looking for the end of this world to take place during their age, or life, and often confounded it with the destruction of Jerusalem. To this class he would show that many things would come to pass prior to the final destruction of temporal things. He could look beyond these eighteen hundred years which are now in the past, in which events foretold by the prophets would in their appointed order come to pass, and see the condition of this present generation, which would be upon the earth in the closing days; and in his wisdom gave to his disciples these words as recorded in Luke 21: 25, 26,—"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

These verses are so plain they need no explanation. Having taken his Word as our chart and guide, we may know where we are, viz., in the days which Christ here refers to. To the world these are days of wonderment. Truly, men are "looking after those things which are coming upon the earth." Many professed Christians also are led to wonder, not having accepted the plain teachings of the Bible.

For our encouragement Christ spoke these words, that they might be recorded by his disciples, and handed down to us for our guide. Let us who know this truth teach it to others. Christ is not here to tell it to the people, but he has left it on record, and commissioned us to sound the truth. These days of peril bring with them glorious promises in the future. Then let us "lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh." According to his Word there is to be a time, just previous to his coming, when Christians will anxiously look for Christ to bring deliverance to his people. The world at large will also want deliverance, but will look to the only arm which can bring it. Let us remember that the Author of these words rules present events.

Obituaries.

PILCHER. Mrs. Anna B. Pilcher died suddenly of heart disease at Elizabeth, Jo Davis Co., Ill., Aug. 2d, 1879, in the sixty-seventh year of her age.

She had long been a reader of the Crisis, and a firm believer in the faith it advocates. She first made a profession of religion in the Old School Baptist Church (1833), being the same church to which her husband, Bro. Peyton Pilcher, then belonged. They both subsequently embraced the Advent faith, she in 1850, and since that time the doctrine of the second coming has been very dear to her as well as to her husband. Her death was very sudden, but as she waited for the coming of the Lord, we feel assured that death did not find her unprepared. She was a woman of most excellent qualities, and highly esteemed in the community where she resided. She loved the place of prayer, and her voice was heard in her accustomed place in the prayer meeting only the evening before the day on which she died. Her funeral was largely attended. The services were [held] in the M. E. Church of Elizabeth, assisted by the Pastor of the church. She leaves a husband, several children, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. Surely "the memory of the just is blessed." COM.

AYER. In Atkinson, Me., June 17th, 1879, of heart disease, at the residence of her step-daughter, Mrs. Newell Cushing, Sister Ruth Jane, wife of Bro. James Ayer, of Milo, aged fifty-five years.

About three weeks before her death she left home with her husband to visit his daughter, and was there prostrated by a severe attack of her malady, from which she never recovered. She leaves an aged companion now, the third time bereaved, and three children by a former husband, to mourn their irreparable loss. Sister Ayer professed faith in Christ when about fourteen years of age, but, like many others, only endured for a short time. She tried to persuade herself for many years that all mankind would finally be saved; still she had no assurance, but instead doubts and fears. She first became interested in the true gospel hope by hearing Bro. Hemenway at Dover, Me. She saw the truth, believed and confessed it, and was baptized by Bro. Thomas Smith, who now sleeps in Jesus. She has ever been a faithful, devoted and affectionate Christian wife and mother. To know was to love and respect her. The church and community sustain a great loss in the death of our dear sister. Funeral services by the writer. O. S. FRENCH.

ALEXANDER. At Sandy Hill, N. Y., April 13th, 1879, James Alexander, aged eighty-five years.

Bro. A. was born in Brighton, England. Early in life he sought the Lord, and found him precious to his soul. He united with the Baptists, and came to this country in 1836, soon after. He heard this "gospel of the kingdom," accepted it, and became a bold advocate and defender of the truth, for which, with ten others, he was turned out of the church of his early choice. He then united with the Advent Church in this place, and was ever noted for his faithfulness in his Master's cause and his exemplary walk in life. He died as he had lived, with perfect confidence in the blessed hope. Funeral services were held in the A. C. Church, and although very stormy, and without a relative to mourn his departure, a large congregation assembled to testify to his excellence. The [illegible] the 15th of 1st Cor. CHAS. A. PHELPS.

KENYON. In River Point, R. I., July 31st, 1879, Sr. Esther F. Kenyon, wife of Mr. John Kenyon, aged thirty years.

Sr. Kenyon found Jesus some two years ago last January, under the labors of the writer. Since that time she has lived a faithful Christian. Although death has seized her as a victim, yet she looked with good assurance for that "blessed hope," when Jesus will come and death be swallowed up in victory, and she come forth to eternal life. She will be missed in her family, in the church of Christ, and by all who were acquainted with her. May sustaining grace be imparted to the husband and family, and her large circle of friends who mourn her loss. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Jer. 31: 16.

"We shall sleep, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet to part, no, never,
On the resurrection morn." J. MIXTY.

CORNELL. At Sandy Hill, N. Y., June 24th, 1879, Lucy M. Cornell, aged fifty-eight years.

While in girlhood Sr. Cornell gave her heart to the Lord. After her removal to Sandy Hill, some twenty-five years ago, she embraced the Advent faith, and united with the church of which, to the time of her decease, she was ever an ornament and an example to those that are without. She left a husband and several children to mourn and sorrow, but not as those without hope, for she sleeps in Jesus, awaiting his return to call her to life. May those she left so follow her example that they with her may be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so ever be with the Lord. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at her funeral from Ps. 30: 5. CHAS. A. PHELPS.

BARD. In Oxford, Maine, Aug. 13th, 1879, of consumption, Mrs. Sarah S. Bard, aged thirty-two years. Sermon by the writer. Text, 1 Cor. 15: 22. JARED WHITMAN.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 25. Reports have reached Tchikislar from the portion of Gen. Lazareff's command which advanced to Tchat, that mortality of fully [illegible] per cent. prevails among the troops from fever and dysentery. Water can [only] be obtained from wells thirty-five versts apa[rt].

Vienna, Aug. 28. The object of the [visit of the] Czarewitch to Sweden is to endeav[or to induce] that King to maintain neutrality in ev[ent of seri]ous complications with the Panslavists [illegible] that the Czarewitch has already [illegible] sought the support of the two great pow[ers].

Japan. Cholera continues virulent [illegible] signs of abatement within the preced[ing] [illegible] far there have been 45,000 attacks [illegible] deaths. The Government displays un[usual en]ergy in confronting and checking th[e disease.] The Emperor has given $70,000 from his p[rivate] funds in aid of sanitary measures.

Washington, Aug. 29. Much anxiety is expressed at the headquarters of the National Board of Health with regard to the state of affairs in New Orleans. The fever seems to be spreading and is in a dangerous locality. The National Board has received a telegraphic request from New Orleans and this afternoon sent $10,000 to the health authorities of the State, to be used in the work of isolation and disinfection. The National Board also telegraphed Dr. Bemiss to spare no effort to stamp out the disease, if possible.

Should the fever continue to spread, New Orleans will be shut in under the rules of the Board, very much as Memphis is now. It will not be practicable to empty New Orleans or establish camps, as has been done at Memphis, but there is much reason to hope that the disease may be more perfectly controlled by sanitary measures in the former city than in the latter.

Vermont Conference and Campmeeting.

The Vermont Annual A. C. Conference and Campmeeting will be held at Bethel, Vt., commencing Sept. 6th, and continue until the 15th. Brethren E. A. Stockman, H. L. Hastings, A. A. Phelps and others are expected to be present to preach the Word. It is desired that all the churches connected with this Conference will send one delegate, and that as many members of the Conference as can will be on the ground Monday, so that our business may be done the first of the meeting. Those coming over the Central Vermont R. R. and Montpelier & Wells River R. R. will pay full fare, and receive free return checks of the Secretary on the ground. Those wishing to [illegible] their orders for lumber to be[fore the] meeting commences. Board can be had on the ground or at private houses at reasonable rates, or provision will be furnished as last year. Horse-keeping can be had at reasonable rates of the neighboring farmers near the ground. Let as many as can, come prepared to board the preachers, so as to save as much expense as possible to the meeting. Those who have not paid their pledges for the interest of this meeting, and all other missionary purposes, will do a great favor if they will do so at or before the meeting. Those wishing to do business with the Christian, Crisis or Banner, will also have the opportunity at the meeting. Now let there be much fervent prayer offered to God for his blessing upon the Camp-ground. Let as many as feel the need go forward for prayers before they come to Bethel, so they can work for others. We expect a good time in the Lord at this meeting.

A. L. DINSMORE, Secretary.
A. DAMON, President.

NOTICE.—The next Annual Meeting of the Advent Christian Conference for the State of Kansas will be held in the North Western Evangelical District No. 2, commencing Thursday, Sept. 25th. It is about half way between Clifton, Washington Co., and Clyde, Cloud Co., Kan., on Dry Creek, in Washington Co. A Campmeeting will be held in connection. People coming by R. R. can inquire at Clifton for Bro. G. P. Boutwell; at Clyde for Bro. James Hayes. Wood, water and hay will be provided on the ground; also the State and District tent and a cook-house with stoves will be there for the accommodation of all.

Churches and ministers will please take notice and report by letter or delegates; if by letter, direct to me, at Clyde, Cloud Co., Kan. Come, all who can, as this may be the last Annual Meeting we will have. Come with the Spirit of the Master, praying that good may be done in the name of the Lord. THOS. R. COMSTOCK, Evangelist of District No. 2.

An Appeal for New York.

Dear Brn and Srs. of Central and Western New York:—There was some two hundred dollars pledged at the Annual Conference in Lockport, two years ago, for Tent Meetings and general missionary work, that remains unpaid. Our treasury is nearly empty. There are calls for Tent Meetings, and no means to push them forward. I ask in behalf of the Conference, Shall the tent remain housed for want of means to carry it into new fields, where the people so much need to hear the great truths so dear to us? I ask you who have pledged money for that purpose what you think of it? Have you done your duty? Can you look the perishing in the face at the day of judgment? Have you washed your own skirts? You that have subscribed and have not paid, and desire to fulfill your obligations, and so help keep the tent in the field, can send the money to me, and I will duly acknowledge the same.

A. P. MOORE, Treasurer, Alexander, Genesee Co., N. Y.

Campmeeting.

THE Mechanic Falls Campmeeting will commence Saturday, August 30th, and hold over two Sabbaths. Able preachers are expected. The Grand Trunk, Buckfield, and Main Central Rail Roads have granted us one fare for round trip from all their principal stations. The Ogdensburg Road will give a return ticket from Brownfield. The boarding house and stable will be run by the Committee. Board will not exceed 25 cts. per meal except on Sundays. All net proceeds will be used towards the support of the meeting.

There are some repairs to be made. Will the brethren, who can, be on the ground Aug. 29th and help. This may be our last gathering at Mechanic Falls Camp-ground, and let us come in the name of the Lord, leaving all our troubles, prejudices and jealousies at home. Let love rule, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, and labor for the salvation of lost men. JARED WHITMAN, for Committee.

NOTICE.—The fourth Quarterly Meeting of the North Western Evangelical District No. 2 of Kansas will be held with the A. C. Church at the Hill school-house in Republic Co., Kansas, about three miles north-east of Belleville, commencing Aug. 28th. All churches will please send their delegates, as officers are to be elected for the coming year, also delegates to the State Conference. Elders of churches will please remember one of the articles of our By-laws, as we will need some funds then. Ministers, please report by your presence, or by letter if impossible to be there. All who have pledged money for the buggy or tent, please bring or send it along. Come one, come all, with the Spirit. The District Tent will be pitched on the occasion.

THOS. R. COMSTOCK, District Evangelist.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Conference of Northern Illinois will hold its Annual Campmeeting at Rochelle, Ogle Co., Ill., commencing Saturday evening, August 30th, and hold over two Sabbaths. We expect Bro. F. A. Baker, of Rose Creek, Minnesota, to be with us to assist us in preaching the Word. Come up to this feast of tabernacles, beloved brethren and sisters, with your hearts richly imbued with the love and spirit of Jesus, to work for the salvation of the perishing. We have the use of the stables of the "Agricultural Fair Grounds," for teams, free. Hay and grain will be furnished at the lowest rates.

N. W. SPENCER, Pres. C. M. Com.

NOTICE.—The next Annual Session of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Penn. and Southern New York will be held with the Church of God of Bingham, Penn., to be held at the Turner school-house in Bingham, Potter Co, Penn., commencing Thursday evening, Sept. 25th, and continue over Sunday. Let there be a good attendance. There will be important business this session, and we hope to see a good representation. Come all.

A. H. BRIGGS, President.

Hymns Wanted.

I would like a few choice hymns or sacred songs (original only,) with or without chorus, for my new Sunday School collection, the "Welcome Beacon," now in course of preparation. If satisfactory, they will be set to music, and duly credited to the author. Pieces adapted to the Sunday School, social and revival meetings, are what is desired. Will not some of the Crisis poets and poetesses kindly lend me their assistance in this matter? Please address me at Rutland, Vt., and oblige.

A. T. GORHAM.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Conference of Northern Illinois will hold its Annual Session at Rochelle, Ill., commencing Thursday, Sept. 4th. We hope to see a good representation, and that every church will send delegates. It will hold its business sessions from time to time, so as not to interrupt the devotional exercises. For the Committee.

N. W. SPENCER, Pres. of Conf.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference at Indian River, Washington Co., Me., beginning Thursday evening, Sept. 4th, at 7 o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. Elder J. M. Tozier, of New Brunswick, is expected to attend. Come, all who can, praying in faith for this meeting.

RUFUS SNOW.

NOTICE.—The Iowa Mission Tent will be pitched at Wood Center, near Satesville, Clayton Co., Iowa, Sept. 4th, and continue over two Sundays. Good shade for Campmeeting. I expect to use the big tent, or others can do so if they wish.

NOTICE.—Hereafter those desiring to preach at Yalesville, Conn., will correspond with C. H. Yo[illegible], Cor. Sec.

LAKE VIEW CAMPMEETING.

The fifth Annual Session of this Meeting will be held at Magog, P. Q., commencing

Saturday, September 6th, to continue over two Sabbaths. Our Lake View ground is located just upon the north side of the pleasant and quiet village of Magog, with splendid lake and mountain scenery in view, and is also quite near the new wharf and Rail Road Depot, at the present terminus of the Vermont Central Rail Road. Fare on the Waterloo and Magog Rail to be reduced one half, and on the Sabbath much less. Inquire at all the stations for

"Lake View Campmeeting Tickets."

Those who come earlier, to build or reside on the ground, will pay full fare one way, and receive free return passes of the Secretary on the ground. Also the same arrangements on the S. S. and C. Rail Road from St. John's.

On the Grand Trunk R. R. to St. John's from Montreal and return, or to Sherbrook and return, at a fare and one third. From Sherbrook by stage and return (sixteen miles) for half fare.

Fare one way on all the Passumpsic lines to Newport, Vt., and free return passes obtained on the ground by immediate application to the Secretary.

From Newport, over the entire length of the beautiful Memphremagog (thirty miles), by the commodious iron steamer "Lady of the Lake," at half fare (perhaps less), and all ministers who are coming to labor at our meeting, free. Let such ministers drop a postal to me, and get passes by return mail, and they will be honored.

Bro. A. Bissell, of Lowell, Mass., will be present to conduct meetings in "The House of Prayer," as heretofore, we trust with like good results. Eld. J. Couch will be with us to preach the Word of life; and all other good ministers of Jesus Christ, whom God may prompt to come to labor harmoniously for the conversion of sinners, will be welcome, and find work to do. Our own local ministry of course we expect, not as idle spectators, but laborers who feel a deep responsibility. As we said last year, "Let all kinds of Adventists, and others, come and labor [illegible] together," as fellow Christians. Come early in the meeting, and bring all the needful—plenty of bedding, straw ticks, pillows, blankets, and covering for yourselves and others; plenty of wholesome food for yourselves, for the ministers, and some for the worthy poor. Let the different tents provide for the ministers.

Board will be furnished on the ground at the boarding rooms, at the lowest possible paying price, for those who desire it; also horses put up and fed at the stables. Pasture for horses near the ground at reasonable rates. We can furnish room for beds for a large number in the Chapel Hall free, if parties wishing it will bring the straw ticks and covering.

A baggage wagon will meet the boats and trains for heavy baggage. Charges moderate. Please remember and bring all the lanterns you can.

Some tent room to rent. Apply soon. Write me about all matters of interest.

C. P. DOW, President and Secretary.

Riverside Campmeeting.

There will be a Campmeeting held in Riverside Grove, Putnam, Ct., on the road leading to Woodstock, on land of Mr. Henry Leach, commencing Saturday, Sept. 13th, and continue over Sunday, Sept. 21st. The object of this meeting is the promotion of vital godliness and the salvation of sinners by the candid and faithful presentation of Bible truth. Brethren and sisters living in the region around are especially invited to co-operate with us in this meeting. Come filled with the Spirit of God, and with the harness on, prepared to work for the perishing, and thus prepare a bride for Jesus. Dear brethren, let us make one more effort for God and truth. "Behold, the Judge standeth at the door." Able men will be present to preach the Word. Eld. Arthur A. Waite, the noted artist Evangelist, will be on the ground with his mammoth Tent. Bring tents, all who can. Come early, and stay through the meeting if possible. There will be plenty of lodging room in the big tents for those who are not otherwise provided for. Ample provisions for boarding and horse-keeping on the ground at reasonable rates. Also straw and lumber for tent use.

New York and New England Rail Road fare reduced. Darien, N. Y.

The yearly meeting of the Church in Darien, N. Y., will commence Friday evening, Sept. 26th, and hold over Sunday, the 28th. We hope for a large gathering and a good meeting. The invitation to the brethren and sisters in Western New York is general, but we ask you to leave your "hobbies," if you have any, and come in the name of the Lord to get good and do good. The multitude are perishing, and we want to save all that can be reached. Homes will be provided for all who come. Teams will meet the trains on the N. Y. Central R. R. at Crofts, Friday and Saturday at 3 and 6 P. M. from the East, and at 6 P. M. from the West. Pray for the blessing of God to be with us. Several ministers are expected.

For the Church, A. P. MOORE, Pastor.

NOTICE.—The Grove Meeting in Tar Kiln, West Duxbury, began Aug. 24th, and will continue until Sept. 8th. The weather has been very unfavorable, but the meetings have been very good so far. We would extend an invitation to all the lovers of Christ to come and lend a helping hand. Come with hearts ready to labor for perishing souls. The Lord is coming. The judgment is pending, and sinners are about to receive their doom. Let us try with the help of God to rescue some dear soul. Food and lodging provided for all who may wish to come and board, or for any who may wish to stop a day or so.

MRS. MARY RANSOM.
M. C. HILLMAN.

Campmeeting.

The Southern Wisconsin Campmeeting will be held at Cooksville, commencing Saturday, Sept. 20th, and holding over two Sundays. This is a new place, and if there is a general attendance of the brethren from the surrounding country, with the help of the Lord good may be done. Bro. Philo Hitchcock is to be present with the Mission Tent. Bro. Sheldon may be expected, also Sister Scoville. Brethren, come early and bring your tents, and come to stay through the meeting.

GEORGE HOWARD.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Conference of Nova Scotia will hold its yearly Conference with the church at Bear River, on Thursday, Sept. 25. A cordial and brotherly invitation is given to all dear brethren who love the precious message, so that we can have a joyful gathering that will be soul-cheering, honoring to the cause of Christ, and for the benefit of souls that are perishing.

JAMES MORRISON, Secretary.

NOTICE.—There will be three Conferences in Washington Co., Maine. The first in Wesley, to commence Sept. 11th. The second in Princeton, to commence Thursday evening, Sept. 25th. The third at Grand Lake Stream, to commence evening, Oct. 9th, and each to hold over the following Sabbath. Come, all who can. Pray that the blessing of God may be upon these meetings in the salvation of the lost and perishing.

M. W. CORLISS.

NOTICE.—A series of meetings will commence at Birch Intervale, Tamworth, N. H., Friday evening, Sept. 26th, to continue over the following Sunday, and longer if the interest should demand. Will our brethren and sisters in the surrounding country come over and help us?

C. H. SWETT. D. F. LEAVITT.

NOTICE.—The Ministerial Committee of the Advent Church of Great Falls, N. H., have arranged with Eld. J. Bickford to furnish them with preaching, and, should any of the preaching brethren desire to come here, they can confer with him.

MOSES E. LOUD, for Committee.

NOTICE.—To Brn. in Central Illinois and surrounding region, Greeting:—I am now located in my old home, Clayton, Adams Co., Ill. I trust I am ready to do the work of an Evangelist, as ability is given and means are supplied. Those who are desirous of my labors in their section can write me, and perhaps an arrangement can be made for a series of meetings with them. Any can apply, but new soil is preferred to old.

O. D. GIBSON.

NOTICE.—A church has been organized at this place (Campton, N. H., Bump school-house), and all persons desiring to preach here will first correspond with me, or either of the following brethren: George Smith, Charles D. Blaisdell, Deacons. Meeting every Sunday. Preaching at 10½ A. M. and 1 P. M. Sabbath School at 12 M. Prayer meetings Sunday and Thursday evenings.

A. S. WILLIAMS, Pastor.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon), to insure insertion for the coming week.

Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent, unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister or ministers of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquital.

☞ All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—OZIAS GOODRICH, Boston, Mass.

"THE SEVEN GOLDEN CANDLESTICKS." (By H. P. Hill.) For sale at Crisis Office. By mail, $1.25.

Business.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

☞ We will send the World's Crisis to ministers of all denominations for ONE DOLLAR per year, payable in advance. All ministers unknown at this office, when they send for the Crisis, will please give satisfactory proof that they are ministers. AGENT.

☞ Any person sending a name for the FREE LIST, must send a written certificate, endorsed by some brother well known at this office, certifying that the person named is unable to pay for the Crisis, and is worthy to have it free. Also 25 cents must accompany the certificate to pay postage. If the above is complied with, the application will be considered. AGENT.

☞ PRICE REDUCED.—Our friends and patrons will please notice that we have reduced the price of the YOUNG PILGRIM. We hope our brethren and friends will help us increase the list by sending in hundreds of new subscribers. AGENT.

☞ TO SABBATH SCHOOLS.—One of our old book publishers was unsuccessful in business, and went into bankruptcy. He had a large stock on hand. It was offered in lots to the public. We bought a few hundred books at a very low price, and we would say to all Sabbath Schools, if they wish to add any books to their library, or if any school wishes to have a new library, now is the time to get them. Will our brethren and friends please call soon and examine, as we shall sell as fast as possible. It is a rare bargain. Good nice QUARTO BIBLES in same lot, at from three to five dollars each. Rare bargains. Also a variety of Sabbath School Cards. AGENT.

☞ We would say to all who wish to obtain any book or books that are to be found in the market, that if they will send us the TITLE IN FULL of the book or books wanted, with amount of price enclosed, we will forward them as soon as they can be obtained. Direct to OZIAS GOODRICH, Box 5140, Boston, Mass.

☞ VALUABLE WORKS.—Those who wish information on the subject of "Future Punishment," or desire to give it to others, will do well to obtain a work entitled "SUNLIGHT," by Silas Henn, of England, or "TRUTH SET FREE," by the same author. The first contains 72 pages. Single 25 cts., or $2.25 per dozen, postpaid. The second contains 64 pages. Single 20 cts., or $1.80 per dozen, postpaid.

☞ SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.—The Doings of the Prophetic Conference held in New York last fall is now published in a book of 528 pages. It is a full report of the call for the Conference, and each Address is complete and fully reported. Also there is a Critical Appendix added, which is valuable. The book is handsomely bound in cloth. Price postpaid, $2.00. AGENT.

☞ EXPOSITION OF TWENTIETH CHAPTER OF REVELATION.—This is a Tract of twelve pages, written by L. Boutell. Price, single 3 cts.; 20 cts per dozen, $1.25 per hundred, postpaid.

☞ MARRIAGE CERTIFICATES.—We have on hand, and intend to keep, a good assortment of "Marriage Certificates." Any and all of our friends wishing to purchase such, can obtain them at the Crisis Office. AGENT.

☞ TESTAMENTS.—We have some very nice Testaments in flexible covers. Single copy 8 cts., or 75 cts. per dozen postpaid. AGENT.

All subscriptions must be paid in advance. The tendency of this paper is: 1. To teach the personal coming of Christ and his kingdom on earth. 2. The nature and destiny of man. 3. To proclaim the full plan of redemption in Jesus. All correspondence for the Witness of the Truth must be directed to ELD. CHAS. KOCHS, Editor and Publisher, 229 Noble St., Chicago, Ill.

LAST DAYS OF THE CHURCH.

Far down the ages now,
Her journey well nigh done,
The pilgrim church pursues her way
In haste to meet the crown.

The story of the past
Comes up before her view;
How well it seems to suit her still—
Old, and yet ever true.

'Tis the same story still,
Of sin and weariness;
Of grace and love still flowing down,
To pardon and to bless.

'Tis the old sorrow still,
The briar and the thorn;
And 'tis the old solace yet,
The hope of coming morn.

No wider is the gate,
No broader is the way;
No smoother is the ancient path
That leads to light and day.

No lighter is the load
Beneath whose weight we cry;
No tamer grows the rebel flesh,
Nor less our enemy.

No sweeter is the cup,
Nor less our lot of ill;
'Twas tribulation ages since,
'Tis tribulation still.

Dawn lingers on the cliff,
But oh! how slow to spring;
[illegible] on yon wave,

[illegible] occurrence of these ext[illegible]. We will open the series with the history of famines since the Christian Era, mainly obtained from that rare work entitled, "History of Pestilences," etc., by Noah Webster, LL.D.

A. D. 41. The first famine named by Webster is that foretold by Agabus in Acts 11: 28, in the reign of Claudius Cæsar. It was universal in the Roman Empire and the East. No details are given.

A. D. 117. A violent famine is named for this period as occurring in the Roman Empire.

A. D. 167. Famine marked this period. [illegible] covered the land in [illegible] a famine fol[illegible] year, with a [illegible] under the min[illegible] famine in It[illegible] three years. [illegible] calamitous period, [illegible] and disease, with failure of crops [illegible] famine everywhere.

A. D. 272. A severe famine raged in England.

A. D. 277–78. Great famine prevailed, says Zozomus, over the world. Webster regards such as produced by "a pestilence in vegetation," that is, a failure in the principles of vegetable life which proceeds from the same derangement of the seasons, or defect in the properties of air and water, which causes the plague among men." Vol. 1, page 81.

A. D. 292. Drouth and famine prevailed.

A. D. 311. Cyprus suffered a drouth of thirty-six years duration in consequence of which the island was nearly depopulated.

A. D. 310–11. England and Wales were swept by famine, and 40,000 lives were destroyed the first-named year. This is the first account of the actual number of persons who died of famine at any time.

A. D. 325. A universal famine in Britain.

A. D. 362. "Drouth, famine and pestilence," says Webster, "walked in the train of public calamities." It is said to have been "dreadful."

A. D. 376. A year of famine, so great that the inhabitants of Phrygia abandoned their country.

A. D. 400. A drouth so severe that the heavens were like brass, followed by the destruction of vegetation and a famine so dreadful that the populace in the cities demanded that human flesh should be sold in the market. Locust and plague devoured until Niciphorus could write that almost all Europe and no small part of Asia and Africa perished.

A. D. 446. The Picts and Scots overran and desolated England, and the crops being neglected a famine followed. A famine scourged Italy, Phrygia, Cappadocia and Galatia, compelling parents to devour their own children.

A. D. 484. A drouth most terrible and distressing occurred; not a vine nor an olive branch retained its verdure; the earth was pale and desolate, and the sun assumed a melancholy face. Africa was almost abandoned by human beings.

A. D. 517. A drouth in Palestine lasting five years.

A. D. 531. Famine in Wales.

A. D. 534. In this year, says Dr. Webster, is recorded one of the most distressing famines that ever afflicted the earth. It continued many years, and destroyed multitudes of the human race. In 539 it raged with double horror. War left lands untilled, Italy was ravaged, people fed on human flesh, some districts were deserted, the bodies of the famished people became thin and pale, the skin was hardened and dry like leather, and clave to the bones; the flesh assumed a dark appearance like charcoal; the countenance was senseless and stern. In Picenum 50,000 perished, and in other districts still greater numbers. No pestilence accompanied this famine. Baronius says it was caused by a failure of the crops. In 540 the crops were good, but in A. D. 543, there broke out one of the most awful plagues the world ever knew, and there was dearth of corn, wine and oil.

A. D. 569. An excessive drouth.

A. D. 591. "The severest drouth ever known," writes our historian.

A. D. 604. Severe winters are named, with great heat and drouth the next year. Dr. Webster often connects hard winters with drouth, and famine to follow.

A. D. 680. A drouth in England for three years. The next year famine followed. The same year (681) Syria and Lybia were afflicted by famine.

A. D. 742–43. A severe drouth.

A. D. 779. Famine in France. No other named until

A. D. 820. Famine again raged in France.

A. D. 850. A most severe drouth, which occasioned a famine that compelled men to feed on human flesh. History during these dark ages is barren, says Dr. Webster.

A. D. 883. Italy was severely afflicted by famine.

A. D. 896. A famine in France and Germany.

A. D. 912. A famine in Germany.

A. D. 929. A severe winter in England. The Thames was frozen thirteen weeks; a dreadful famine followed.

A. D. 962. Severe winter and famine.

A. D. 975. Severe winter; the next year England was afflicted with a grievous famine.

A. D. 988. Universal famine.

A. D. 993. Famine prevailed.

A. D. [illegible]. Famine and plague raged three years. Cotemporary authors affirm [illegible] more than half the human race per[illegible]. All through these centuries the accounts of calamities are meagre, and the

A. D. 1016. Famine is named for this year.

A. D. 1031. In France, England, and [illegible], famine.

A. D. 1053. Famine is described.

A. D. 1057. Dreadful cold winters and [illegible].

A. D. 1064. Famine followed a plague [illegible] and Arabia; a drouth occurred for [illegible] years.

A. D. 1068. Unusually severe winters; [illegible] in England, which depopulated whole [illegible]; men subsisted on dogs, cats, and [illegible] unclean thing.

A. D. 1077. Famine in Constantinople.

A. D. 1084. Famine and pestilence raged. [illegible] have famine in 1096, dearth in 1105, drouth and scarcity of food in 1121.

A. D. 1124. A severe winter. Terrible [illegible] and in England so [illegible] that dead bodies [illegible] on the highways unburied.

A. D. 1135–37. Droughts, dearths and atmospheric commotion occasioned a long and desolating famine in Europe. We have no particulars.

A. D. 1140–46. A famine prevailed for a period of twelve years; the severity was very distressing.

A. D. 1150. Famine in Iceland. "A gloomy and barbarous age, in which history is concise and destitute of accurate observations," says Webster.

A. D. 1175. Famine in England; 1181, famine in Denmark; in 1203, a sore famine from bad seasons. Also in Egypt in 1200.

A. D. 1221. Famine and pestilence almost desolated Europe. In most countries the living could hardly bury the dead, and in some cities scarcely a person survived.

A. D. 1230–33. France, Denmark and Italy were wasted by dreadful famine. In London alone 20,000 people were starved to death.

A. D. 1239. Famine was so severe that persons fed on human flesh.

A. D. 1258. Dearth of corn in England and France, and famine and diseases made havoc with human life. Fifteen thousand persons died of hunger in London.

A. D. 1294. England was distressed by severe famine, thousands of the poor perishing with hunger. Two and three years later the famine extended to many countries.

A. D. 1330. Ireland was distressed by famine, but Dublin was relieved by the coming of multitudes of fish called Thurlheds, which had not been seen there for ages, writes Webster.

A. D. 1352. This year authors relate that nine hundred thousand people in China perished amidst all the horrors of famine.

A. D. 1356. Famine in Germany. The mortality was prodigious. In 1427, dearth and famine in Europe. In 1450, famine raged in Italy. In Milan sixty thousand people perished. Webster records no more famines until we come to the year

A. D. 1527, when a wet summer injured the crops and England had famine; many of the poor were starved to death. From this year on I find in our author no record of famine until the year 1583, when there is mentioned a famine in Rome. It is scarcely possible that only three famines occurred in 133 years (since 1450), but Dr. Webster's investigations now relate more to plague and pestilence than to famine, and he takes less note of the latter.

A. D. 1590. Multitudes of people perished by famine. The year following a great famine caused a great mortality in Italy, and in 1596 the famine was extreme in Hungary, while in 1598 Pegu in Asia was depopulated by famine.

THE NAPOLEONS.

O. A. LADD.

No imperial Napoleon has died on French soil. Napoleon I., the founder of the family, died a prisoner at St. Helena. His son, Napoleon II., died in Austria. His nephew, Napoleon III., died an exile in England. And now his grand-nephew, the Prince Imperial, has met his fate at the point [illegible] Zulu spears. They have passed away and where are they? Echo answers, Where? How true the unerring Word, "He that exalteth himself shall be brought low." The la[illegible] of our heart is, Let us live the life of [illegible]ghteous, that our last end may be like his. Thank God, we had rather be a despised follower of the lowly Nazarene, than to be numbered with those who have their good things in this life, and at the judgment day be weighed in the balance and found wanting.

Dear brethren, let us seek to be little and unknown, to be loved and prized by God alone. We have lived for the last seven years entirely excluded from any of like precious faith, and have not heard a gospel sermon, but we are still looking for the fulfillment of Jesus' last promise, If I go away I will come again, that where I am ye may be also. And we can with confidence look up and say that now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.

It is much easier to meet with error than to find truth; error is on the surface, truth is hidden in great depths; and the way to seek does not appear to all the world.

ANOTHER DEVELOPMENT.

A NEW AND MARVELLOUS BOOK.

THE PAROUSIA: A Critical Study of the Scripture Doctrines of Christ's Second Coming. His reign as King; the Resurrection of the Dead and the General Judgment. 311 pp. By Isaiah P. Warren, D. D.

Dr. Warren is the editor of the Christian Mirror, the organ for many years of the Congregationalist churches in Maine; and his book with its strange doctrines will be much more readily accepted by many than if written by an avowed Universalist. Some two years ago the Doctor wrote a series of editorials for his paper on "The Parousia," in which he advocated that the word parousia in the Greek, translated in our Bible "come, coming and appearing," never signified an advent, coming or appearing, but "a presence," and that Christ has been personally present with his church ever since the destruction of Jerusalem, and is never to be with them in any other sense.

By the urgent request of several orthodox deacons we offered a reply to these articles, which was declined. Dr. Fisk, Prof. Pond and others reviewed them, and badly damaged the positions taken; yet they received a hearty response from many others who seemed anxious to get rid of the troublesome doctrine of Christ's bodily advent to judge the world. These called for a wider circulation of the Doctor's views, and this call resulted in producing the book. In this book you will find the ripe fruits of Prof. M. Stuart's German Neology and Prof. Geo. Bush's condensed Swedenborgianism, as published in their books, to refute the doctrine of the second personal coming of Christ at the time of the great reformation in the days of William Miller. This book is published evidently for the same purpose, and will find (as their's did) many favorites in the churches, and especially among Universalists and Swedenborgians. It is a curiosity that will beguile the reader, and will help to discipline the minds of those who read carefully, and will lead to a more critical examination of the many Scripture promises of our Lord's return. It will also show to faithful watchmen the great danger of tampering with the Word of God, in seeking to harmonize it with the teachings of heathen philosophers on the unscriptural dogma of the immortality of the soul.

Dr. Warren finds the Greek parousia translated present and presence in several texts, and claims it should have been in all places. He then seeks to lead his readers to believe that this word does not teach the return of our Lord from heaven in any case. But on carefully reading his specimen texts, a reflecting mind can readily see that a presence involves an advent—a coming—a return. We quote a few.

"Certain Jews, ... who ought to have been here" (Acts 24: 18, 19). "I verily . . have judged already as though I were present" (1 Cor. 5: 3). "I told you before, and foretell you, as if I were present, the second time" (2 Cor. 13: 2). For these persons to be present they must come. Paul must come a "second time."

Again, he quotes to prove that where parousia is rendered in our Bible "coming," it ought to be presence. "I am glad of the coming [parousia] of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus" (1 Cor. 16: 17). "God . . . comforted us by the coming [parousia] of Titus" (2 Cor. 7: 6). "That our rejoicing may be more abundant in Christ Jesus for me by my coming [parousia] to you again" (Phil. 1: 26). In these cases, also, there must be an advent—a coming—in order to be present. Paul had been with certain disciples and left them; he writes to them about being present with them a "second time" and "again." To do so he must come.

While the Greek parousia expresses presence, it involves a coming—a return. Therefore in the Greek it is used to teach our Lord's second coming. He has been on the earth with his church personally, transiently, in mortality. He left personally, and ascended to heaven "to appear in the presence of God for us." He has promised to be present with his church again, and remain present forever. This involves his second advent—"coming"—"appearing the second time." Our translators so rendered the parousia as to teach the fact. "So shall also the coming [parousia] of the Son of man be" (Matt. 24: 27, 37, 39); "as the lightning." "Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his [parousia] coming" (1 Cor. 15: 23). "Are not ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his [parousia] coming?" (1 Thess. 2: 19). "At the coming [parousia] of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints" (1 Thess. 3: 13). "We which are alive and remain unto the coming [parousia] of the Lord" (1 Thess. 4: 15). "Preserved blameless unto the coming [parousia] of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 5: 23). "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming [parousia] of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 2: 1). "And shall destroy with the brightness of his coming" (parousia). 2 Thess. 2: 8. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming [parousia] of the Lord. . . . The coming [parousia] of the Lord draweth nigh" (Jas. 5: 7, 8). "We made known unto you the power and coming [parousia] of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. 1: 16). "Where is the promise of his coming?" (parousia). "Looking for and hasting unto the coming [parousia] of the day of the Lord" (2 Pet. 3: 4, 12). "That we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming" (parousia). 1 John 2: 28.

Mr. Warren tells us "it is important to observe that in all these instances the word is accompanied in the original with the article the, which in the Greek is distinctive and emphatic—implying that it is in some sense a special and unique presence, to be distinguished from all others. Accordingly, we find that the term is never applied to his first advent, when he dwelt among men in the flesh." Yes; this is truly important, as it teaches that at his second coming his presence will not be like "the first"—in weakness and toil and suffering—not a transient visit; but a glorified King immortal to abide with his church forever.

The Doctor is in great trouble to find [illegible]mony of Scripture on this grand theme, [illegible] says: "Something, at least, must be done to harmonize these testimonies of the divine Word. We cannot take up the overthrow of the temple, the founding of the new kingdom of the Messiah, the destruction of the 'Man of Sin,' the disciplinary [illegible] of Asia, and carry them forward into the future, as events which are still to take place." Therefore [illegible] to prove the "falling [illegible] the destruction of Jerus[illegible] "Man of Sin," the destruction of J[illegible] and temple the date of the beginning [illegible] parousia—coming of our Lord. And [illegible] falling down "dead like a dog in one [illegible] sewers of Rome," was the destruction of the "Man of Sin."

The ascension of Christ to his Father is stated to be his becoming King on his throne. "Coming in the glory of his Father" and "gathering all nations before him" and separating them, etc., is argued to have had their fulfillment, and the kingdom promised in Daniel, set up at—when Christ began his reign at Jerusalem's overthrow. The binding of Satan is the cessation of Paganism; Gog and Magog represent the Ottoman Empire. The first resurrection is that of the souls of the martyrs reigning in heaven.

All these, and many other curiosities are found in this book. It will benefit the careful, believing student of the Bible to read it, as it gives a vivid contrast between its theories and the open Bible. It may captivate and mislead novices in prophetic studies who love novelties, and gratify those who do not study the Bible to believe its precious promises.

I. C. WELLCOME.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Bro. J. C. & Sr. S. E. Smith.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Some five weeks ago we set out again to sound the glad tidings, and came to Centropolis. We found the little church, which had been planted some five years ago by our Father's hand, still on the Rock, contending earnestly and lovingly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and with hearts knit together in love, well prepared for a pentecostal season. Bro. and Sr. Kemick and Bro. Fillmore were with us in the work. We tarried with them four days, and six came out on the Lord's side and put on Christ by baptism. Others were convicted, and the results will be known in the great gathering day, when angels shall gather the wheat-harvest home to glory and honor, rest and permanent life. A goodly number at this place have been counselled to buy gold tried in the fire, and I trust will be overcomers to sit with Jesus on his throne, as he has overcome and is set down on the Father's throne.

It is evident that we are living under this glorious admonition "buy" and "overcome," and how vastly important it is that all make their calling and election sure to the abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our [illegible] and Savior Jesus Christ. The last days of the lukewarm state of the church is upon us, and who will be able to stand? He that hath a pure heart and clean hands. O for the overcoming faith now, that we may receive at the end of this, even the salvation of our souls!

Children of the conquering King, put on thy strength of divine love, that it may be the bond of your completeness in the perfect day of redemptive glory. The kingdom, king, throne, glory, rest, home, life and all are soon to be gained or lost, and if lost, O what an inestimable loss! O that all may be stirred up now to renewed zeal and overcoming [illegible] that He who has controlled wind and [illegible], life and death, may give us the victory with everlasting thanksgiving and praise.

From Centropolis we came to Leavenworth Co., visited the churches at Jarbalo and Eagle school-house. Some were cheered in the Lord. From Jarbalo we went on to Sarcoxie. Notice was sent out for our meetings at night, seats were prepared out of doors, and two set out for eternal life. The next morning we crossed the Kansas River on the ferry-boat and came to Olathe, Johnson Co., Kan., where we found Bro. Cairnes, Gebhart, Henderson, Judge Hendrickson, also Bro. [illegible]. All were anxious for tent meeting, and did nobly for the interests of the cause. We were with them over two Sundays. Brn. Johnson, Chapman and McGwire came from Lawrence. Brn. Whitney and Snyder, from Centropolis, requested us to return with them to their place.

Our meeting at Olathe was interesting. Some from the M. E., Baptist and Christian Churches accepted the glorious message of life and immortality through Christ, and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The brethren were greatly cheered, and a number set out to serve the Lord. We scattered much seed that will result in the saving of life unto life, of death unto death.

Took our tent down July 21st, and set out for Centropolis on the 22nd. Rode some thirty-five or forty miles through the hot sun, and arrived late at night on the 23rd. We commenced meetings again, and continued them till July 30th, and two more went down into the liquid grave, and were buried with Christ in baptism, making ten that had obeyed the command, and fifteen united with the church. I can assure you, dear brethren and sisters, that hot weather and hard work did not keep the people away from the season of refreshing and work of the Master in saving the perishing. We came to Lawrence on the 30th, and had meeting at night at Bro. Rote's home, and spoke to the little flock of the saving power of hope. A Sister Turner, from the East, whose husband used to be an Adventist preacher, was present, and testified that the short exhortation had given her more light than all the preaching she had heard for many years in the city of Lawrence. She said she had been almost bewildered and buried up, but now she rejoiced to be with those of like precious faith, waiting for the glorious appearing of our Elder Brother, Jesus.

An aged sister (Bro. Rote's mother), of some seventy years, arose in the freedom of the Spirit, testifying with power of the goodness of God shown to her in receiving more light on the subject of baptism, and she desired to obey the Lord in this act of a "good conscience by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." So the next morning we came to the Kansas River and planted her in the watery grave, and raised [illegible] in view of the [illegible] hope" of resur[illegible] [illegible] of the Lord and [illegible] again at this point, [illegible] house. All praise be [illegible] done in so short a [illegible] Quarterly [illegible] and other meetings, [illegible] the Lord willing, to have tent [illegible] go South to attend a [illegible] Clifton. Let all the brethren and sisters pray much, make ready, start in season, and be on hand for our work of love for Jesus and for his coming, when we will enjoy eternal rest and glory. Pray for us, while we labor and wait for home and rest. From your brother and sister in Christ.

From D. D. & M. S. Reed.

Bro. Couch:—I send greeting to the saints scattered abroad. I wrote last from Hollister, from the Gospel Tent. We had good meetings there and some sound conversions, among which were hardened sinners that could not be reached by the last-day fables; but the plain truths of God's Word reached them and melted their hearts.

From thence to Salinas City, a town of considerable size and with seven churches, most of which refused to read a notice of our meeting; and one that did read it warned his people to stay away. But this was overruled to the glory of God. The people came, and God blessed his own Word to the salvation of about a dozen who have banded together to have meetings. We baptized four, who are rejoicing in hope of speedy deliverance. There are others that may follow with a little more labor.

We then attended the Annual Conference held at Santa Clara. There was a goodly number from the different churches and a heavenly meeting. It was truly good to come together for a few days, after the heat of battle, and compare notes. Our conclusion is that the work is fast closing up, and Jesus is soon coming. We then returned to this city, situated in a most delightful valley, "Where every prospect pleases, and only man is vile." Our meetings have been largely attended, and many received the truth and say "they never heard the gospel preached before." A number are already converted. Those who had been stout-hearted sinners came forward and asked for baptism and to join the church, penitent and sorrowful for their sins. We declare the whole counsel of God as we understand it, and especially the great truths that belong to this generation. God has not sent us to "deal with untempered mortar," and we are too near the judgment to fail to "cry aloud and spare not."

We find it to be the best way to preach the great Bible truths and make them plain as possible, and then what converts we get will be able to stand, which is not a small matter in these days of peril. The place is greatly stirred here, and God is with us in power. Praise his great name! O how glad I am to be numbered with those who are proclaiming this last important truth. Thanks be to God. He is soon coming.

We go soon to Santa Cruz, a seaport town and summer watering-place. These great Advent truths were never preached there, except one sermon by myself eight years ago. We do not have the pleasure of our brethren of the East, in having some one to invite us to a place, and good homes provided by brethren and sisters. We are strangers to all in the places we visit. We cook out of doors and eat in our tent, and one sleeps there, and I hire a room for myself and wife to lodge. But the same God that led the tabernacle and Moses of old is leading us, and going before to open the way. Thanks be to God, he takes care of us and the tent in this wicked and ungodly country. We have some rich and blessed experiences of his guiding hand and protecting care over us.

Let me say to the household of faith, Be sober, watchful and prayerful. Be not conformed to this world. Put off all bad habits, walk purely and honestly, having the seal of the Spirit, be ready for translation; for we know the end hasteth greatly. Let us be all ready. Yours in hope of eternal life.

From Bro. G. A. Boutwell.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—By the help of God I am trying to be a faithful follower of Jesus, who died to redeem us from eternal death. I have been struggling along for three years, but I have not lived as faithful as I ought. God has provided a way whereby we can find forgiveness of our sins, and I am determined by God's grace assisting me to press toward the mark—Christ Jesus—for I verily belive the time is soon coming when we shall need a Savior. I am looking forward to that happy morning, when our dear friends will come from the land of the enemy to shine in all the glory of the Father and the holy angels. Let us lay hold of eternal life, believing God, for his promises never fail.

Christ is soon coming. We see signs thickening all around us. Let us be sober, put on the breastplate of righteousness, fighting the good fight of faith, that we may be found of him without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing. I ask the prayers of God's people that I may live a holy life, and finally have it said unto me, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord." Glory to his dear name! I can say with the poet,

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

INNOCENCE AND VIRTUE.

There is a wide difference between innocence and virtue. Innocence has never had a battle; virtue has had many a victory. Innocence is embryonic—it is like a fragile seed; easily torn and blown away; virtue is like a gnarled oak, with the tempest in its limbs, but rooted in the right, wrestling with the storms, and still standing the stouter when they have swept by. Innocence is a gift; virtue is an achievement. Ever since Eden, virtue, in place of innocence, is the destiny of man. It is easy to remain innocent, if no assaults are made upon our passions. But it is quite impossible to acquire virtue without such assaults. How, for instance, can a man make an act of patience who is never crossed. How can a man make an act of trust, except he be smitten with bereavement or disaster? How can a man make an act of meekness toward his brother, except he be provoked by gainsaying; or of sweet humility towards God, except he be plunged into those mortifications that stir the pride? The virtues only grow strong through exercise and antagonism.

When a question of destroying Carthage was debated in old Rome, Scipio Africanus counselled against the measure; for, "though she was the implacable foe of the Roman commonwealth, her arms," he argued, "would serve as a whetstone to Roman valor." If poor man had the adjusting of affairs, he would abolish and destroy all temptations. But the wise Father knows better, and leaves undestroyed that which seems harmful, overruling and wielding it, on the other hand, to the good of his creatures. [illegible] from being despondent at temptations, the Christian should hail them as his glorious opportunity. He should shake off the deadly sin of sloth, and break through their ranks as they beset the hill-side he is clambering, realizing that he shall grow stronger as he mounts. He should, indeed, "count it all joy when he falls into divers temptation."—Christian Standard.

JESUS AND THE CHILDREN.

Jesus loved children. The most casual glance into his life will show us that. When, looking into the pictures of the gospels we behold the crowds thronging our Lord, we constantly find the children mingled with them. Some of our Lord's most tender ministries were done to children. Some of the deepest and largest truths he taught, he found his fitliest illustration for in children. There seems to have been, always, a kind of mother-yearning in our Lord's heart toward children. Nowhere does his benignity look so benignant as when we find him bending over children.

The light had flashed upon the mountain of the Transfiguration. The disciples, following Jesus toward Capernaum, had fallen into dispute along the way. Their's was not an always harmonious company. They had not learned, more than have the most of us, each to esteem the other better than himself. When the war broke out everybody wanted to be General, and everybody thought he ought to be. Even the disciples could not be content, but wanted the first and highest place. And since they were all the candidates for that one position, the dispute was natural, and they were full of angry talk and hostile skirmishing about who should be the greatest.

When they reach Capernaum and are quietly alone in a house, Christ asks them about their conversation. And when they have little to answer for themselves, he begins to teach them the deep lesson that the highest place is always the place of the utmost service. Then he leads a child into their circle. And when he had taken the child in his arms he said unto them, "Whosoever shall receive a little child in my name receiveth me, and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth him that sent me." That is to say, a lowly and kindly service toward the little child reaches beyond him and becomes a service which stirs with delight the Infinite bosom. And as Luke adds, "He that is least among you all, the same shall be great." That is, he who thinks so much of pleasing me, that for my sake he bends in service to a little child, has achieved a real and Christian greatness; and, as Matthew tells us about the same scene, the Master also said, "Whoso shall offend—that is, cause to stumble—one of these little ones, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea." An injury to a little believing child is a personal injury to Christ.

It is our Lord's last journey to Jerusalem. He is in the country beyond the Jordan. He is teaching, and, as he passes on the usual throng is round him. There are some mothers there, constantly craving the best things for their children. What can be better for them than the benediction of the Lord. And so they come, finding a way amid the crowd and bringing the children. These disciples think that Christ is at better work than blessing children. They rebuke the meddling mothers; but when Jesus saw it he was much displeased and said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And then he went on to show how the dependent, obedient, docile, true, lowly, trustful, loving spirit of a child, was the very spirit that every one must have who would enter into God's kingdom; that the harsh and self-sufficient and rebellious adult-spirit must always give place to the child-spirit. "Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein."—WAYLAND HOYT, D. D., in Standard.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The A. C. Conference of District No. 4, State of Kansas, met according to appointment with the Arvonia church. Our young brother, H. D. Fillmore, gave us an able discourse from the words, "What think ye of Christ?" which was followed by remarks by other brethren.

August 9th. At 10 A. M., we enjoyed an excellent social meeting, and at 2 P. M. met in business Conference, which was opened by the Vice President, Bro. Willard R. Chandler, reading a selection from the Word of God, prayer and singing. Brethren from other districts were then appointed to take part in the Conference. Brn. J. C. Smith, N. M. Bacon and N. R. Smith were appointed a Devotional Committee. Reading the credentials of delegates followed; after which report of ministers.

On account of sore eyes Bro. J. C. Smith had not labored as much as usual, yet had held meetings at the Eagle and Valley school-houses in Leavenworth Co., also at Sarcoxieville in the same County. Had meetings in Lawrence, where he baptized Bro. Rotes' aged mother; also held a two weeks tent meeting in Olathe, Johnson Co., and held meetings at two different times with the church at Centropolis, Franklin Co., where he babtized ten young people, and fifteen united with the church.

Dr. Chandler said that he had preached once a month at Ottumwa and Arvonia, and said that the attendance and attention had been good; that the churches were not as spiritual as they ought to be, but that he felt strong in the Lord, and was determined to go forward.

Bro. Daniel Webster said that he had preached at Melvern, Osage Co., once at Fairview, and once at Buffalo, Wilson Co., where the people seemed to be afraid of the doctrine. Spoke twice in Woodson County, near the Big Sandy. Three men spent most of the afternoon in giving out notice of the meeting. One of these men wept when we parted with him. He has since written, saying that he believes that we have the truth, and wants more meetings. Have sold my farm, that I may work more for the Master, and am determined to press on and do what I can. I want the Conference to pray for me that I may be guided and directed.

Bro. McFarland said: "I have been engaged nearly every Sunday since the last Conference. Have a very interesting Bible class in our little church. Laborers are needed. Have been invited [illegible] on the street at Independence."

Bro. Fillmore said: "I fille[illegible] ment at Key West till I went [illegible] C. Smith; since then have [illegible] and talked with individuals in [illegible]"

Bro. McGuire said: "I have [illegible] an average one sermon a week [illegible] tried and almost decided to [illegible] but shall try a little longer. Have [illegible] friends and enemies. This doctrine [illegible] make enemies. Shall work as long as [illegible] see the way open. Let us work to[illegible]" He spoke of the necessity of church [illegible]porting.

Bro. W. R. Chandler reported: "I have preached several times at Strawn Station to very attentive audiences. I am determined to press on. Judgment is impending. Those who preach are in a responsible position."

The Arvonia and Ottumwa churches [illegible] ported.

The Finance Committee only reported.

Voted, That James Beck, H. S. W[illegible]ster, A. Chandler, E. Rudsawff, N. R. Smith, S. E. Smith and A. B. McCawley attend the State Conference as delegates, also that they have the privilege of choosing some one to represent them, if unable [illegible] there be membership [illegible] number of delegates [illegible]

Voted, That [illegible] District Evangelist [illegible]

Voted, That the [illegible] at the Lone Elm [illegible] Co., commencing [illegible]

Voted, That the [illegible] be sent to the Bible [illegible] Crisis.

Our Conference was good [illegible] to the close. We felt that [illegible] exhort one another, and [illegible] as the day approaches [illegible] Day of gladness. [illegible] waiting ones with everla[illegible] long for the One that [illegible] blessed day! We closed [illegible] celebrating the Lord's Supper.

N. R. SMITH, Secretary.

A STRIKING INCIDENT.

Rev. C. M. Southgate relates the following: An English actress, passing along a street one day, heard singing. She looked in at an open door upon a little prayer-meeting, and caught the words:

"Depth of mercy! can there be Mercy still reserved for me?"

She entered, listened awhile, then went away, but the hymn went with her. She became a Christian and determined to leave the stage, but the manager would not release her from fulfilling her engagement. The last night she played with unusual brilliancy, and at the close was called before the curtain. Her contract was discharged; she had no master now but Christ. Standing there, with clasped hands and streaming eyes, she sang:

"Depth of mercy! can there be
Mercy still reserved for me?
Can my God his wrath forbear,
Me, the chief of sinners, spare?"

The audience was melted by the pathetic confession and plea, and many sought the same mercy.—Selected.

FOUL AIR AND HEALTH.

During the past ten years, many facts have been demonstrated which go to prove that attention to health matters, hitherto neglected, will result in the decrease of a large amount of mortality. Typhoid fever, cholera, diarrhœa, dysentery, diphtheria, and in a great degree consumption, are all diseases of the preventable class. Among the most important considerations for all is the drainage of their immediate premises, as well as a general interest in the drainage of the neighborhood in which they reside. Soil is both an air-carrier and a water-carrier, and it contains a great variety of solid matters. Gases of all kinds will find their way through the soil. Houses act as suckers to the ground on which they are built, because the air inside is warmer than the external atmosphere, and so sewer gas, coal gas, and indeed any other gaseous matter, may be drawn from the earth below into our habitations, and take the place of pure air. Foul air from cess-pools has been sucked into houses from a great distance.

There is no doubt but that the typhoid fever poison is commonly and usually produced by decaying matter. Attacks of cholera, dysentery, diphtheria, paroxysmal fevers, typhoid and various forms of remittent fever may be attributed to emanations from the soil. Drains become obstructed, bad odors arise into houses in communication therewith, and sicken their inhabitants, fever soon manifesting itself. All fever poisons originate in polluted air and water. These poisons are undistinguishable by the eye, even aided by the microscope, but decaying matter is usually revealed to us by the smell. It does not follow, however, that the most dangerous emanations or odors are the most offensive, although the stench and the poison are intimately connected, neither is it certain that a person will have fever because he smells a foul odor, but it is a warning that should not be disregarded.—Selected.

EVENING SHADOWS.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Old earth, thy noon is o'er and past,
Thy evening shadows gather fast;
Beneath a dark and threatening frown
Thy sun in haste is gliding down,
While all along thy devious path
Are omens of approaching wrath.

Long thou hast groaned 'neath sin and crime;
And powers of darkness all combine
To make poor man to sin a slave,
And send him guilty to his grave,
A wretched mass doomed to decay,
Too loathsome for the light of day.

Many the sorrows thou hast borne.
Since thou wast of thy beauty shorn;
And since thy God pronounced thee good,
Thou hast been crimsoned o'er with blood;
The curse must yet on thee remain
Until the Lord returns again.

And then shall dawn the promised day,
When all thy woes shall pass away;
All glorious then thou shalt arise
Beneath thy new and cloudless skies,
And sin and death forever cease,
And all the earth be filled with peace.

[I hail the approach of that bright day, Bro. Brewer.—ED.]

AMOS 3: 7.

W. H. M.

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

In the preceding verse the question is asked, if there shall "be evil in the city and the Lord hath not done it?" This does not mean moral evil, for God is not the author of that; but rather natural evil, or the calamity which may justly fall on wicked men for punishment for the moral evil which they have done; and then the fact is stated that God will not send this upon them without first revealing it "unto his servants the prophets." To them he could entrust the keeping of his word, and through them warn the unwary of coming judgment. This is in keeping with all his dealings with man in the history of the past. When he would send his judgments upon the Antediluvians, his purposes were first made known to Noah, and he commanded to build an ark to the saving of himself and family. In the overthrow of the Sodomites, God said, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" And through his angels he made known to him his design, and to Lot was the same judgment revealed.

Now, dear reader, we wish to call your attention to some of the revelations of God to his servants in the past in fulfilled prophecy.

I. A prophecy in regard to the house of Eli.—In Eli's family there was not good government, for he did not properly restrain his sons. They departed from the right way and became very sinful, so that they were even termed "sons of Belial." With this God was not well pleased, and sent his servant to inform him of the judgment that should come upon him for all this; who said, "Behold, the days come, that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, that there shall not be an old man in thine house. . . . And this shall be a sign unto thee, that shall come upon thy two sons, on Hophni and Phineas; in one day they shall die both of them." 1 Sam. 2: 31, 34.

About twenty-four years subsequent to this, war broke out between the Israelites and Philistines, and in a hard-fought battle near Aphek the Israelites were defeated with a loss of about four thousand men. Now the sons of Eli were in Shiloh with the ark. "And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Israel said, Wherefore hath the Lord smitten us to-day before the Philistines? Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of Shiloh unto us, that when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies." 1 Sam. 4: 3. So the ark of God was brought into the camp of Israel, with shoutings that made the very earth ring. This rather intimidated the Philistines; but knowing that their destiny depended upon energetic action, they again nerved themselves for another conflict, during which the ark of God was taken and Hophni and Phineas both slain. The news of the death of these two sons so affected their father that he fell from his seat backward and "his neck brake and he died." Not many years after the entire house of Eli was brought to complete desolation. 1 Kings 2: 27. How did the man of God know all this more than a score of years before? God revealed it to him.

II. A prophecy in relation to Jericho.—Jericho was a walled city, near the river Jordan, and not far from the brook where the prophet Elijah hid himself during the famine and was fed by ravens. It is called in the Bible "the city of palm trees." 2 Chron. 28: 15. It is said to have been a wicked city and given much to idolatry, on account of which God determined its overthrow, and sent out his servant Joshua to execute his design. This city God gave into Joshua's hands, and he utterly destroyed it and "burned it with fire." He then bound all his countrymen with an oath that they would never rebuild it, saying, "Cursed be the man before the Lord that riseth up and buildeth this city Jericho; he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first-born, and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it." The idea seems to be, if any one rebuild the city his oldest son shall die when he lays the foundation of it; and in the completion thereof his youngest son shall die also.

More than five hundred years after this, during the reign of Ahab king of Israel, Hiel the Bethelite undertook the work of rebuilding this city; and when he laid the foundation thereof his eldest son Abiram died, and when he was setting up the gates of it his youngest son Segub died also. 1 Kings 16: 34. Thus after the lapse of this long period were the words of Joshua the servant of God literally verified, showing that God had revealed his secret unto him.

III. The prophet of Bethel.—Shortly after the revolt of the ten tribes under Jeroboam, this revolting king made two calves of gold, and set the one up in Dan, and the other up in Bethel, lest by the tribes going to Jerusalem to worship, their heart should turn again to Rehoboam, saying, "Behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." After thus establishing idolatry among the ten tribes and erecting an altar, he ordained a feast in Bethel, putting his priests therein, and offered sacrifice unto the calves he had made and burned incense on the altar. This was very displeasing in the eyes of the Lord, and he sent out of Judah one of his servants to cry against the altar and Jeroboam's idolatrous worship. The king stood by the altar to burn incense, and the man of God cried against the altar "and said, O altar, altar! thus saith the Lord; Behold, a child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee. And he gave a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the Lord hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out. And it came to pass when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Bethel, that he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, Lay hold on him. And his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him. The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the Lord." 1 Kings 13: 3–5.

More than three hundred years passed away. The altar and the grove were still there in Bethel, and no indication that the words of Judah's prophet would ever prove true, save the wonderful scenes that occurred at their utterance, which were still on record. At length a child was born of the house of David who was named Josiah. At the age of eight years he began his reign. This king had respect for the true worship of God, and far and near throughout his realm cut down the groves and brake down the images of the idolatrous worshipers. He came at length to Bethel, where were the grove and altar built by Jeroboam the son of Nebat, more than three hundred and fifty years before. The grove he burned and the altar brake down. Just then "he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the Lord which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words." 2 Kings 23: 16. How minutely these words of God through his prophet were fulfilled!

IV. The house of Jeroboam.—Jeroboam was a wicked king, and did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord. After a time his son Abijah was taken sick, and he told his wife to disguise herself and go down to the prophet Abijah and inquire of him what should become of the child. Now Abijah was old and blind, but God informed him who was coming and gave him a message to deliver to her. As soon therefore as he heard the sound of her feet at the door, he said, "Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam; why feignest thou thyself to be another? for I am sent to thee with heavy tidings." He told her to go back and tell Jeroboam that God would destroy his house and utterly cut off the remnant of his seed. Only a very few years passed before this prophecy was literally fulfilled; for in the reign of Baasha "he smote all the house of Jeroboam; he left not to Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had destroyed him, according unto the saying of the Lord, which he spake by his servant Ahijah the Shilonite; because of the sins of Jeoroboam which he sinned, and which he made Israel sin, by his provocation wherewith he provoked the Lord God of Israel to anger." 1 Kings 15: 29. Here is another of God's secrets, revealed to his servant Abijah, as the sequel fully shows.

V. The house of Baasha.—Baasha was another wicked king, to whom God sent his servant Jehu the son of Hanani, saying: "Forasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel, and thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins; behold, I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house, and will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat."—1 Kings 16: 23. Shortly after the utterance of this prophecy Baasha died, and his son Elah took the throne. The following year he was slain in one of his drunken fits by Zimri, one of his captains who had conspired against him. As soon as Zimri began to reign, he commenced the destruction of the house of Baasha, and did not leave them till he had utterly destroyed "all the house of Baasha, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake against Baasha by Jehu the prophet." 1 Kings 16: 12. Surely when God speaks he means what he says.

VI. Three years' drought.—During the reign of Ahab, God sent Elijah to tell him there should "not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word." 1 Kings 17: 1. That this famine was three years and six months appears from what Jesus says in Luke 4: 25, 26: "But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land; but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

VII. Death of Ahab.—Now Ahab was a very selfish man, and sought the vineyard of Naboth, which was hard by his palace. But Naboth was unwilling to dispose of his vineyard, because it was the inheritance of his fathers. Ahab was very much displeased, and after consultation with Jezebel, his wife, planned his destruction, which was soon executed by his being stoned to death outside of the city. After the death of Naboth, Ahab went down to take possession of the vineyard, and God sent Elijah down to meet him. He met him at the vineyard and said, "In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine." 1 Kings 21: 19.

A few years passed away, and not content with his already acquired possessions, Ahab formed an alliance with Jehoshaphat king of Judah to take Ramoth-gilead. Now both these kings appeared on the battle-field together; "and a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness; wherefore he said unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the host; for I am wounded. . . . And the blood ran out of the wound into the midst of the chariot. . . So the king died. . . And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria; and the dogs licked up his blood, . . . "according to the word of the Lord." 1 Kings 22: 34–38. So also with Jezebel, the wife of Ahab, the Lord said, "The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel"; and about fifteen years afterward she was thrown from a wall in Jezreel and totally devoured by dogs, save the skull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands."

So we might go on multiplying instances of God's secret with reference to his judgments on man. Now will he hide from us his great judgment? No, he will not. He has just as clearly revealed, through his prophets and Jesus his Son, the last great judgment to fall on man. And why will not man take warning and "quick to Christ for shelter fly"? Methinks the storm-clouds are already gathering which betoken the "great day of his wrath." Dear reader, be sure thou art sheltered in Christ the only sure hiding-place from the storm.

THE TRANSFIGURATION OF CHRIST.

C. E. BARNES.

The account of the transfiguration of our Lord as given in the gospels of three of the evangelists is not only of value and interest as setting forth a miniature view of the kingdom of God, but it is also a strong proof of the exact truthfulness of the record itself. This transfiguration either did or did not occur. Either the disciples actually beheld Christ when "his face did shine as the sun," when "his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow," and heard and saw him converse with two of the ancients long before removed from among men, the one by death and the other by translation, or else this wondrous scene is a result of the imagination, and not to have a place among matters of fact. It must be accounted for in one of two ways, either as having actually occurred, or else as being a most vivid scene created by the imagination.

Let us look at it in this latter view for a moment. If it be a creation of the intellect merely, it is the grandest and boldest imagery ever conceived by the mind of man. I venture the assertion that no poet of ancient or modern times has introduced into his verses a scene that can compare with this transfiguration scene. Homer's Illiad, though abounding in bold imagery and striking imaginative scenes, contains nothing to equal this incident found in the gospels. Dante, of the middle ages, and Shakspeare and Milton of more recent times, have never soared so loftily in following the inspiration of their muse as to equal this imagery of the gospels. They do indeed bring back the dead to the scenes of life, and confront them with the living, and in a way which has won for them the admiration of the world; but the transfiguration of Christ, the appearance of Moses and Elias upon the mountain top, and their conversation together, and the audible voice of God from heaven, all constitute a scene such as is found nowhere else.

But if we regard it as merely imaginative, then we are confronted with a miracle, for where was the poet's mind in which was born the glorious conception? The mind capable of imagining such a scene as this must rank at least with the greatest poets the world has ever produced; yet the men who actually gave this sublime vision to the world had no poetry in them. By profession they followed an humble and laborious vocation, and the gospels they have written show that they were far from being educated and cultured men. They record in the most meagre way transactions which the pen of a genius might and would have set forth in a much more impressive and forcible style. A few common place sentences contain all that they felt moved to write descriptive of the most stupendous miracles; and even their account of the transfiguration is dull and brief compared with what could be said by men of different temperaments, and of finer and keener susceptibilities. How, then, can it be said that this scene is a fiction? The men who declare it were not capable of conceiving or imagining such a thing, yet to regard it but as a beautiful fiction is to impute power and ability to these humble fishermen which it is easy to show they did not possess; it is to assert one miracle in order to dispose another.

There remains, therefore, but one other solution, and that is to say that these men who declare this wondrous event do so simply because it actually occurred, and they really witnessed it. These writers, though incapable of devising in their own minds such a transaction, could write what they saw and heard, and that it is just what they have done in the accounts they have given us of the transfiguration of the Son of God. That the incident is recorded in the gospels can only be fairly accounted for on the assumption that it is a statement of a fact, of what the parties concerned actually saw and participated in; and it thus becomes another of the many internal evidences of the Book to its own authenticity and truthfulness.

The transfiguration occurred as related in the gospels, and then follow several blessed yet tremendous consequences. Jesus Christ is the Son of God, else that more than solar illumination had never irradiated his countenance. He is the Son of God, again, else there had never come "such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And being the Son of God, all that he taught is truth, and all that he spoke is sure. Further, it follows that the Old Testament story of the translation of Elijah is true, else he would not have appeared "in the holy mount," a typical representative of all those who shall be living on the earth when the Lord comes, and shall be caught up to meet him in the air, without passing through death. And yet further, the transfiguration scene illustrates and demonstrates the power of God over the dead, for Moses, who received such entombment as other mortal never had, was on the mount also, not as a disembodied spirit, not as a proof that the dead are alive, but a resurrected saint, the type of all those sleeping in the dust of the earth who shall awake to immortality at the summons of the Son of God.

And lastly, it follows that "we have not followed cunningly devised fables" in looking for "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." His Kingship is no more a matter of uncertainty to his people, for he hath in this event made them "eye witnesses of his majesty." O glorious sight! even though but transient, it has dispelled our fears, and confirmed our hope, and strengthened our faith. May the prospect of the eternal vision of the glorified King ever cheer us in our pilgrimage, and stir our hearts to zealous service in his cause, until that day when we shall see him whom our souls love, and seeing him, shall be made like him, being "changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

WHY ARE WE A SEPARATE PEOPLE?

BY M. J. JANES.

Because our faith embraces dispensational truth, a present truth; and God has committed it to us, and we are responsible for the holding of it. We must let our light shine. God called us out, and made us a separate people, in order that the world should be warned of its approaching doom; for "this gospel of the kingdom must be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." And this message we were not allowed to publish in the churches. Then what are we doing to warn the world, and send this gospel everywhere? What means are we using? Our work must be emphatically a missionary work. This gospel must be preached in all the world.

The churches have both foreign and home missionaries, and are endeavoring to send the gospel everywhere. But where are our mission funds, either home or foreign, with which to carry the news of coming judgment? Is there any cause at all why we should be a separate people? It is that this gospel must be preached, and we are to do it. Otherwise there is no sense in our separating ourselves at all. God never brought judgment on a single individual city or nation, without first warning them; thereby giving them time to repent; leaving it so that they will be without excuse if lost finally.

Is it reasonable to suppose that God will bring a doomed world to judgment without warning? Impossible. Then if God called us out, this is our work, and if we fail God will spue us out of his mouth, and raise up others that will do this work.

What a fearful responsibility rests upon each of us! God has given us all that we need to do this work. We have ministers—scores of them, driven from the field to serve tables, after using up their little all; men in whose hearts the gospel is like fire shut up in their bones. There are dear good brethren and sisters everywhere, to whom God has entrusted the good things of this world, who do all they can for God and his truth, that souls may be saved. Why do so many calls for help go unheeded? Because many ministers are serving tables who ought to be out preaching. We lack consecration, organization, system, order, discipline. As ministers, by both precept and example, we want to educate the churches to a systematic way of giving to God that which is his, and which he will demand at our hands with interest, shortly. First, let us give ourselves to God, and all else, to be used to his glory; then let us lay by on the first day of the week at least one-tenth of all the Lord has given us during the week; this to be put in the Lord's treasury box, set in a convenient place for the purpose of receiving the Lord's money. This is the only way God ever devised for the support of the gospel, in all its various branches; and he has always given his stewards an abundance to carry on his work without embarassment, if used as he directs. Then we want a tract fund, to send these silent preachers where the living one cannot go, or to open a way for a living one to go. Then we want both a home and foreign mission fund, to send this gospel of the kingdom everywhere, for we must preach the truth in all the world. To do this we must have system, and men filled with faith and the Holy Ghost.

Muskegan, Mich.

PROPHECY.

BY A. W. SIBLEY.

In the divine Revelation, the Book of God, we have a wonderful prophetic description of events that were to occur in the political, physical, and ecclesiastical world, until the consummation of the age. God has deemed it expedient to give his people a prophetic delineation of those things that were to transpire all along the pathway of human history. Some of these prophetic utterances refer to persons, tribes, nations, cities and kingdoms. Some of them refer also to the earth and the lower order of animals inhabiting it, together with the rivers, seas and fountains of waters, or things of a terrestrial character.

Many of these predictions refer to the various changes characterizing human governments at the present eventful period of the world's history, as well as those to which they have been subjected in the past.

Since these events are so distinctly marked and clearly announced by the inspired writers on the prophetic page, hundreds of years before their accomplishment; and since many of them have been fulfilled, and are now in process of an accomplishment, and are recorded on the pages of history, it seems that there must have been an importance attached to the giving of prophecy on the part of Deity, that the masses do not comprehend and are inclined to be willingly ignorant of. The idea entertained by very many to-day respecting the Word of God, renders it useless and unimportant, especially that portion of it which is prophetic, and so grandly and beautifully sets forth and betokens the blessed coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to this world again.

That prophecy is important and intended to fill a specific place in the system of divine truth, is evident, since a very large per cent. of the sacred Scriptures is prophecy. This must be obvious to every one who has carefully examined the subject.

1. If the Divine Mind had not thought the church would need the lamp of prophecy to shine on her pathway during her militant state, he would not have given it. How grandly it has illuminated her pathway all along her pilgrimage, and especially when in the immediate proximity of her grand triumph and eternal victory. There is now a glorious outburst of light, a grand illumination of unparalleled splendor, coming from the fulfillment of the prophetic Word, bespeaking to her that her warfare will soon be accomplished, and that eternal blessings will soon be bestowed upon her in the land for which she has fought.

2. Prophecy is important since prophecy and its fulfillment presents an unanswerable argument to those who deny the authenticity of the Scriptures. God's people in every age have been brought into conflict with the powers of darkness and the elements of infidelity; but at this time her enemies are now determined, and infidelity is seen in a bolder type and in a more gigantic form than at any other period of her history. And this may be expected, since the church is passing the closing scenes of the gospel economy. The filling up of the mould of prophecy affords the church a strong weapon with which to successfully contend against the infidel hosts and the anti-christian influences of these times. When a prediction is accomplished that was uttered many years before its accomplishment, it proves very conclusively that the utterance is inspiration, or that the person uttering the prophecy did speak by divine authority and not of himself.

3. Prophecies are valuable, since without them persons could not demonstrate the Messiahship of Christ. There are very many prophecies in the Old Testament which speak with great clearness of the event of the Saviour's first advent to the world. Not only do they speak minutely of the event of the Saviour's first coming, but also of the manner and significant circumstances indicating it, the time of the event, the place of his birth, the objects of his mission, the prominent events of his life, his death, burial, resurrection, ascension, intercession, his ultimate triumph over his enemies, and eternal reign in the "world to come."

These things were spoken hundreds of years before they were accomplished, and when fulfilled, the church has been constrained to say that Jesus was the one of whom Moses and the prophets had spoken. Certainly, aside from these fulfilled predictions, there was no way by which people could determine whether Jesus was the Messiah, except by direct revelation from heaven. Says Jesus: "These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me." Luke 24: 44.

4. The prophecies are important since they form the basis for the hope and comfort of the church. "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Rom. 15: 4. Peter says: "This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you: in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour." 2 Pet. 3: 1, 2.

The church all through the ages has been enabled to say when a divine prediction has been fulfilled, "This is that which was spoken by the prophet," and hence has been confirmed in the faith and promises of God.

With such strong and incontrovertible evidences of the divinity of the sacred Scriptures as are exhibited in the fulfillment of prophecy, we are compelled to exclaim in the language of the Psalmist, "Thy word, O Lord, is true from the beginning." How wonderfully the end has been declared from the beginning. With what minuteness have the existing phases of human governments been foretold! With what exactness have human events filled up the divine programme for a period of nearly six thousand years!

TRUTH AND MISTAKES.

BY C. G. COFF.

It is often sneeringly said of the apostles of our Lord, by those who ought to know better, that their ideas of the place and general character of Messiah's kingdom were gross, inasmuch as that they expected that Christ was then and there to organize a literal kingdom for Israel on the earth. The same is also said of a class of disciples of Christ and Bible students of the present day, who entertain this same "hope of Israel" for which Paul was "bound with a chain."

That the apostles were mistaken in their expectations is true; that the disciples of the Lord have at various times, and especially within the last half century, been also mistaken is true. But what was the apostles great mistake? the expectation of a literal kingdom? No. If so, Jesus never corrected it; but very forcibly sustained it. It will not do to charge the apostles with the gross idea that they expected Christ to reign over them as mortal men, for the words of the prophecies contained in the Old Testament were always sighing out respecting the Messiah's kingdom. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." Do you suppose those apostles expected that such an enduring kingdom was to exist without immortal subjects and an immortal King? No. Peter, upon whose shoulders a great share of this grossness is laid, was all right about immortality. When many were leaving Christ, and he said unto the twelve—"Will ye also go away?" Peter answered, "Lord, to whom shall we go? for thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." What then was their mistake? It was the time or season of the kingdom; not its place or character. Let us see some of their conversation with Jesus on the subject. Luke 24.

Two of the disappointed disciples (said to be Luke and Cleopas) were journeying to Emmaus, after the death of him who they thought was to be King, and were joined by a supposed stranger; and they fell into conversation on the grand topic of the hour—Jesus' death. They freely expressed their disappointment thus: "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." Their faith in his resurrection was too faint to relieve their sadness. They did not expect that their Christ would die. They took him for an immortal being, for when previously told by Jesus that he must die, the Jews said, "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever." So because he died they thought they had been mistaken. Soon the stranger proved to be Jesus himself. He corrects them; but how? Does he say "O fools, and slow of heart to believe in a literal kingdom on earth"? No; he was well aware that that was their belief. He simply corrects them for not believing "all that the prophets have spoken." He showed them that there was something to precede his kingdom that they little thought of. "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." Luke 24: 27. If he did that he must have touched upon the fifth kingdom of Daniel's prophecy, showing it a future event. Who knows but that was what made their "hearts burn within them" with such renewed hopes?

About forty days afterward the apostles met Jesus on Olivet's brow, and began to inquire about the kingdom. "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Does he tell them they have a wrong idea of the character of his kingdom or place of his throne? No. He knew that they understood from the prophecies and history that the Jewish kingdom had been dispersed, and he, since his resurrection, was looked to as its Restorer. And he allowed them thus to think. But to disabuse their minds of the thought of its immediate succession, he says: "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." So it was the time which the Saviour would correct them upon; of the rest they were fully apprised.

According to the prophecies, containing the promising voice of God, they looked for a real king, who should take the kingdom left by Jedekiah, and restore it, and reign in peace forever, as the successor in the promise to David concerning his seed. When Jesus told them of what death he should die, we hear them saying: "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever," that is, the Messiah we look for is to take our kingdom and forever reign.

To show that the entire Jewish people were looking for a literal kingdom we quote from a work ("Credo") by Prof. Townsend of Boston University: "The entire Hebrew commonwealth was established upon a most vivid view of the future. ... days of greatest power and splendor, under the reigns of David and Solomon, future events furnished its inspiring themes. We need express no surprise, much less refer the cause to climate, laws, or national peculiarities. The reiterated promises of the prophets respecting a coming King and the establishment of his empire over the whole world, are explanatory. This great and thrilling thought had been the burden of nearly every prophecy. We hear it in the communications of God to the fallen race in Genesis. We hear it in the thundering of the final judgments of Malachi." Respecting the expected time of Messiah's first advent, he says: "There was a time, above every other in Jewish history, when the people were aroused with unusual excitement and expectation. Multitudes who had been residents in distant parts of the world now took up their abode in or near their great metropolis. Every startling event was noted. As soon as the voice of the Baptist was heard, the people flocked to the banks of the Jordan. Publican and Pharisee received his preliminary baptism. They were not filled with idle curiosity, but they believed those were the days of the promised Messiah. The whole Eastern world was alert with eye and ear. It was believed at Rome, while Pompey held Jerusalem, that Judea, or, according to Suetonius, that nature was to bring forth a king. The Senate declared that no child born during the year of the conquest should be permitted to live. Every family in Rome thought it saw in its own child the universal monarch. The decree could not be enforced. There was no doubt in the Jewish mind that the time of Herod and Pilate would witness the advent of the One of whom all the prophets had spoken."

Now were all these people wrong in their expectations? Their mistake was in overlooking the "sufferings of Christ"—his humiliation and atonement, and anticipating too soon "the glory that should follow." Otherwise their ideas were right in the main. The Scriptures gave no uncertain sound. See Gen. 49: 10; 2 Sam. 7: 12–16; 1 Kings 2: 4; Isa. 9: 6; Ezek. 21: 25; Ps. 89: 33, 34; Micah 5: 3; Luke 1: 32, 33.

After the ascension of Christ and the descent of the Spirit, the hope of the apostles revived again. Peter breaks out in praises to God in his first epistle for this begetting to "a lively hope." Paul declares that from his intercessory place Christ shall—unto them that look for him—"appear the second time without sin [a sin-offering or atonement] unto salvation." And here is the point to which the apostles point us for the fulfillment of the deferred hope of Israel, when that which they looked for will be realized.

Those promises made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are not to be repudiated. He still declared himself their God. Faithful, not fleshly, Israel's King lives to-day, and we look for him soon to take the throne of his father David, and reign in peace from the river to the ends of the earth, when it shall have been ridden of sin and restored to its Edenic perfection.

I NEVER KNEW YOU.

BY J. M. QUIMBY.

Who was it that Christ never knew? Was it somebody that never made any profession of religion? No, for they say, Have not we prophesied in thy name? Hast thou not taught in our streets? But he will say, I never knew you. Can it be possible that we can prophesy in his name, and in his name cast out devils, and yet he not know us? How sad to hear him say, "I never knew you." We expected to enter those gates; expected a crown, and thought to see friends that have slept long in death. We had hoped to walk the streets of gold, to drink of life's pure river, and to have God put his own soft hand on our tear-stained cheek and make it dry forever, and then to hear him say, "I never knew you; depart." O think of it. We cannot have another chance, but we must depart and be forever lost. We must die and be forgotten forever. Will it be me? Will it be you?

Perhaps we are privileged with the means of grace, such as going to the house of God to sing his praise, to kneel before him, to worship him, to exhort our brethren, lest they be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; but for some trifling excuse we stay away. To such I fear he will say, "I never knew you."

MEN like to ask, when we recommend anything, whether we have tried it ourselves, whether it is merely some fine-spun theory we are preaching to them, or whether it is that we have known and felt it in our own soul's experience. Let us all be witnesses to God's saving power, both by word of mouth and mode of life, and by this shall all men know that we are his disciples, because the testimony of our lips is carried out by a life which corresponds and tallies with it. The Lord help us to be true to him, true to ourselves, and true to those whom we labor to teach in spiritual things.

AS IN nature, so in art, so in grace; it is rough treatment that gives souls as well as stones their lustre. The more the diamond is cut the brighter it sparkles; and in what seems hard dealing, there God has no end in view but to perfect his people.

THE MERIT OF HUMAN ACTS.

The merit or demerit of human acts is in their design. The merit of an act is in its moral character. The moral character of an act is determined by a moral standard, while the political character is known by a political standard. These standards are made by God and men. God's standard is perfectly correct according to justice, mercy and equity. Man's standard, being produced by an imperfect knowledge of justice, mercy and equity, is necessarily imperfect. Therefore it is important that we use God's rule by which to determine the merit or demerit of all our acts.

It is said of God's standard or law, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfiling of the law." Rom. 13: 10. It is plain therefore that God's rule by which the virtue or goodness of all human deeds are determined is by the love or hatred which moved the actor to perform the deed. This love or hatred must exist prior to the act, because one of them produces the purpose designed to be accomplished by the act.

If a man puts the torch to his neighbor's house, with the purpose to work "ill" to him by its destruction, hatred to that neighbor must have existed in his heart prior to the design to burn the house. The moral virus of the deed was in the hatred, and the sin was in the purpose to burn the house. If, after the wicked purpose had been made, the man had been prevented from using the torch, the sin of burning the house would have been the same to him by the divine standard. So on the other side, if we by love design to benefit a person, and are prevented doing the good deed, God will accredit us as having done it.

Jesus said, "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." Matt. 5: 28. The moral character of the act existed before the deed was performed, and was produced by the [illegible] heart to do it. So it is in [illegible] the goodness of an act is [illegible] heart by the operation of love, and exists just as really and fully as it does after the accomplishment of the deed.

This truth is clearly manifested in the case of Abraham offering his son. God commanded him to offer Isaac a burnt sacrifice, and Abraham understood God to mean that the deed should not only be accomplished in purpose, in the heart, but also in act by the knife and fire; for there are two distinct parts to all moral acts of obedience to God, one by the spiritual forces of the heart, the other by the physical forces of the body. As it is impossible to purpose to do that which we know we shall not or cannot do, God could not test the real loyalty of Abraham's heart in purposing to slay his son without withholding from him his own purpose of requiring him to accomplish but one part of the act. This part of the commandment was fully accomplished according to the design of Jehovah. Paul says of this act of Abraham, "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son. Of whom it was said, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called. Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure." Heb. 11: 17-19.

The apostle says he "offered up Isaac," which certainly is a statement that the deed was really accomplished, which cannot relate to the shedding of blood, but to the fixed purpose in the heart of doing so. It cannot be said that Abraham anticipated his release from accomplishing the second part of the deed, for Paul says he "accounted God able to raise him up, even from the dead," so that he really anticipated [illegible]c's death by his obedience to God. [illegible] scriptural test upon this subject is very clear, that God's standard by which the moral character of all human probationary acts are tested applies exclusively to their nature as produced by the purpose of the heart.

We become members of the Divine Family, and are the children of God, when we receive the divine nature, which has its seat in our hearts, regulating the designs by which we act by the same spiritual forces which controlled Jesus Christ.

By this argument we get this rule: The moral character of every act of man is approved or disapproved by God, according to the love or hatred which produced the design for which it was done.

The love and hatred involved here are not the same which inhere in humanity, but are communicated by God or Satan. The love producing a righteous act in a gospel sense comes from God, while the hatred that produces a wicked act comes from Satan. We therefore get this rule: If we are controlled by the love of God, our purpose in acting will correspond to God's purpose in acting. If his purpose in sending sunshine and rain is to benefit both the evil and the good, our purposes in what we do will be to benefit both the evil and the good. If God by his love suffers long with the rebellious, and continues to pour many blessings upon those who blast his fame, and does not seek revenge, but labors long to bring them to salvation, then we, if we have the same love, shall feel towards our enemies and treat them in the same way.

In applying these rules we may test our own hearts by asking ourselves this question—Do we do anything to any person, or say anything to any person in any way, on account of any malice or revenge we may feel in our hearts? If we do, then we may know that our hearts are not right with God, and that such a design is a sin against him. Our eternal destiny is hinged upon the condition of the heart and the divine principles controlling them. Then we should have the utmost care to examine ourselves and see that we are cleansed from the spirit of pride, strife, revenge and war, and filled with perfect love and good-will toward all.

It is not enough to perform Christian duties, for our salvation depends upon the motives we have in doing those things. A man may preach like an angel, but if he does it for money, fame, or the praise of men, he may get these for a reward, but he will fail of receiving eternal life. There must be a divine power within us, raising us above depraved human nature in our aspirations and designs, and elevating us to the grade of life occupied by Jesus Christ. As the day of final decision draweth near, we should watch our hearts with intense criticism, to know that they are pure and in harmony with the gospel, for out of them are the issues of life. J. C.

THE MACEDONIAN CRY.

We have recently received a letter from Bro. James Downing, of the far-off State of Oregon, dated Mount Collin, in which he informs us that there is in Oregon and Washington a broad field ripe for gospel labor, and that there are scattered ones all over that "Pacific Slope," who are watching for the morning of redemption, and who have no shepherds to lead them, or servants of Christ to administer to them the gospel ordinances. He says that there is in that country an ear to hear the good tidings of salvation and the glorious news of Christ's speedy advent. He pleads earnestly that some one or more of the eastern preachers may volunteer to trust in the promises of Christ, and go to that field. They would not suffer for bread or friends.

We do believe that if some of God's servants, who have divine truth like fire shut up in their hearts, and feel a call from Heaven to go into that field, God would give them a rich harvest here, and in the world to come an infinite reward.

We have also received a letter from Portland, Oregon, desiring a faithful ambassador to come and feed the little flock waiting for redemption at Christ's appearing in that rapidly growing city. Is there a man of God waiting to hear the Master's call, who is ready to leave home, father, mother, wife, children, or any other earthly attraction, to go into this region beyond and sound the note of alarm, that some may prepare for the coming judgment? J. C.

FRENCH COMMUNISM AGAIN.

Communism in France has been very quiet for a long time, while it has in other European countries and America been making rapid strides. Its animus seemed to [illegible] the French people so little during the [illegible] of M. Thiers' administration, that [illegible] "It has gone northward in its flight [illegible] day cross the Atlantic." "[illegible]" says the Boston Journal, "He was mistaken in supposing the trouble with Socialism finished in France." It is evidently raising its hydra head again in the country of its nativity, for its dragonic voice is once more heard having the old unpleasant ring. Its cursing and defiant language has been echoing for the last few years in Germany, Russia, and the United States, threatening the torch and the sword to all who will not submit to its dictations.

Thousands of French laborers are now striking for higher wages, and the government is fearful that strikes will become general, and that it will not be able to control the ignorant masses. At a recent meeting of the working-men this sentiment was freely expressed: "Place for the laborer, and down with the capitalist." The times are now propitious for these revolutionists in France, because the crops have been cut off, and business generally is dull, which unavoidably pressed heavily upon the poorer classes, thus producing discontent and a disposition to demand relief. The Journal says of the present situation:

"The aim of the workman is to become entirely his own master, and to reduce the capitalist to a point where the toiling masses will have him at their mercy. If a mischievous man of strong influence were to arise now, he could easily form these workmen into a compact mass of malcontents which would be of great danger to the State.

Unquestionably one of the greatest reforms which the new republic has to undertake is the emancipation of the working classes. No more difficult task could be set, and it is not certain that it can be done. The prejudices and misconceptions of the French workmen are a source of constant trouble to those who are anxious to maintain and increase the spread of liberal institutions in France."

Communism, Socialism and Nihilism are certainly casting a very dark shadow over all the nations, and the thunder of their indignation is sounding louder every year. We firmly believe that the Scriptures do foretell a destructive bloody revolution caused by these agitators, and that it is located at the end of the Gospel Age. The Scriptures cannot be broken; we therefore expect that every undertaking and effort made by the governments and capitalists to suppress and exterminate this terrible evil, will prove unavailing, as they have everywhere until the present time. We expect a general combination of all these classes of all countries, so as to make one grand onslaught on all governments and cities at the same time. We calmly wait the issue. J. C.

A PETITION FROM OHIO.

Eld. D. T. Call, of Norwalk, Huron Co., Ohio, writes us that their great populous State is comparatively destitute of faithful ministers of the gospel, who are willing to preach the last unfolding truths of Revelation, while the cry from the perishing is every mouth sounding louder, Come over and tell us how to obtain eternal life, the meaning of all these strange events, and if the great day of the Lord is at hand. He says in behalf of the Ohio State A. C. Conference, that they need efficient servants of God to assist them in this special and glorious work of directing men, whose hearts are seized with fearfulness to Christ, and to guide the sheep into green pastures. They would be happy to receive one or more good men from the Eastern States, who would become co-laborers with them in this great field now white for the harvest.

We have sufficient personal acquaintance in the State of Ohio to believe that this call for help is in harmony with the gospel and the circumstances of the case. We believe that men having good hearts and minds well stored with Bible truth, trained to exercise the wisdom of the serpent in their presentation of truth, would find a harvest field in Ohio and Indiana, where great sheaves of rich grain might be gathered into the gospel garner. May all of our preachers earnestly pray that they may be directed by the Chief Shepherd, not only to the kind of work they are called to do, but also to the field where they can do the most good in the shortest time. We can see clearly that our time to work is becoming very short, so that every moment and opportunity should be used to the best possible advantage. J. C.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

A fourth attempt to assassinate the Czar of Russia occurred on the Rail Road between Moscow and St Petersburg, on the 2nd of Dec. A subterranean passage way was dug from a cellar to the road bed, one hundred and fifty feet, where a large quantity of powder was deposited. Wires connected the powder with the cellar, so that when the Czar's train should pass an explosion could be accomplished, thus destroying him in defiance of his bullet proof armor, with all his royal attendants. The assassins missed their object, mistaking the imperial train for another, so that His Majesty's life was again providentially preserved. The work assigned by God to Alexander is evidently not yet all accomplished, so that the Nihilists labor in vain to take his life while Providence protects it. Such acts of violence tend to exasperate all the governments in the world against the Communists and Nihilists, and to hasten a desperate bloody conflict between them.—ED.

"SUNLIGHT."

Bro. Silas Henn, of England, who has written some excellent articles for the Crisis, has issued a work entitled, "Sunlight dispersing the Dismal Shadows; or, the Doctrine of Eternal Torments shown to lack Reason and Scripture." This work should be read by all believers in the doctrine of endless misery. It is the best on the subject, of its size and price, known to the writer now in the market. All who wish to do their neighbors a good service, will do well to get one or more copies of "Sunlight" to lend. Price 25 cts. M. G.

"A NOTE OF WARNING."

Under the above heading, the New York Daily Times, Nov. 21st, 1879, says: "We have now something like six millions of Irish citizens, all acquired in the last thirty years or so." In the December [1879] number of the North American Review, Mr. James Anthony Froude has an article on "Romanism and the [illegible] in the United States," in which [illegible] some startling information, [illegible] promise of more to follow in a later [illegible]. There is no doubt but that the Roman Catholics are laying large plans to secure the control of this country. So far as known, they purpose to secure by ballot, the election of their own men to fill the offices of trust in this country, and then pass laws to favor the Roman Catholic church, until they can revolutionize the present system of government, and make theirs the national religion. "The woman of the seven hills" has lost her dominion at Rome, but is prevailing in America. This fulfills the prophetic mould, as given by the prophet Daniel. M. G.

"WORSE AND WORSE."

Dr. Kittredge, an able Congregationalist minister in Chicago, has spoken out quite plainly concerning the present moral and religious aspect of things in the world. He is reported as saying:

"It matters not in what direction you look, sin is on the increase, but the church is losing ground in her conflict with sin; she has almost ceased to be felt as a power. If a majority of our church organizations were to-day to become extinct, the world would hardly know it."

The Chicago Advance takes occasion to criticise Dr. Kittredge with some severity. It says:

"Now, for one who is sent to preach the glorious gospel of the blessed God, a gospel of good news for all people, and who is called to preach it to a people with their eyes open, and who do not confine their Sunday reading to the Sunday dailies, such talk is arrant nonsense. It is simply pessimistic slander."

It is a problem of no importance who is right, Dr. Kittredge or The Advance. Time will settle the question. The Dr. is certainly in harmony with the Bible. See 2 Tim. 3: 13. M. G.

The Archbishop of Moscow has publicly taught that the Emperor of Russia is the vicar of God, inspired and infallible in his utterances, and to be obeyed as God himself.

IN MEMORIAM.

"Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men."

Death has hurled with unerring aim another fatal shaft. Another good man has fallen. Another faithful Christian worker has finished his earthly career and sunk to rest. Another true soldier of Christ sleeps in the great valley of the dead. Another life of intrinsic value is extinguished—gone out on earth to be rekindled at the resurrection of the just. Another home and hearthstone are shrouded with gloom, and another loved and loving family circle mingle their tears around a new-made grave. Another place in the church of God, long and faithfully filled, is made vacant. Another earnest and inspiring voice has ceased from the great earthly chorus of prayer and praise.

"Death loves a shining mark."

Our much beloved brother and fellow laborer, HENRY V. DAVIS, of New Bedford, Mass., fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of Nov. 27th, at seven o'clock. He died in his own home where he had lived, and prayed and walked with God for half a century, breathing his last in the arms of his only son.

Bro. Davis was born in Westport, Aug. 16th, 1811, being sixty-eight years old at death. At the age of twenty-one he commenced business [illegible] Bedford, and soon became one of the most active, enterprising and successful business men of his city; holding, through all his career, the fullest confidence of the business public. His honesty and strict financial integrity were proverbial. One of the pastors of the city said, "Our whole people rise up in this hour of bereavement and declare that Mr. Davis was an honest man and a good man." His unblemished life as a citizen gave weight and influence to his religious faith and character.

Our brother's kindness and benevolence were as exceptionally manifested as his honesty. It was literally true that the poor rose up and called him blessed. His hand was always wide open to every public charity; and his private benevolence outrun his public gifts. No needy one ever went empty away from his door. Scarcely a day passed but some hungry man or woman feasted at his table. So well known were his charities that scores of tramps sought relief at his door, nor ever sought in vain. The poor of New Bedford have lost a true friend.

Bro. Davis was a Christian. Himself and his wife, in the year of their marriage, sought and found the Savior, and until the moment that death parted them—a period of forty-six years—they walked with God together. For the first six or eight years of his religious life he was a worthy and active member of the Christian church. When the great prophetic message of Christ's personal coming was proclaimed by Mr. Miller and others, he most heartily embraced the blessed HOPE of the personal advent, the literal re-living of the dead, and the everlasting kingdom of God to be established in a regenerated earth, under new heavens—the coming and the kingdom "[illegible] even at the doors." To this faith he [illegible] adhered until the moment of his depar[illegible]. The joyful expectation of Christ's [illegible]ing and the glory that shall follow [illegible] him to the last; and he sank into the sleep of death in the full assurance that his repose in the grave would be brief, very brief. He proved the sincerity of his faith by devoting his whole influence with a liberal share of his income to the establishment and maintenance of an Advent meeting in his city. Years ago he purchased the Chapel on Kempton Street, and held it for the use of the Advent Church till a few months before his death, when he purchased the larger and more commodious house where the people of his choice now worship. He was the Father of the church of which he was a member, and most ardently devoted to its welfare, sparing no pains or expense for its prosperity; and the church loved him as a Father, and leaned on him as a divinely appointed leader; and they mourn for him as Israel mourned for Moses. We bespeak for them the prayers of the churches.

Bro. Davis was certainly one of the best friends our ministry has ever had. His house was always open to their weary feet, and his hand open to their many needs. A warm welcome greeted every one, whether distinguished or lowly, who came with the glad message of the coming kingdom; and many a poor preacher's wife and children have eaten the bread of gladness through his beneficence. His kindness towards his employes attracted public notice; and none mourned him more sincerely than the workingmen of his establishment, who gave fitting expression of the love they bore him in one of the most beautiful floral tributes that decked the coffin of their dead friend.

Our deceased brother occupied a wider field of Christian and benevolent activity than comes of simple church relations. He was one of the most prominent and influential men in the Advent body, and officially related to all our interests. As to his official standing among us, as a religious people, we cannot do better than to quote the words of the Editor of the World's Crisis:

"Bro. Davis' name has appeared on the list of the official members of our Publication Society every year since its organization. He sat with us in council when the proposition for the publication of the Crisis was first discussed. He has ever been one of its most efficient managers, and one of its most liberal supporters. He very early in the proclamation of the Advent message embraced it, and has ever manifested a most hearty and self-sacrificing interest in its proclamation and publication. In his death this Office has lost one of its most devoted friends, who has doubtless contributed more funds to its support than any other man. We feel authorized to say for every member of our Official Board that we are all sincere mourners, but we have the consolation of the assurance that our esteemed brother fell at his post—fell with his armor on, nobly battling for Christ, the Gospel, and for the prosperity of the church."

But the lustre of our brother's character shone brightest in his strictly religious life. Ardent, of positive convictions, sanguine of his own views, zealous in the defence of what he believed to be truth, and intensely attached to the people with whom he was connected, he was no bigot or narrow-minded sectarian. His piety was broad and sympathetical. He loved all Christians, and prayed for the prosperity of the church at large. By no means free from the weakness, misjudgments, and short-comings which befall all mortal men, we believe his heart was pure and his life exceptionally righteous. He will be tenderly and gratefully remembered by all who knew him.

Into the sacred enclosure of his domestic life—his home relations—where he was best known and best loved, we may not obtrude with many poor words of ours. It is enough for us to say that he was a true, faithful, loving and devoted husband; a most affectionate, and indulgent father. He has left to his widow and his large family circle the imperishable legacy of an unspotted character and a godly life; the sweet memories of pure and rare affection and life-long, earnest prayers. The many mementoes and reminiscences of his characteristic affection and rare virtues in his home-life, are delicate souvenirs, sacredly treasured by the dear household band of which he is no longer the head and the joy. May heavenly consolations rest upon all the bereaved and stricken ones; and in the blissful morn of the glorious resurrection may they clasp hands with their sainted dead without one missing link.

The funeral services were held at his dwelling on the afternoon of Sunday, Nov. 30th, at two o'clock. Long before the time of service the spacious house was crowded, and many went sadly away, not being able to obtain admittance. All classes were represented, from the most humble to the most influential. Many business men of the city were present. We have attended many funerals, but never one where grief and sympathy seemed so profound and general. Two of our most venerable preachers, Matthew Batchelor and S. S. Brewer, were present and occupied seats with the family. Had the funeral been on a week day, many of our ministers would, no doubt, have felt it a mournful pleasure to have followed one so universally beloved to his grave.

And so the true friend, the earnest Christian, the faithful man of God, having kept the faith and finished well his course, calmly and sweetly sleeps in Jesus till the glad hour—so soon expected—when the voice of the descending Savior shall call him, and the saints of all the ages, from their dusty beds to "Home, sweet HOME."

"Then again we hope to meet him
Where no farewell tears are shed."

E. A. STOCKMAN.

"IN THE REGIONS BEYOND."

Dear Bro. Couch:—In reply to a notice of mine bearing the above caption, which appeared in the Crisis of Nov. 12th, I have received many responses and pressing invitations to come and preach the Word of God.

At the time I wrote I was impressed with the thought of the demand for gospel labor in the many desolate fields forsaken on account of the poverty of the people, and their want of means to help sustain a minister of the gospel. There are many sections of our dear New England where the people are too poor to pay the traveling expenses of those that bear the precious message of peace to poor sinners through our Lord Jesus Christ. Shall these be entirely neglected? Is there no answer to the many humble prayers that have gone up to God that He would send some one to feed them, and sound the cry through the hills and valleys of the riches of the glorious hope in the gospel of the Son of God?

I felt that many a brother and sister in reading the Crisis, especially the appointments, had groaned in the spirit, while they said within themselves: O that we could have such gospel help as the brethren have in Boston, New Bedford, Worcester, Lawrence, Haverhill, Biddeford and Portland!

To these brethren I wish to say, Pray on. Keep the petitions going up to God. Do not forget Him nor distrust His power. When the time comes for you to be remembered, God can stir up the heart of some poor weak one, as He moved the hearts of Colby, Marks, Muller, and the thousands that have gone forth as the heralds of salvation in other days.

With these contemplations of the wants of the class referred to, I wrote the notice.

On my return from Boston last Friday night, I found the first response. It came from Hiram, in the western part of the State. The invitation was a pressing one. The writer said he had been praying for some one to proclaim the glorious coming of our King and the establishment of the kingdom of God under the whole heavens. The Bro. promised us all we asked, and said he would take care of one or two more who might come with me to help. The Lord bless you, dear Bro. D. We hope to be able in the providence of God to come unto you shortly and bring the gospel of peace.

Since coming home I have received some fourteen pressing invitations to visit different places. These requests come from Illinois, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine. All say, "Come over and help us." Truly a Macedonian cry; yet they are too poor to pay us a salary. Now what is best to do in such cases? Who will advise us to write back and ask these poor ones to scrape around and see how much they can raise to pay us before we go? Who will go as the great apostle to the Gentiles went, when he was trying to get at work in upper Asia, and found all doors closed? at last he heard the cry from the European side of the Hellespont—"Come over and help us!" I have never learned that this apostle shouted back in response, "How much do you pay your preachers a Sunday?" He had used himself to work seven days in a week, as these poor farmers do who have written me. They work six days, and then walk sometimes ten miles to hear the Word of God.

I was holding a meeting at South Gardiner last spring, and a brother came seven miles in the mud to hear from the dear old Bible. We had a good meeting, and his testimony had a ring in it. We all like good meetings, and when we make some sacrifice to attend them, we usually have good ones.

Now what shall we do in answer to these urgent calls? I think you all say, Go and help them, and let the Lord take care of the results. Yes, we will go and do all we can. Although we cannot visit all who have said Come, yet we can go to our closet and spread these claims before the Lord, and have Him select for us. So we now say to these dear ones that have written us, we will wait upon you as the Lord directs.

My dear brethren in the ministry, I would [illegible] before you, and then [illegible] ask, Will you let [illegible] for help go unheeded? I am aware, dear brethren, that nearly all of you are poor as to this world's goods, and are often in straitened circumstances, and compelled to go and ask of God to open His hand and help you to clothe your dear children, purchase coal and replenish the flour barrel; yet if I should ask you if you lacked anything, from the bottom of your hearts would come the ready reply—Nothing.

How good the Lord is to us all. How much better we have been treated than the Author of our salvation, His apostles, and the fathers in the church, who sealed their ministry with their lives. None of us have had our personal liberty taken from us, and we complain at the little persecution we do receive. If we were more godly our persecution would we greater. If we had more Holy-Ghost faith, we should have less fear that our wants would not be supplied. Truly we are in the perils of the last times. Men are lovers of themselves; and this class is not especially confined to the world. Come, brethren, let us put on faith and look beyond these large churches, that are able to pay, for a call. "Say not, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest. . . . Look up; the fields are white already to harvest."

I have found, in what little experience I have had, that though the speaker be as weak as the writer, wherever he went out with the simplicity of the gospel, he never lacked an audience. The common people are starving for the Word of God. There are thousands of places in our dear New England where they have not had religious meetings for years. Young men and women are growing up only to become infidels and skeptics; and were it not for the few Stephens and Annas, our rural districts would be utterly prayerless; but these are all passing away and will soon be gone. "O God! what shall be the end thereof?" Surely it looks as though we had reached that time declared in the Word of Truth, when there should be "a famine, not of bread, but of hearing the Word of the Lord."

At the Alton Bay Campmeeting the question came up as to how the people could be reached outside the old beaten tracks, in the regions beyond. The matter was fully discussed, and resolutions passed to encourage our ministry to go out among the people and preach the Word of Life and build up new churches. We all felt it duty to go, and resolved we would. The time has come. Who will go? God calls you. The world stretches out the hand for help, and in her last agonies the thousands that are sinking down to damnation and everlasting night appeal to us for succor. Who will man the life-boat and go to the rescue?

"O reapers of life's harvest,
Why stand with rusted blade,
Until the night draws round thee,
And day begins to fade?
Thrust in thy sharpened sickle,
And gather in the grain;
The night is fast approaching,
And soon will come again."

Then let us work while the day lasts, for soon the night will come, and all work will be finished. What an awful charge is ours, that we should declare the end of all things at hand! Do we occupy the position seen in the apocalyptal vision of the angel that put one foot on the land and the other on the sea, and declared by Him that liveth for ever and ever that time should be no longer? If so, may the angel of His Presence help us to be faithful to our work.

I have often wished that I could preach the Word like some of my brethren; then I would start out at once, and not stop until every hill-top and valley echoed and re-echoed with the sound of the coming of the day of God and the gathering of his people; but I must be content to do the little I can. The Lord help us all.

I have written much more than I thought to, but I felt stirred on reading the many calls for help. I would, if I could, beget in the ministry a more bold missionary spirit, and fill them anew with the importance of giving due prominence to the last call, in my judgment, now being made; viz., Prepare to meet the coming day of God!

I will say, in closing, to the dear ones who have written me, that I will write you all personally and send words of encouragement. I shall not be able to answer all your demands, but hope the Lord will send some one filled with the Spirit to help you. I want one or two spiritual men to help me? Who will go? I can only promise you what Jesus said you should receive,—fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, houses, and something to eat as the demands arise. You will have cold storms, drifting snows, and sometimes a cold welcome from the world; yet you must make up your mind for suffering if you follow Christ. You will have his life in part to live over; then, on the other hand, you shall have a home in glory and be allowed to sing the song of the redeemed. Who will go? We expect soon to be on our way. H. K. CHOATE.

ORDINATION.

At a protracted meeting in Friendship, Me., Bro. H. M. York was ordained for the work of the gospel. Brn. J. R. Hall, O. S. French and the writer participated in the services, Sunday, Nov. 16th. Bro. York has labored very acceptably with the church in F. and the vicinity around, for the last eight months. Our meetings of several days were well attended, considering the state of the traveling and the weather. The Word was preached with the Spirit and power. The social meetings were excellent. Several asked the prayers of the saints, and we hope will find Christ their Saviour.

I. C. WELLCOME.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The fourth District Meeting of the Canada, Northern Vermont and Northern New Hampshire Conference convened at Hardwick, Vt., Wednesday, Nov. 19th, and held over the Sabbath. Eld. J. H. Smith, President of the District, presided during the meeting. The preachers present were J. H. Smith, A. S. Williams, L. C. McKinistry, M. McKinstry, C. R. Parsons, O. W. Heyer, L. Bergoine and Bro. Brigham. Brn. A. S. Williams, L. C. McKinstry, C. R. Parsons, L. Bergoine and Bro. Brigham preached during the meeting. Eld. C. P. Dow, President of the Conference, was unable to be present, much to the disappointment of those who assembled there.

The meeting was a good one, increasing in interest from first to last. The preaching and social services were of an excellent character. Five came forward for prayers, and some wanderers were reclaimed. The last meeting, on Sunday evening, was characterized with great solemnity, as over forty persons gathered around the table of the Lord, to commemorate his death and sufferings, and to look forward to the time when he will return to celebrate with all his church the marriage supper of the Lamb. They sang a hymn and went out, long to remember the refreshing season which they had enjoyed together, and with strong desires to meet with the redeemed in the Eden restored. It was not our privilege to be present all through the meeting, but we enjoyed it much while there. M. MCKINSTRY, Secretary.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We wish to extend the circulation of the World's Crisis very largely in places and to persons who have never taken it. In order to do so, and also to arrange it so that every one can help, we make the following liberal offer: We will send it at the rate of 25 cts. for three months; 50 cts. for six months; one dollar for one year. This liberal offer is made as a trial, and we hope the brethren and sisters will realize the importance of this measure, and at once aid the Society in extending the circulation of this paper, and thereby doubling or thribling the subscription list. This offer does not apply to old subscribers, but is for persons who wish to send the Crisis to those who have never had it, among all denominations. All names sent in on this offer will be dropped from the list at the expiration of the term for which the paper is paid, unless renewed at the rate of two dollars per year. We shall each week acknowledge the names and amounts donated for this purpose. All those sending will give the full name and address of those to whom they wish it sent.

P. S.—We cannot allow a per cent. to any one upon any monies at the above rates. AGENT.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

At the late meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, it was voted that all ministers be requested to pay for the World's Crisis sent to them at the rate of one dollar per year; that each church be requested to furnish the Crisis to its own poor at the rate of one dollar per year, and that they take up regular collections for this purpose, or adopt any other mode that they may think proper. According to the vote, we will be obliged to discontinue the present free list as it now stands, and commence a new one. The Society has appropriated two hundred dollars to be used to send the Crisis to the poor, at the rate of one dollar per year. We cannot exceed this sum. Therefore, in order that all the poor may have it, we would suggest that the churches look after those of their number who are unable to pay for the Crisis, and see to it that they have it. We intend making the change Nov. 1st, 1879. AGENT.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The World's Crisis is on sale and can be obtained in Boston at Loring's Book and Periodical Store, corner of Washington and Bromfield Streets; also at E. S. Bliss' Book and Paper Store, 171 Hanover Street. AGENT.

THE dark clouds that have been gathering over Europe and Asia threatening [illegible] revolution, are more thickly condensing instead of becoming rifted with seams of light. Scarcely are the turmoils of conflict quieted a little in South Africa, and Afghanistan, than England is called to confront a new uprising among the turbulent inhabitants of Ireland, which may become an outbreak of a very formidable character. Germany, menaced by Russia, has entered into a compact with Austria. As a counter-league it now seems that Russia and France may form an alliance. While important national interests are at stake, and likely to bring the Great Powers into collision, internal elements are undermining the stability of long established Despotism, Nihilism in Russia, and Communism in other kingdoms gain strength daily. Papal Rome is consolidating her minions to regain her lost supremacy. The most gigantic war ever waged seems imminent. No doubt whoever manages a newspaper for the coming year will have to chronicle great events. No journal can fill the place of one that contemplates events of history in the light of prophecy. Those that discontinue papers devoted to pointing out the connection between the inspired predictions and their accomplishment in the unfolding of human affairs, do themselves the greatest injury.—Restitution.

THE harvest in England has not been so poor since 1816. It is estimated that England will be obliged to expend forty-seven millions of pounds sterling to make good the deficiency in her crops.

VOL. I.—NO. 5. THE WORLD'S CRISIS, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1879.

ELDER A. A. WAITE.

THURSDAY, Nov. 27, 1879.—Rev. A. A. Waite, of this village, has been received into the M. E. Church, Fort Edward, by Rev. Mr. Foster, Pastor.—Sandy Hill Herald.

FORT EDWARD.—Last Sabbath evening Rev. A. A. Waite, Evangelist of Sandy Hill, preached in Bradley Opera House to a very large audience. At the conclusion of the sermon he joined the Methodist Church.—Sandy Hill Herald.

I send you the above that our brethren and the Advent churches may know that Eld. A. A. Waite is no longer connected with us as a people. Personally I have but little acquaintance with him. He recently visited Castleton by his own appointment, and held a few meetings with us; but the Christian friends, who had heard him before on his former visits, were considerably disappointed in the manner of his preaching and as to his doctrine.

Elder Phelps, the Pastor of the Advent Church at Sandy Hill, N. Y., and myself, exchanged pulpits Nov. 16th, and by his request I remained over the next Lord's day, while he went on to Manchester. As I was formerly the Pastor of this church, Mrs. F. accompanied me to visit the Christian friends in Sandy Hill and Fort Edward. It was during our stay that Eld. Waite united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fort Edward, who meets in the "Opera House" while their house of worship is being erected.

During the week, while the Pastor of the church was absent, and notwithstanding a division existed in the church in respect to Eld. Waite, and the propriety of his holding meetings in the Chapel, he was induced to hold "a series of revival meetings" in the Chapel. These meetings were regarded a failure by his friends; and they, by hearing him, were convinced that there was a remarkable change in him in almost every particular, so that he did not seem to be "the Elder Waite" who was with them and their Pastor in former years. He kept even his friends in Castleton and in Sandy Hill in ignorance of his purpose to join the Methodist denomination to the last; and, lest they should know it, repeatedly stated that he never intended to join the Methodists or any other denomination.

News starting from some quarter that Eld. Waite was to join the M. E. Church at Fort Edward on the evening of Nov. 23d, several of his friends from Sandy Hill church went down. It was also circulated that he would give the reasons why he left the Adventists. Two of these friends informed me that he stated publicly, before a large audience, that he had been connected with the Adventists several years; had read all their publications he could; had studied the sermons of their ablest ministers, some of which he had learned and repeated from memory; and he had preached these and his own sermons over and over and over again, until he was sick of them, and that now he had burned them up. And we are sorry to add that he said, "The Adventists do not believe in heaven nor hell; but I do." He renounced his faith fully, declaring, "I am no longer an Adventist." After this he assented to every article of the Methodist creed when read to him, and received the right hand of fellowship.

It is due to our people and cause at large that this statement be made. It is hoped by the members of the churches in Castleton and Sandy Hill that, under the influences of his new Christian associations, and the watch-care of the Methodist denomination, Eld. Waite may be preserved from a return to his former habits and course of life, which would be sad and fatal to him, and exceedingly wound the cause of our Redeemer.

Castleton, Vt. O. R. FASSETT.

FROM BRO. H. K. CHOATE.

Dear Bro. Couch:—By your permission I would say to each and all who have written me to come and help them in gospel effort, that I shall not be able to respond to all of their very kind invitations. I would be glad so to do if I could. When I came to read the warm and spirited invitations—"Come over and help us," my heart bounded with joy mingled with sorrow;—with joy to think the Lord had so many dear ones in secret places, who were praying for help, and working themselves to build up Zion; and with sorrow because there are so few who feel willing to labor in the highways and hedges, though there are so many open doors.

I thank you all, dear brethren and sisters, who have written me. Your warm sympathy expressed and prayers offered for success to attend me in my humble work, God will bless. I shall visit some of you, and labor with you as the Lord may direct. Will you all accept this as an answer to your loving letters, and continue to pray for the upbuilding of the church, and that the Lord will send many more into his vineyard to labor for the perishing. Your Bro. in tribulation.

Obituaries.

[illegible]. In Barnston, P. Q., Nov. 11th, 1879, at the residence of her father, A. Hastings, Sister Sarah Jane Hastings, the beloved wife of Albert Bishop, formerly of Stanstead, P. Q., aged thirty-two years.

Almost thirteen years ago I married this now severed couple, then in the bloom of health and youthful hope; but now, alas! the dark pall of death covers our sister, who found consolation in her gradual approach to the grave by trusting in Jesus. Two children, a son and daughter, are thus deprived of a mother, and her somewhat aged parents, brothers and sisters are left to sorrow, yet not without hope of soon seeing her again in the deathless, sorrowless land. Sermon by the writer from Isa. 25: 6, 7. C. P. DOW.

DUSTIN. In Hebron, N. H., Nov. 14th, 1879, of typhoid and spinal fever, Jennie Mabel, only child of Bro. and Sister Robert Dustin, aged three years and ten months.

We have laid little Jennie away, yet not without hope. We expect to meet her again on the morning of the resurrection, when sickness, sorrow, pain and death shall flee away. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. Wm. H. Shaw, from Job. 14: 14.

"Safe on that distant shining shore,
Where the long parted ones shall meet,
And meeting once, shall part no more,—
There we the loved and lost shall greet."

MAY E. DAY.

SHAW. In Campton, N. H., Oct., 26th, 1879, of typhoid and spinal fever, Bertie P., youngest son of Brother and Sister Wm. H. Shaw, aged eleven years.

Little Bertie was a great sufferer, yet he bore it with remarkable patience for one so young. He was the same faithful trusty boy at home, at school, and in every place. He was loved by all who knew him. We expect he will be among the jewels when Jesus comes to gather them home. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. C. W. Nelson, from 2 Kings 4: 26. MAY E. DAY.

WHITE. In Madison, N. H., Oct. 25th, 1879, Bro. Timothy White, aged seventy-seven years.

He was converted in early life, not only to love Christ, but to talk of his goodness and tell of his power, and to wait for his return from heaven. He had been a constant reader of the Bible, and had perused it pages for the precious truths contained therein. It was our privilege to visit him. A few days before his death we found him still clinging to the precious promises, and was looking forward to the land where death and the tomb can deride no more. May God bless the dear children, and help them to be ready to meet father and mother in a better land. Words of comfort by the writer, N. GLIDDEN.

DEMING. Fell asleep in Jesus, in East Hartford, Ct., Aug. 14th, 1879, Father Timothy Deming, aged ninety-one years.

He died in the blessed hope of a glorious resurrection. He embraced the Advent doctrine in 1841, and it was the blessed theme upon which he loved to dwell till the last hour of consciousness. ELIZA DEMING.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS.

London, Dec. 4. The Daily News' Berlin dispatch says: "The famine in Upper Silesia has become so serious that in many villages over one-third of the population are starving. Distress from famine is appearing in Saxony among the peasants and weavers."

A Berlin dispatch says: "It is reported that Gortschakoff left here well satisfied with the result of his visit. He has had repeated interviews with the Ambassadors of the leading Powers."

A Mahometan priest is under trial by an ecclesiastical court in Turkey for assisting Protestant missionaries in a translation of the New Testament into Turkish.

The omens in Europe are decidedly belligerent. Notwithstanding the advent of winter, says a Berlin correspondent, fortifications are being rapidly constructed everywhere. Russia is building half a dozen new forts at Ivangorod, in Poland. France has commenced the erection of fresh forts at Maubeuge, Lille and Dunkirk—all on the Belgian frontier. Prussia's War Minister acknowledges the strategical necessity of adding another set of metals to the Moselle Railway. Austria fortifies the Alpine passes against Italy, while Holland is perfecting her inundation system, and Denmark discusses the protection of Copenhagen from the land side.

The Times correspondent at Vienna reports that intelligence is received from Cettinje that large bodies of Albanians have taken up their position at Gusinje, one of the places the Porte ceded to Montenegro to take possession. A Vienna dispatch says that a strong force of Montenegrins have marched on Gusinje, pillaging and burning everything before them. More than three [illegible] Albanian Mussulmans were mercilessly slain.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 1. The Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Tabernacle Church have instructed the pastor, T. DeWitt Talmage, to institute measures to separate the church from the Presbyterian denomination, on account of what they allege to be the wanton and persistent pursuit and persecution of the pastor by wicked, malignant and malicious men, under the garb and pretext of ecclesiasticism.

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 1. The front and back walls with the roof of the new Baptist Church on James street fell in to-day. Loss $10,000.

Mrs. Margaret Trupey died on Tuesday at the house of her granddaughter in Flushing, L. I., at the age of 110 years. She was born in Roscommon county, Ireland, Aug. 15th, 1769, and had lived in Flushing for the past twenty-five years. Until a few months before her death she enjoyed good health.

London, Dec. 6. During a cyclone in the Bay of Bengal a storm wave swept over Monkish Khal Island, drowning several hundred persons.

Pesth, Dec. 7. The Koros river has risen rapidly in consequence of severe snow storms and inundated the city of Groswardein in Hungary. Thousands of the inhabitants are fugitives in need of shelter. Many houses have been destroyed, and the neighboring villages are threatened with destruction.

Terrific gale at Aspinwall. A large fall of water and five or six vessels wrecked. Warehouses and wharves damaged. Great suffering among the inhabitants.

A serious fire occurred at Troy, N. Y., Dec. 7th, involving a loss of over $350,000 and temporarily turning out of employment about 1800 persons.

Notices.

NOTICE.—The next Quarterly Meeting of the Sanilac District, Mich., embracing six churches, is appointed to be held with the church in the rising village of Peck, fourteen miles west of Lexington, commencing Friday evening, Jan. 2nd, 1880, and continue over Sunday. The church, with the aid of citizens, have just completed a neat and commodious Chapel, 30x45 (the first in the town), and propose to have it dedicated during the meeting. It is hoped our churches will be well represented, and that scattered ones in Eastern Michigan and Western Ontario will make a special effort to be present. Come praying that the Lord's Spirit may be with us in power.

For the churches. GEO. W. WRIGHT, Pastor.
R. J. Arnot, Chairman. Oliver Yake, Sec.

MINISTERS' MEETING.—The ministers of the A. C. Conference of Conn. will hold a three days' meeting at Yalesville, commencing Dec. 30th, at 2 P. M. The object of this meeting is the mental and spiritual improvement of the Conference ministers, and also for gospel work. The morning meetings will be private; the afternoons will be devoted to the discussion of the following subjects: Tuesday, "Revival Work"; Wednesday, "Temperance"; Thursday, "Order." Preaching each evening. As Wednesday is the last day of the year, there will be a Watch Meeting. We hope all will try and come to this meeting. The laity are invited. WM. C. STEWART, President. H. W. PERKINS, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Conference of the Dominion of Quebec, Northern Vermont, and Northern New Hampshire, will hold its Annual Session at Coaticook, P. Q., commencing Jan. 7. Particulars hereafter.—ED.

NOTICE.—The next session of the Penobscot Valley Quarterly A. C. Conference will be held in Searsport, Me., commencing Thursday, Dec. 25th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continuing over the following Sunday. Bro. H. M. York and others are expected to preach the Word. Our last session at Sangerville was a glorious success. May this be even more so on account of the greater display of the Holy Spirit. Strangers will please call on Brn. J. B. Treat, Benj. Tripp, and J. R. Park. For the Conf., O. S. FRENCH.

NOTICE.—The next Tri-annual Session of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Penn. and Southern N. Y. will be held with the church at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Penn., commencing Thursday evening, January 22nd, 1880, and hold over Sunday. A full representation is desired. Homes will be provided for all who come. B. BUTLER, President. H. ZIEGENFUSS, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The fourth session of the Kennebec Valley Quarterly Conference will be held in Bowdoinham, Me. (White School-house), commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 25th, and hold over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, all who can, to work for the salvation of the perishing and sound the alarm of coming judgment. Call on W. Small and E. O. Dinsmore. J. R. HALL, President. F. E. BLAISDELL, Sec.

NOTICE.—The Oxford and Androscoggin Co. Conference will hold its next session at Bridgton Centre, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 18, at 7 o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. Strangers will inquire for Farnsworth Kilborn or Dr. L. G. Kimball. JARED WHITMAN, President. JOSHUA HOWARD, Secretary.

NOTICE.

Our State Missionaries, appointed by the Massachusetts Conference, have been quietly but earnestly working for the proclamation of our Lord's near coming and the salvation of souls, and with marked success. They are now needy of material aid. If those whose pledges for their support are unpaid will forward the amount due to the Treasurer, Eld. C. Goodrich, at the Crisis Office, it will afford relief. E. A. STOCKMAN, President Mass. Conf.

Revival Work.

Feeling that we are near the setting sun, and what is done in the gospel field in gathering lost men to Christ must be done quickly, we are not content with preaching on the Sabbath, but desire to contribute our mite of service to SPECIAL REVIVAL work. We can devote three or four evenings a week to any opening, not too far away. E. A. STOCKMAN.

Advent Meeting in Somerville, Mass.

The Mass. Second Advent Conference will hold its Eastern District Session at Somerville, Mass., by invitation of the church, in their new chapel, near Union Square, commencing Thursday, Dec. 18th, at half-past 7 o'clock, to continue over the following Sunday. Meetings morning, afternoon and evenings, in which the signs of the Lord's coming will be made prominent, with an effort to save the lost by the power of the gospel. Brn. Couch, Stockman and other representative watchmen of our faith will be at this yearly feast. Come, dearly beloved waiting ones, leave all and come. No time is to be lost. We will do our best to care for you. L. BOUTELL, Committee.

NOTICE.—We intend to hold a Protracted Meeting at New Durham, N. H. (Second Division), commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 18th, and continuing over the following Sunday. We cordially invite brethren and sisters from the surrounding country to come and assist us. C. H. SWEET. M. STEVENS.

NOTICE.—The Second Quarterly Conference of the Maine, Knox, and Lincoln Co. Conference will be held in Friendship, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 18th, and hold over Sunday. All are invited. Brethren and sisters can call on Brn. Rufus Guyer ann John Davis. Those coming by water can call on Bro. Owen Winkapaw. Homes will be provided for all. S. K. PARTRIDGE, President. E. M. ANDREWS, Secretary.

NOTICE.—If any of our preaching brethren should come in the vicinity of Pierreville, P. Q., we would like to have them come and preach to us, and help us what they can, as we need help very much. Correspond with John Tahamont, Pierreville, P. Q.

NOTICE.—Eld. W. Kellaway, of London, England, Editor of the Bible Echo, is staying at present in Boston, and is at liberty to accept any invitation to preach in churches in New England, either on week-day evenings or Sundays. Address Crisis Office, Boston, Mass.

NOTICE.—The next Quarterly Meeting of the Advent Christian Conference of North Western Michigan will be held at Hesperia, Newaygo Co., commencing Friday evening, Jan. 16th, and holding over Sunday. Hesperia is eleven miles north west of Fremont Center, the nearest station on the Muskegon and Big Rapids Railroad. Teams will be there on Friday to bring in all who purpose to attend the Conference. This meeting is an important one. Come in the name of the Lord, and come praying for a revival of his work. DANIEL WEAVER, President. T. P. S. HAMPSON, Secretary.

NOTICE.—As the New Hampshire Conference has seen fit to choose Bro. W. W. Sutherland, F. L. Piper and myself for a Protracted Meeting Committee, will the brethren in the State interest themselves as to where Protracted Meetings are desired, let us know and also where there are any new places to carry this gospel of the kingdom? We expect Bro. J. Parsons, the State Evangelist, will render much good help in these efforts to rescue the perishing and get a people ready for the day of the Lord, which we verily believe is at hand. As the laborers anciently were sent forth two by two, we probably shall go in a similar way. Pray the Lord of the harvest to bless our efforts. J. G. SMITH.

NOTICE.—The fifth Annual Session of the York County A. C. Conference will meet at Bonny Eagle, Me., on Thursday, Dec. 25th, at 10 o'clock A. M., and hold through the week, and over the following Sabbath. We hope there will be a general rally to this meeting. Time is short, and what we do must be done quickly. Come, all who possibly can, and enjoy the feast, and in order to do it, come to work. M. STEVENS, President. S. G. RUMERY, Secretary.

NOTICE.—We will open our new Chapel, corner of Bow St. and Somerville Avenue, Somerville, Mass., Sunday, Dec. 14th. Bro. Cunningham and others will be there to preach the Word. All the brethren and sisters and friends are invited to come and meet with us. For the Church, E. COX.

PROTRACTED EFFORT.—The Lord willing, we shall commence a series of meetings in Berwick, Me. (Union Mission, Odd Fellows' Hall), to commence Wednesday evening, Dec. 24th, to continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. H. K. Choate and C. S. Stalback are expected to be with us to give us "meat in due season." E. D. M.

NOTICE.—The next Quarterly Meeting of the Michigan Union State Conference will be held at Assumption Prairie, Indiana, commencing Dec. 25th, and continue over Lord's day. We hope to see a general coming together of all God's warm-hearted children who are looking for speedy redemption, to enjoy this feast. Our Union Conferences thus far (eight in number) have been growing in interest, consequently a glorious success. So then may the church at the Prairie and churches elsewhere pray in faith and in the Holy Ghost that a heavenly gale may sweep over the meeting, and over the entire Conference. God's blessing will surely rest upon those who have set their affections on things above. May all those who come to this meeting come at the commencement. Come on Thursday. Brethren from the Prairie will be at the depots at South Bend with their teams to convey friends to the place of meeting. May all say, "I long to be there." If you do, we shall expect to see you there fully ready to work for the Master. A. N. SEYMOUR, President. H. A. HADSELL, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The first Quarterly Session of the Vermont A. C. Conference will be held at Waterbury, Vt., commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 10th, at 7 o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday. We hope that the brethren of this State will make a sacrifice and be blest. Come all in the name of the Lord, and let us reason together. This meeting is by the request of the church worshiping at Waterbury. B. B. CHEDEL, Pres. R. N. STETSON, Sec.

NOTICE.—The Fourth Quarterly Meeting for the Southern District of Wisconsin will be held at Magnolia, commencing Friday evening, Dec. 19th, and holding over Sunday. Bro. Alvirus Hitchcock is expected to preach. All are cordially invited. GEORGE HOWARD.

NOTICE.—No preventing Providence, I will visit Ladoga, Montgomery Co., Indiana (via. I. C. R. R.) about the middle of January; thence to Coldwater, Branch Co., Mich. Any desiring my services to preach the Word unto them, will please address me at Foreston, Ill., until Jan. 1st; after that at Ladoga, Ind. J. A. SMITH.

NOTICE.—The Maine Conference have appointed me as their Tract and Mission Agent. All who want my labors in new places can write to me at Bowdoinham, Maine, Box 103. All who have pledged money will please send it, as soon as convenient, to H. G. Smiley, of Augusta, Me., Treasurer. H. S. MITCHELL, Tract and Mission Agent.

NOTICE.—There will be a Protracted Meeting at Josselyn Hall, Bridgewater Corners, Vt., commencing Dec. 25th, and holding until Jan. 1st. All are invited to come and hear. Bro. E. A. Stockman is expected to be present to preach the Word. WM. C. BUGBEE.

NOTICE.—There has been a church formed on Densmore Hill, Hartland, Vt., of twenty members; and all brethren wishing to preach there should correspond with Bro. Wells Hadley, Elder, Hartland Four Corners, Vt. GEO. H. TEMPLE, Secretary.

NOTICE.—We have formed an A. C. Church in East Hebron, N. H. Officers chosen: E. W. Nelson, Pastor. Moses Flanders, first Deacon. W. W. Wise, second Deacon. Preaching second and fourth Sundays in each month. J. E. HARTFORD, Clerk.

NOTICE.—I am ready to go out and labor for the Master as the way may open. Address ELD. A. KIDDER, Belmont, N. H.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon), to insure insertion for the coming week.

Resolved, That no appointments be published in the "Crisis" henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister or ministers of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal.

☞ All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—OSIAS GOODRICH, Boston, Mass.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1879, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

WHY STAND YE IDLE?

There is work to be done in the vineyard,
There are sheaves to be garnered in,
There are souls to be saved, and the Master saith,
"Go, gather my lambs from the paths of death,
From the broad highway of sin!"

Go, gather them in from the hedges,
Go gather them, young and old;
Go, tell how the Shepherd, in wondrous love,
Is waiting to welcome to mansions of love
The poor, wayward lambs of the fold.

Then work for the glorious Master,
Oh! why wilt thou longer delay,
When he promises strength if we ask aright,
When his yoke is so easy, his burden light,
And he pledges the best of pay?

The reward shall be life eternal,
With pleasures and joys untold;
Bright mansions in glory shall ever be thine,
And for every soul thou hast saved shall shine
A star in thy crown of gold.

Then work! there is rest hereafter—
How sweet will the resting be,
When forever free from the blight of sin,
Through the pearly gates we are ushered in,
To eat of life's healing tree!

The harvest of earth is ripening,
And we long for the gathering day;
And when with the angels so pure and bright,
The King shall descend from the realms of light,
With joy may we hear him say—

"Thou hast faithfully worked in my vineyard,
Now the home of the just is thine!
Receive for thy labors a rich reward,
For they that turn souls to the pitying Lord,
As bright as the stars shall shine."

—Selected.

TRINITY OF TEXTS.

BY O. R. FASSETT.

A trinity of texts from the Book of Isaiah are brought forth to favor the doctrine of future probation after this life. The first is Isa. 45 : 23—"I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, that unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." This is coupled with Paul's language—"Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him [Christ], and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. 2 : 9–11.

As "things under the earth" are supposed by theologians to refer to things in sheol or hades, and by some is regarded "hell," where they suppose the lost souls of men and fallen angels are, therefore these passages are thought to teach the salvation of these lost souls. But sheol or hades is the place where all the dead are gathered indiscriminately (Gen. 37 : 35; Job 3 : 13-22; 17 : 13-16; Eccl. 9 : 2-5, 10; Ps. 16 : 10; Acts 2 : 27-31), and the place of the confinement of the fallen angels is Tartarus (2 Pet. 2 : 4), and not sheol or hades. A clear quotation by the apostle Paul fixes the time of the fulfillment of Isa. 45 : 23 at "the judgment," and not in the intermediate state, or while the dead are in sheol or hades: "Why dost thou judge thy brother? . . . for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So, then, every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Rom. 14 : 10–12. And he also affirms, "God hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." Acts 17 : 31.

This "day of judgment" is no time or place for man to seek on bended knees mercy of God, for it cannot be obtained (Luke 13 : 24-28; 19 : 12-27); but no doubt lost men will then be humbled in the dust before the righteous Judge of all the earth. "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. 2 : 9–11. "This language of glowing eloquence is a superb climax, the object of which, according to Chrysostom, is to 'set forth that the Godhead of Jesus will be acknowledged by the universe; angels, men and devils will confess that he is King and Lord!' Salvation is not mentioned. There is simply the striking antithesis between his self-imposed humiliation and his universally awarded exaltation."—Southern Churchman.

Another passage. Isa. 57 : 15, 16 is brought forward to prove future clemency and salvation for men after death. "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones. For I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made." It is said, "This passage is opposed to annihilation and to hopeless punishment." But most clearly God declares that both "the spirit" and "the souls" he has "made" would "fail before" him, if there was no end to his wrath. And He that created is "able also to destroy both soul and body in hell" (gehenna). Matt. 10 : 28. And this is the threatened "end" of the finally incorrigible, as Jesus himself has affirmed, instead of "annihilation," which is an objectionable word, from the fact that a thing may be destroyed, and yet not be annihilated. Surely the passage does not teach the immortality of either the spirit or souls of men. And we are assured that our Heavenly Father "will not always chide, neither will he keep his anger forever." Ps. 103 : 9.

The passage, however, has no reference to the future state after this life. It teaches that God condescends to dwell with the humble and contrite ones, to revive the spirit and revive the souls of such with his divine and quickening Spirit and grace in this world. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." Heb. 12 : 6. Yet he exhorts them (verse 5) not to "faint when rebuked of him"; for "he will not contend forever" until the spirit and souls of his contrite ones are completely broken down. It is a word of encouragement to his "humble, contrite ones" under affliction, designed for their spiritual good in this world.

The same consoling truth is taught in the following scripture referring to Christ's compassionate and benevolent ministry. "A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench. He shall bring forth judgment unto truth." Isa. 42 : [illegible] This is the third text in the book of [illegible] quoted to prove future salvation, and [illegible]ite one of the Universalists. It was in Christ's ministry, and of his gospel preached specially to the Gentile world after his crucifixion, as seen by its quotation and application in the New Testament. Matt. 12 : 14–21; Gal. 3 : 7–9. Instead of its proving "the salvation of all men" hereafter, it refers to the salvation of believers in Christ, and in the gospel among all nations.

GOD'S PURPOSE OBSCURED.

"God has made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him." Eph. 1 : 9, 10. Emphasis is placed upon the following sentences in these verses: "He hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times . . . gather together in one all things in Christ." And it is said that "it is impossible for language to convey to us more strongly than this does the plain statement that it is God's purpose, not in this earthly time, but in the dispensations of his grace in the fulness of the times, to restore all things to himself in Christ. A cavil can scarcely be made in respect to it." —The Death of Death.

This author has certainly left ample room for serious objections, if not for "cavil," in the liberty he has taken with this passage of scripture, and the interpretation he has given to it. God's purpose is not "to restore all things to himself in Christ," but to "gather together in one all things in Christ." The meaning of which is as wide from the author's interpretation as possible, and refers to the final "gathering together unto him," at "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, all those in Christ (1 Thess. 2 : 19; 4 : 13–18; 2 Thess. 2 : 1); and also to which the Psalmist alludes—"Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Ps. 50 : 3–5.

Again, this author's statement that "it is God's purpose, not in this earthly time, but in the dispensations of his grace in the fulness of the times to restore all things," is a misquotation, perversion and misrepresentation of the scripture. The apostle says, "In the dispensation of the fulness of time, he might gather together in one all things in Christ." Whereas this writer has it—"In the dispensations [plural] of his grace in the fulness of times [plural]"; thus endeavoring to make it appear that there are "dispensations of grace" beyond this earthly time—in times unlimited! God has never revealed in any part of his Word such "dispensations of grace" beyond the gospel age, but the contrary. 2 Thess. 1; Rev. 10 : 7; 11 : 15–18. How do men dare to thus tamper with the Word of God and endanger the souls of men? How do they dare to so wrest the scriptures to their own and others' destruction? Why will they "corrupt the Word of God" by "handling the Word of God deceitfully"? "The dispensation of the fulness of times," when God will "gather together in one all things in Christ," will be when "the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," at which time will be seen "the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory" (Luke 21 : 23–27); "who in His times shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." 1 Tim. 6 : 15. Then "he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. 24 : 31.

When, too, "the fulness of the Gentiles be come in . . . all Israel shall be saved; as it is written." Rom. 11 : 25, 26. "The Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from ungodliness in Jacob, saith the Lord." Isa. 59 : 20. And according to "the mystery of his will, made known" to the apostle, "the Gentiles" are "fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." Eph. 1 : 9, 10; 3 : 3–6. These all shall be gathered together in one, and "there shall be one fold and one Shepherd." John 10 : 16.

"LET THE LOWER LIGHTS BE BURNING."

BY W. F. HILTON.

In the parable of the ten virgins the cry was made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," and the question of preparation is most emphatically disclosed in the matter of the oil. Some had oil, others had not; some were prepared, the others were not. Now this oil and lamp represent the Spirit and the Word; and while preparing the garments of righteousness and holiness, be sure and fill up the heart with the Word. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; that ye, being the light of the world, others may be led to Christ, and thus God be glorified. "Thy word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path," and "we are made clean through the Word." So this lamp and oil is very significant, the oil being the Spirit. He that hath not the Spirit of Christ is none of his; and they that are fully cognizant of their responsibility will keep themselves full of the Spirit of Christ, to be ready for him when he comes; and while he is absent they will be occupying the time in shedding abroad over this sin-cursed earth the rays of godliness, and will, like the faithful watchman at night, examine every nook and corner to find the danger and to guide the wanderer home.

The very fact of the command "go out," signifies intense occupation, and it is only by constant labor that we prove our lamp reliable and our oil satisfactory. We need more of the Word of God in our mouths; and if we have it in our hearts, it will soon find its way through the door provided; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak. With the heart man believeth and with the mouth confesseth. "And they that were ready went in." They had their lamps trimmed and burning, and their loins girded ready for a march.

How sad it is to see so many professing Christians sitting down as if there was nothing to do. Is it not a fair inference, when we go to meetings, and find a cold, spiritless gathering, that the oil in the lamp is very low? How often we hear prayers made in public meetings for the Lord to pour out his Spirit. As we are called the temples for the indwelling of the Spirit, it seems as if we, being sons of God, brothers in Christ, and ambassadors or representatives of Christ, should, by the fulness of our hearts, pour out upon the meeting what there is in us; and if we are in constant communion with Jesus, we will have an abundance of the Spirit within us, and can readily make an overflow meeting by our efforts. More closet prayer will insure to us the Divine Presence; for it is said "where two or three are gathered," not met as by appointment, but gathered, being drawn and led by the Spirit, there is he in the midst, being drawn to us by mutual feeling, as we are drawn to him. This gathering is by divine appointment; but our meeting is generally in pursuance to a human call.

Let us strive for the Spirit, by the Spirit, and in the Spirit, and as we grow in grace, so will we be filled with the Holy Spirit; for it is God who works in us by his Spirit to will and to do of his good pleasure. Let us be sure we are filled with the oil of the Spirit, and as our lamps are what is to light us to meet him, if they burn brightly they may lead others to follow. Come, Lord Jesus, come, and may our Father in heaven so draw and keep us that we may be ready to go in to the feast.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

BY W. KELLAWAY.

Central point of all creation!
Magnet of the universe!
Where the author of salvation
Drowns the thunder of the curse.

Fulness of eternal ages!
Heart of time! God will restore,
(Though the might of hell still rages,)
Peace through thee forevermore.

For the blood hath power to gather
From the furthest ruin wild,
By that blood unto the Father,
All things have been reconciled.

Tiny stage of greatest glory,
Earth, that bearest Calvary
Thine the saddest, gladdest story
Of creation's history.

If the race than angels higher,
(Made in image of their God),
Fell on thee to ruin dire,
Thee the feet of Jesus trod.

Nothing in the end shall sever
From Almighty dying love
For his cross hath bound for ever
All beneath to all above.

THE BEEBE PLAIN CAMP-MEETING.

A few words in the interest of this meeting may be in place at this time, for the information of the many friends of the cause. Historically, religiously and financially, the Beebe Plain Camp-Meeting is full of interest; and at this season of the year, when Camp-Meetings are over, it will be refreshing to recall the pleasant past.

On the 24th of November, 1875, the Beebe Plain Advent Camp-Meeting Association was organized, and arrangements were made for holding the first meeting. We visited the proprietor of the land, and succeeded in getting a written agreement that the land would be bonded or sold for two hundred dollars per acre. Eight acres were purchased, and a bond for a deed was given for the amount at nine per cent interest. We solicited subscriptions for the fitting up of the grounds, and in June, 1876, the first meeting was held, and was a success spiritually, although we did not succeed in raising funds sufficient to meet our expenses, and notes were left on our hands. But we kept the credit of the Association good, and made some changes which were much to our advantage.

At first we could only do our business on the credit of private individuals, and we therefore took a step toward getting incorporated, and accomplished our object. Then a brother came forward and advanced the larger part of the price money for the land at seven per cent., thus saving two per cent., and a sister loaned us the money to pay the balance, and some notes at the same rate of interest.

We have held in the four years seven Camp-Meetings, and the best of all is, God has blessed us abundantly. In all the region about, Advent doctrine and people stand higher than before. Much prejudice has been removed, and doors been opened in every direction.

We now come to the consideration of our present financial condition. It could not be possible that we should commence without a dollar of capital and get this large meeting into its present condition, without debt, unless money were contributed sufficiently to pay the running expenses, and of fitting up the grounds, besides paying for the purchase of the land; but we tried to so conduct the business as to keep the credit of the Association good, and we have done so to such an extent that the Banks have covered our paper from the beginning, and responsible gentlemen have endorsed it willingly.

We have been a little more pinched for money since our last June meeting than ever before, on account of some parties wanting money more urgently than usual, and partly on account of some extra expense. But we are not so much in debt as we were at the close of the June Camp-Meeting, as we have paid some bills in full, and others in part, and cut down the face of some notes. Every note which has become due has thus far been reduced more or less, so that the condition of the finances is improving. We have however one or two difficulties in our way. We have over four hundred dollars in pledges due us, which if paid by the close of this year would pay interest and something considerable on the principle. Some of this was pledged in 1877, and the balance in 1878, and if paid more readily would have done more good, as the more slowly the payments are made, the less the principle can be reduced, and the larger amounts of interest must be paid.

We are aware that the hard times have pressed upon our dear brethren and sisters, and that they have not done as much as they would have done if they had had the means; but we are hoping that now there can be more done.

To encourage all in the work we will say that first of all we propose to retrench expenses in running the meeting, and to keep for sale during the meetings only necessary things;—candles, peanuts, soda-fountains and the like not being legitimate to an Advent Camp-Meeting. (The Secretary has always opposed the sale of these articles.) Again, for encouragement, we will say that the brother who holds the largest amount against the Association agrees to give us twenty-five dollars, provided others will come forward to pay pledges and make donations; and we will do the very best we can to make all monies go as far as possible. We have got past the days of heavy expenses, and have come to the time of special effort to lift the load. Come, then, brethren, be of good cheer, and let us all lift together, and God will bless.

All remittances will be acknowledged, and properly and promptly appropriated. Any persons desiring to aid or pay subscriptions, can have certificates in return from the Secretary.

MINISTERIAL MEANNESS.

Let us notice some of the ways in which ministerial meanness sometimes shows itself.

1. In disparaging remarks concerning a predecessor. It is not a pleasant thing to have the words and deeds of your predecessor the constant theme of conversation wherever you go. Man-worship, to a genuine soul, is always hateful; and in following some men you always get it ad nauseum; but why a brother should always feel that a word of intelligent appreciation of the last man is a reflection on the present, we never could see. And when such things lead to unkind or unfavorable insinuations, we can but think there is either moral rottenness or insufferable egotism at home. Why not rejoice that the former pastor stood and did so well? Why try to hurt him?

2. Ministerial meanness sometimes manifests itself in disparaging comments concerning a brother. This is a kind of meanness altogether (we fear) too common. . . . He thinks, or seems to think, that his own popularity depends upon his brother's unpopularity. Such meanness is contemptible.

3. Ministerial meanness sometimes exhibits itself in an unrighteous criticism of another's sermons. We expect ministers to be better critics of these things than others, just as we expect mechanics to better detect the excellencies or defects of a piece of mechanism. But what a fool a mechanic is to never see a nice job except his own. Yet we have some ministers of this stamp. If a brother preaches a fine sermon they are ready to say, "Yes, good, but was it original?" or, "I am told that he has but three or four such sermons, and these he airs on extra occasions." Some men seem to think that their way up is by pulling others down. Cannibals and pirates live that way.

4. Ministerial meanness sometimes shows itself in an unwillingness to recognize the success of others. With some men sensation is success; or, at best, there's no great success if no great display. That which has noise and show in it, and gets the crowds, is their measure of prosperity. "How to fill empty churches," no matter what they are filled with, or for what purpose, is the one question to solve. He who doesn't have the crowds, though it may be the marrow of the gospel he preaches, and foundations deep and strong for other men's building may be laid by it, is yet, to them, "a failure." To rear walls grand and massive is nothing; but to strut upon them is the climax of achievement. What we object to in this class of men, is not so much the work they do, as their disposition to ignore or undervalue better work done by better men.

5. Ministerial meanness sometimes shows itself in an unwillingness to share equally with others ministerial honors. We wish that the Scriptural injunction, "in honor preferring one another," had a firmer hold on the ministerial heart. May the blessed Saviour cleanse us!—Zion's Herald.

MAN'S FALL.

BY JEHIEL JUDD.

"For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom 6 : 23.

When God created man, he created him in his own image. He was without sin, therefore God loved him, and gave him dominion over every living creature which he had created. He placed him in the most beautiful part of the whole earth, called the Garden of Eden. Every tree was there which was pleasant to the sight. We may imagine something of its grandeur, but we can draw but a very faint picture of what it really was.

What care God bestowed upon Adam. What privileges were granted to him. What blessings were lavished upon him. God gave him "every herb bearing seed, which was upon the face of all the earth; and every tree, in the which was the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to him it was given for meat." Gen. 1 : 29. There was also, in the midst of the garden, the tree of life, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Of the fruit of the tree of life he had permission to eat. It was placed there for that purpose. God desired that he should eat of the fruit of this tree, for by so doing he would have eternal life.

God had done all that could be done to insure to man eternal life; but he must comply with one condition. Of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil he was forbidden to eat, under the penalty of death. By abstaining from this fruit he would live through endless ages. But he had told him that in this tree were the seeds of death; and he must not eat of it, neither should he touch it, lest he die. But man disobeyed and ate of the tree.

But why did he thus disobey and rebel against God? The serpent, which is the devil and Satan, was there. He was more subtle than all the beasts of the field. He very cautiously approaches the woman, charging God with a lie, and declaring—"Thou shalt not surely die." He produces a very powerful argument, powerful because prefaced with truth. The part of the argument which contained the truth was this: "For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Gen. 3 : 5. So they, desiring to know good and evil, ate this forbidden fruit, and the seeds of death being in it, death was the result. Truly, "the wages of sin is death."

Now what could be done that man might regain the position he once occupied, and from which he had so foolishly fallen? Could he not devise a plan whereby he might become entitled once more to that life which he had so unwisely forfeited? No. It was not in the wisdom of man to do this. But God could devise a plan to bring him out of the grave. "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!" Not the blood of bulls, nor of goats could rescue one soul from the power of the grave. It must cost the life of the Son of God. For this cause he was sent into the world, that he might give to man that life which he had lost.

But in this great plan of redemption no other sacrifice could possibly be of any avail. It was the life of man which was lost, and which was to be restored; therefore it must take the life of man to accomplish this work of redemption, and make him once more an heir of God. Jesus Christ, the perfect pattern, being both God and man, has accomplished this great work. We need not fear death to-day. There need be no gloominess surrounding the grave, for Christ, the great Life-giver, has lain there. He rose triumphant, thus robbing death of its sting, and leading captivity captive. We know that our Redeemer lives, and because he lives we shall live also. We must all, however, die the Adamic death, for it is passed upon all. But we would do well to remember that if we die in our sins we must also die the second death, from which there is no resurrection. Let us beware of sin, lest we be hurt of the second death. There remains no more sacrifice for sin. The last sacrifice has been offered. Let us be wise, and live godly, that when Jesus, who is our life, shall appear, we also may appear with him in glory.

CHARITY.

In the hour of keenest sorrow,
In the hour of deepest woe,
Wait not for the coming morrow,
To the sad and sorrowing go;
Make it thy sincerest pleasure
To administer relief,
Freely opening thy treasure
To assuage a brother's grief.

Go and seek the orphan sighing,
Seek the widow in her tears;
As on mercy's pinions flying,
Go, dispel the darkest fears;
Seek the stranger, sad and weary,
Pass not on the other side,
Though the task be sad and dreary,
Heeding not the scorn of pride.

Go with manners unassuming,
In a meek and quiet way,
O'er the fallen ne'er presuming,
Though thy brother sadly stray;
'Tis a Savior's kind compassion,
'Tis his righteousness alone,
All unmerited salvation,
That around thy path has shone.

When thy heart is warmly glowing
With the sacred love of prayer,
Be thy works of kindness flowing,
Not as with a miser's care,
Duty e'er shall be thy watchword,
Pity drop the balmy tear,
Always toward the fallen cherish
Sympathy and love sincere.

WEALTH.

Excessive wealth is neither glory nor happiness. The cold and sordid wretch who draws his head within his shell, and never puts it out, but for the purpose of lucre and ostentation; who looks upon his fellow-creatures, not only without sympathy, but with arrogance and insolence, as if they were made to be his vassals, and he to be their lord; as if they were made for no other purpose than to pamper his avarice, or to contribute to his aggrandizement; such a man may be rich, but trust me, he can never be happy, nor virtuous, nor great. There is in a fortune, a golden mean, which is the appropriate region of virtue and intelligence. Be content with that; and if the horn of plenty overflow, let its droppings fall upon your fellow-men; let them fall like the droppings of honey in the wilderness, to cheer the faint and weary pilgrim.—Selected.

POLYGAMY THE CAUSE OF THE DELUGE.

The sixth chapter of Genesis reveals to us the sin which caused God to destroy the earth by the deluge. In the days which immediately preceded the flood men were guilty of every kind of wickedness; but there was one great sin, which was the especial occasion of the destruction of the earth. This sin is brought to view in the first three verses of Gen. 6. "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose. And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years."

The sons of God took themselves as many wives as they pleased. When God saw this he said that his Spirit should not always strive with men, but promised to bear with them one hundred and twenty years. We shall find it profitable to study carefully these three verses. Who are the persons that committed this transgression? They were members of the human race, as is shown by the third verse, where God calls them men, and says that he will not strive with them always, for that they are flesh.

Why, then, is the human family spoken of in these verses made up of two distinct classes? To answer this question we must examine the two chapters which immediately precede the one from which we have quoted.

The fourth chapter of Genesis records the murder of Abel by Cain. The chapter next gives a genealogy of Cain's family for six generations. The descendants of Cain seem to have been wholly irreligious. John tells us that Cain killed his brother Abel, because his own works were evil and his brother's righteous. Instead of repenting of his sin, he murmured at the punishment inflicted upon him; and went out from the presence of God manifested at the gate of Paradise, and dwelt at a distance from that place, apparently desirous to be separated from God. The posterity of this father appears to have been like him, and the entire family, without a single exception, finally perished in the flood.

After the death of Abel another son was born to Adam, and his mother called his name Seth, saying that God had given him to take the place of Abel. Eve had no hope of Cain's family, because of his wickedness, and her hopes now centered in Seth.

The fifth chapter of Genesis gives us Seth's genealogy in the same manner as the fourth gives us the genealogy of Cain. The family of Seth is that one by which the worship of God was perpetuated and maintained in the earth. It produced such men of God as Enoch and Noah. The rebellion of Cain caused him to remove his family at a distance from the place where God's presence was manifested, and from his father, Adam.

The family of Cain, therefore, grew up in wickedness, and as a distinct family from that of Seth. A careful examination of Gen. 4 : 26, will show us how one class of Adam's posterity came to be called the sons of God. This text mentions the birth of Enos, the son of Seth, and says, Then men began to call on the name of the Lord. A better translation is given in the margin of the English Bible. "Then began men to call themselves by the name of the Lord." This indicates that the pious descendants of Adam, to distinguish themselves from those who were irreligious, and as a protest against their wickedness, took upon themselves the distinctive appellation of the sons of God. The others were only members of the family of Adam, sons of men, but these were sons of the living God.

The sin of polygamy originated with Lamech, the fifth in descent from Cain. An evil precedent being thus established by this man, polygamy doubtless became general among wicked men. While this sin remained with the wicked descendants of Cain the cause of God was comparatively safe. But when the sons of God entered into this wickedness, then there was the utmost reason to fear that everything good on earth would be corrupted. We have seen that the fourth chapter of Genesis gives the genealogy of Cain's descendants, and that the fifth chapter gives the genealogy of the descendants of Seth, and that this last family was the one among whom the sons of God were found.

The multiplication of mankind upon the earth brought together these two great families who, in the first place, dwelt remote from each other. Gen. 6 : 1, 2. The beauty of the daughters of the apostate family attracted the attention of the sons of God, and they forgot that it was a sin to take irreligious wives. But this was not the extent of their transgression. The family of Cain, under whose influence they were now brought, practiced polygamy, and the sons of God also forgot God's institution of marriage which assigns one man to one woman, and they took them wives of all which they chose.

Unless this state of things could be changed there was nothing before the cause of God but ruin. The Spirit of God strove with these men to correct this evil practice. It was at this time that Christ preached to the antediluvians by the Holy Spirit, through Noah, the preacher of righteousness. Lamech, the fifth from Cain, with whom polygamy commenced, was the cotemporary of Jared, the father of Enoch. How long polygamy remained exclusively in the family of Cain we cannot say. But the sixth chapter of Genesis shows that in the days of Noah, who was the fourth in descent from Jared, polygamy had become general among the people of God. God's institution of marriage gave place to man's wicked institution of polygamy, and in the train of this abomination followed every kind of sin and wickedness.

To save virtue and religion from total extinction, it was necessary for God to destroy the human race, with the exception of the family of one just man. Noah and his sons preserved the institution of marriage in its purity.

The sons of God committed a fatal error when they sought to better their condition by yielding to the temptations of Satan. The institution of marriage as explained in Gen. 2, and by our Lord in the New Testament, unites one man to one woman by a sacred and indissoluble union. Polygamy has cursed all who have for any reason yielded themselves to it. The families of Abraham, of Jacob, and of David attest the truth of this remark.—Signs of the Times.

USEFULNESS.

The way to attain the highest degree of Christian usefulness possible to us, is to surrender ourselves confidently to the leading of the Holy Spirit. Let him use us as he will, for great or small results. Let him lead us where he will; into honor or dishonor, into joy or pain. The work in which we would be employed demands a power greater than we possess, and a wisdom that cannot be acquired by the most careful study or the largest experience. But if we will be mere instruments in the hands of the Holy Spirit, we shall possess a power that is limitless. In this case, however great our feebleness, the supplementing power of God's Spirit will make us mighty, and though there may be as great a disparity between the worker and the work, as between the rod of Moses and the dividing of a sea, yet the result will be secured. The rod alone is nothing, but with God behind it, it is irresistible.

If I would exert power I must let God use me. My will must be surrendered to his. There must be that passiveness that becomes the servant in the presence of his Master, the creature before the Creator. I must lay aside all my little plans or preferences that might not accord with God's greater ones, and say from my heart, "Thy will be done." Then God can use me. Then, though a worm, I can "thresh mountains;" though a stripling I can slay giants. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

The secret of power and usefulness is not so much the excellencies we have in ourselves, or the most anxious worker might be discouraged. But it is in our being so related to God that his power and wisdom can be poured through us. There was many a rod in Egypt in itself quite as good for any purpose as was that which was in the hand of Moses, and any one of them could have divided the Red Sea just as easily as that one, had it been in Moses' hand. So God can use any one for his glory and for human good, if that one is only held in God's hand. It is not so much a question of the rod, as of its relation to him who would use it.—Selected.

SOMETIME.

It is a sweet song warbled to and fro among the topmost boughs of the heart, and filling the whole air with joy and gladness as the songs of birds do when the summer morning comes out of darkness, and day is born on the mountains. We have all our possessions in the future which we call "sometime." Beautiful flowers and singing birds are there, only our hands seldom grasp the one or our ears hear the other. But, oh, reader, be of good cheer, for all the good there is a golden "sometime." When the hills and vallies of time are passed; when the wear and fever, the disappointment and the sorrow of life is over, then there is the place and the rest appointed of God. Oh, homestead, over whose roofs falls no shadows or even clouds; and over whose threshold the voice of sorrow is never heard; built upon the eternal hills and standing with thy spires and pinnacles of celestial beauty among the palm trees of the city of God, those who love him shall rest under thy shadows, where is no sorrow nor pain, nor the sound of weeping "sometime."—Selected.

THE BIBLE AS AN EDUCATOR.

Even as a mental discipline, there is no book like God's Book. Nothing else so enlightens the intellect. No other study so strengthens the understanding and clarifies the perceptions, and enlarges the views, and purifies the taste, and invigorates the judgment, and educates the whole man. The humblest day laborer who saturates his mind with this school-book from heaven, becomes a superior man to his comrades. Not merely a purer man, but a clearer headed man. It was this honey from heaven which gave to the Puritans much of their sagacity, as well as of their stubborn loyalty to the Right. The secret of the superiority of the Scottish peasants is found in that "big ha' Bible" which is the daily study at every cottage ingleside. What an argument this is for keeping God's own school-book for his children in every school of our land, high or humble. As the honey strewed the forest for Israel's common soldiers to partake of, so the Lord has sent down his own Word for the masses.—Dr. Cuyler.

O WHO THAT LOVES JESUS CAN WISH HIM AWAY?

BY S. S. BREWER.

O who that loves Jesus can wish him to stay
His long promised coming, and longer delay,
While holy confessors and martyrs doth sleep
In the dark silent tomb and old ocean caves deep?

O who that loves Jesus can wish him remain
Away, while creation is travailing with pain;
And his bride is oft weeping 'mid sorrow and wo,
While the press is so full and the fats o'erflow?

O who that loves Jesus His stay would prolong,
While scoffers are teeming, defiant and strong;
And crimes are increasing, the poor wronged and oppress,
And hearts are failing, and earth heaved with unrest?

The church long since passed through her dark, dreary night;
Every omen she sees is now hailed with delight;
She is anxiously watching as old time flits away,
To hear the trump sound, and for dawning of day.

O come then, Redeemer! in majesty rend
The portals of heaven, and in glory descend;
Awaken Thy saints, bid sin and death cease,
And fill the new earth with glory and peace.

May the prayer of the ages,—"Let Thy kingdom come"—
In fervor ascend, while as exiles we roam;
And when the last heir of that kingdom is sealed,
O let me be with them when Thou art revealed.

PROPHECY.

E. A. S.

Prophecy is the basal element of Revelation; the most important and conclusive internal evidence of the infallibility of the sacred books. The [illegible] of the Bible is the incontrovertible proof of its divinity. Only an Infinite Being could foretell the events of history. Prophecy includes foreknowledge; and foreknowledge can be ascribed to God only.

The primal object of prophecy was, we may suppose, to furnish absolute evidence of the supernatural origin of the redemptive plan. In this sense the importance of the prophetical writings cannot be overestimated. If the prophetic Scriptures could be essentially invalidated, the entire fabric of Inspiration would fall. All the schools of theology constantly and confidently appeal to prophecy as the highest proof of the inspiration of the Word of God.

But the predictions of the Bible are not desultory, pointing out a few unrelated events, but consecutive and chronological. And thus is the second grand purpose of prophecy secured in furnishing the people of God with infallible information of the progress of the prophetic ages or periods. In this regard how indispensably useful, interesting and inspiring are the prophetic books to all who accept the Bible account of redemption; and especially as we approach the terminus of the prophetic lines.

Prophetic study is particularly enjoined by the Holy Spirit. "This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance; that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the prophets." 2 Pet. 3:1, 2. These words imply a tendency to neglect the prophetic portions of the Word. This tendency arises from the painfulness, to sinners and worldly professors, of prophetic teaching, because it discovers the rapid approach of "the end of all things." Those whose God and heaven are here, find no pleasure in evidences that eternity is about to open, [illegible] of faith, and [illegible] the strength and vitality of all the spiritual forces. So the present general indifference to prophecy finds its fitting concomitant in the superficial, ephemeral and trashy religion of these times.

But there is another inspired declaration of our Lord Jesus Christ which all who love His appearing will accept with real gladness, and look for: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Pet. 1:19-21.

[illegible] through the mists of these beclouded times shines serenely the clear light of this divine assurance, to keep and cheer the church in her latest struggles.

IF WE are partakers of the divine nature, we must also be partakers of His sufferings. More wonderful than anything else, and incapable of explanation, is the truth—that we may be partakers of the sufferings of [illegible] —Sel.

LOCATION OF CHRIST'S COMING.

BY L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

Dr. Warren says Christ "began to come after His ascension"; and modern Spiritualists make such bold assumption; but where do the Scriptures say so? The Dr. says—"He began to come in the mighty acts performed by Him." Then He began to come before He went away, yea, even before He came as the babe of Bethlehem. See 1 Cor. 10:1-5. Were there not some mighty acts performed back there? But perhaps the Dr. refers to the effusion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost. But does he make no distinction between the Holy Ghost and Christ? Did not Christ say, "If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you"? Does not the expression, "I go away . . . I depart," relate to personal absence? Also, "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again."

Christ had just told the disciples (John 13:33), "Whither I go, ye cannot come." This fact made the "coming again" a vital point with them, and some of them have not lost sight of it yet. Jesus speaks of "a little while, and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while, and ye shall see me." Will Dr. W. tell us where he locates this "little while"? Christ immediately says—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." Such words sound a good deal like those in Luke 5:34-5—"Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber fast while the bridegroom is with them? But the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then they shall fast in those days." Will Dr. W. tell us if the taking away of the bridegroom was the taking away of "the Parousia of Christ"? and if so, where is Christ's "abiding presence" now? and where has it been for the last eighteen hundred years? Is this the kind of "abiding presence" that satisfies the church in her fasting days? And must she always remain in such condition? Dr. W. says the "three-fold offices of Christ are executed simultaneously, running parallel with each other through all time." Thus Christ has been reigning, giving life and judging mankind every day since the destruction of Jerusalem, at which time "He began to come!" [illegible] abiding presence [illegible] wherein does it differ from the first four thousand years from Adam?

He then says the "consummation" of these offices of Christ "will be the complete restoration of this world to holiness and happiness." And yet he says "their duration will be forever." I do not comprehend how the consummation—the finishing, the completion of a work, is to last forever. Perhaps those words are susceptible of a very broad meaning, as broad as the mystical theory we are dealing with.

But again. Christ riding into Jerusalem on the colt, with the shoutings of the multitude—"Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest!" was merely (says Dr. W.) "a final offer of Himself to His nation as their Messiah [not as their King we suppose], and a prophecy of His speedy entrance into that kingdom which had been promised Him, and into which He would shortly come in the glory of His Father"; at the destruction of Jerusalem, we suppose, for this is according to what we understand to be the Dr's position.

What a wonderful fulfillment of prophecy of entering into a kingdom that must be, to immediately come and destroy the central seat of its predicted location! Jehovah says of Zion, He "hath chosen" it "for His habitation. This is my REST FOREVER; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." This is to be fulfilled when from the fruit of David's body He Himself shall sit upon David's throne; thus identifying Jehovah with Christ.

Again. "Christ in His Parousia is to establish His reign as King; is to give life to the dead; is to judge the world"; and Dr. W., "no less than" Adventists, "holds to the real, actual, literal, personal [illegible] of the dead and judgment of the world, and reigning King, would that be that affects no one's "senses"? We suppose the senses to be five in number—sight, hearing, taste, touch and smell, and yet none of those senses are affected or disturbed by a resurrection of the dead, the judgment of the great day, or Christ reigning as King on "Mount Zion"—"from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth"! If such teachings are not the rankest type of Swedenborgianism and Spiritualism, "beguiling unstable souls," undermining faith, and sapping the life and vitality out of the (so called) Christian Church, paralyzing Christian work, and damning in their results, then we have had no experience in the things of God, and are a very dull scholar in the school of Christ.

Why exhibit such unfairness and double dealing as to put expressions before the mind that convey the idea of a literal resurrection of the dead, and judgment of the world, with a literal reigning Christ on the earth, and then ask, "Does any Adventist deny this?" when the Dr. knew that he immediately gave those words a hidden sense, that does [illegible]

no "marrying or giving in marriage." As Jesus spoke those words in the "Mosaic age," which ended at the destruction of Jerusalem, and then "the Parousia—the establishment of the new kingdom of heaven"—commenced, it would appear that there also began "that age" in which there was to be no marrying; and yet people have married for more than eighteen hundred years since that time. But the gravest point of all is "the time of the Parousia." We are happy to agree with the Dr. as to this fact. First settle the time of the Parousia, and there will be no difficulty in locating the events that are then to transpire. Here is then the pith of the whole subject. We are free to admit that if all the events that Christ referred to in Matt. 24 occurred in the generation then living, Dr. W. has the argument, and we might as well stop first as last to look for Christ to come literally and personally in the clouds of heaven to judge the world. With all the ado and fright over this matter of time when the Lord will come, about which all classes of society are so vexed, it is the testing point, after all, to this whole subject. It was also the testing point with the Jewish nation, involving their national destiny. See Luke 19:42-45.

But we deny that assumption of Dr. W. that the phrase "this generation," in Matt. 24:34, refers to "the men living when Christ was on earth in the flesh." In the first place he nor any one else can show a strict fulfillment of Matt. 24:7 previous to the destruction of Jerusalem. The eighth verse says, "All these are the beginning of sorrows." If "wars and rumors of wars, nation rising against nation and kingdom against kingdom, famines, pestilences and earthquakes in divers places," were but "the beginning of sorrows," and as no proper fulfillment of such predictions can be found on the pages of history after Christ uttered them, before the time of Jerusalem's overthrow, what becomes of Dr. W.'s application of verse 34, which himself and popular theology make so much of? We claim that no mortal man can prove a strict fulfillment of even the fifth verse of that prophecy before the Jewish theocracy ended. How absurd, then, to rashly claim that a whole host of impossibilities (rendered so by the nature of those predictions) could be forced into a compass of less than forty years!

Gibbon says, vol. 1, p. 4—"The only accession which [illegible] Christian Era was the province of Britain"; and that from Augustus to Tragan "a long interval of the peaceful system of his predecessors [now] beheld a military emperor at their head." The great conflict of nations that Christ refers to was not fulfilled till long after Jerusalem's downfall. The war on Jerusalem by the Romans was but the quelling of a revolt; for Judea was at that time but a province of Rome, and not a kingdom or nation proper. These facts must be met, and shown not relevant, or otherwise this modern hallucination of Spiritualists we are examining goes overboard.

We agree with Dr. W. in his exegetical meaning of the word "this," but he blunders in locating it, in his application of verse 34. Before rushing on so impetuously to his rash application of said verse, he should have first proved that Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem. If he had or could have shown this to be so, his application of that little word "this" would have been relevant in his argument; but failing in this, he simply assumes what he cannot prove. Ignorance of the prophetical scope of Matt. 24, that comprehends the great facts of history for eighteen hundred years, is one cause of failing to see what generation our Lord refers to in that verse. The closing events of that prophecy are the signs—the omens—of Christ's Parousia; such as the darkening of the sun and moon, the falling of the stars, and the powers of heaven being shaken; and no such phenomena was seen previous to Jerusalem's ruin, but such has been seen within the compass of those now living; and such are the ones whom Christ instructs to "learn a parable of the fig-tree," and they are to "know" that His parousia "is near, even at the doors." Then He immediately adds, "This generation shall not pass, till [illegible] this dispensation; and that part of the church that should witness the signs He specified is the class that are to know when "He is near, even at the doors." The same generation shall not pass. See such rendering in Acts 13:17.

Says E. B. Elliot, A. M.:—"Our Lord might mean, by 'this generation' the generation of the time He was then speaking of; just as in Luke 17:34, where, speaking of the time of the second coming He says, 'On this night shall two be in one bed; one shall be taken,' etc; meaning thereby the night of His coming; and so rendered in our English version 'In that night.'"

How forcible the subsequent verses of the 24th of Matthew, after verse 34, with this last view of that 34th verse; [illegible] with the view that the Parousia occurred at the destruction of Jerusalem!

It is [illegible] of note that none of the apostles ever, after Christ rode into Jerusalem as the King of the Jews, and was then formally rejected, say a word about the kingdom of God being at hand. Until the signs of Christ's second coming should be witnessed in the heavens, there would be no specific announcement again of His kingdom being [illegible]

the taking away of the Pagan Roman government, and the full development of Papal Rome that would take its place. He also predicts that after his "departure, grievous wolves would enter, not sparing the flock"; and to young Timothy he points out the sad departure from the faith in the latter times. What folly! Paul living when he wrote Timothy (about A. D. 64-5) just at the [illegible] of the Jewish revolt and Jerusalem's overthrow, and then predicts, or rather the Holy Ghost audibly speaks to Paul of these, then future times of apostasy [illegible] to come! Can it be they were [illegible] "abiding presence of C[illegible]sia"? Paul said that [illegible] "abiding presence" should [illegible] come till after this apostasy. We pity those committed to a system that involves such absurdities!

Paul also predicts (2 Tim. 3) that "perilous [or dangerous] times shall come" in the church in the last days. If the "last days" were those just preceding Jerusalem's destruction (at which time Paul wrote those words), why did he not say those perilous times had come, instead of "shall come"? Why be committed to a theory that makes nonsense of Inspiration?

But commentators say that the apostles looked upon "Christ's advent as near." But suppose commentators do say so, the Scriptures do not say it. The difficulty with the commentators consists in not properly locating the "times" of which the apostles were speaking. Thus Drs. Macknight, Whitby and others apply the statement of James 5:3, 8 to the ruin of the Jewish state, because of the briefness of the period there spoken of. But James was there speaking of "the last days,"—a prophecy of the enormous treasures that rich men then would have in their possession just before Christ should come the second time, which are the marked signs of the present time. Therefore the present time is the period that James referred to. No man of sense that looks upon the workings of the great corporations and monopolies of the present period, but should see a marked fulfillment of those words of the apostle James. Now, then, the present is the time that "the Judge standeth before the door."

Rotherham's version of 1 Pet. 4:5 is—"Who shall render an account to Him who is holding in readiness to judge the living [illegible] "the end of all things is at hand," but (as in Rotherham), "the end of all has drawn near." Peter had been speaking of both the living and the dead, and that Christ was "holding in readiness to judge" both classes when He should come. See also 2 Tim. 4:1. As this refers to the period of the judgment, Peter represents that at that period, especially, the church would be in great danger by reason of abounding iniquity,—banquetings, revelings, feastings to excess (see Luke 21:34-36); therefore he exhorts the church to "be sober and watch unto prayer," the same as in Luke 21:34-36. At this period the end of all would soon be decided, whether living or dead. But the living are exhorted to "look up and lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh."

The day of the Lord—the day of Christ—was an event that the apostles had continually in mind as the deciding period of human destiny. And while that day would burst suddenly and unexpectedly, as a thief in the night, on those that would then be "saying, Peace and safety," yet it would not thus come upon the "brethren"—the disciples of Christ. See 1 Thess. 5:1-6.

But the last point we shall consider is Heb. 10:37, of which passage Dr. W. says, "Nothing could express more forcibly the speediness of the event referred to." For this reason, Drs. Macknight, Whitby, Warren and others conclude that the text can only apply to Christ's coming to destroy Jerusalem. Here is a falling into the ditch by reason of not giving that text its right locality. Dr. Whitby's paraphrase of it reads: "For [the vision of Habakkuk, respecting the coming of Christ, and exhorting you to wait for Him, said then, Yet for a time, as I do now] yet a little while, and He that shall come [He that cometh [illegible] your patience] will come, [illegible] both pointing to the second coming of Christ. He says that what Habakkuk "said then, Yet for a time," Paul calls this period "yet a little while." Then both were speaking prophetically of a "little while" then future in Paul's day, as well as in Habakkuk's day.

Says Fausset: "He that shall come—let 'the Comer.' In Habakkuk, it is the vision about to come. Christ, the great subject of all prophetical vision, is made, by Paul, under inspiration, the ultimate subject of the Spirit's prophecy by Habakkuk, in its exhaustive fulfillment."

As Paul makes the "little while" the same as the prophet's—"YET for an appointed time"—and this a special TARRYING period, corresponding to Matt. 25:5, it can only properly apply to the seeming delay of the Bridegroom from 1843, where the tarrying period legitimately began by the disappointment of those who then "went forth to meet the Bridegroom." And I think this "little while" will not last over forty years. Amen.

LET none of you hold his eyes cheap; He to whom we pray holdeth [illegible] Ere it is gone forth out of our lips, He has written it in His book. [illegible]

[illegible] WITH PATIENCE.

BY A. M. [illegible]

It is directly against human nature to wait with patience for the possession of any object that is desirable to the craving heart. We naturally feel that it is hard—cruel to be shut out, perhaps for years, from enjoying the fruition of our hopes; and feeling thus, we too often rebel and murmur against the wise and beneficent ordinances of an omniscient Creator. "Now, just now, Lord," is our complaining cry, when perhaps, could [illegible] irretrievable ruin.

I have learned to wait, and with patience, for His own times and seasons. It has proved a very severe lesson to my perverse will and stubborn heart, but I have received and profited by it, praise the Lord! I know that He, through His love and mercy, will bestow upon me such earthly favors as seemeth best unto Him—that He will grant me only such boons as may be for my benefit and His glory. O for the spirit that prays continually, "Thy will be done."

Patient waiting is taught very clearly unto us in the Holy Scriptures. The sure and often swift punishment meted out to the murmurer, is there very vividly delineated. The children of Israel in the wilderness are a striking example of God's disfavor, even with His chosen ones, when they set up the standard of self and rebel against His wise and far-seeing ordinances. Even the patriarch Moses, the meek and holy leader of the wondrous exodus, was no exception. Stung by the continuous and impatient babblings of a stiff-necked people, he became unmindful of a prior ordinance, and with uplifted wand smote the rock. The waters gushed forth at the Almighty fiat, but the Divine frown, like a mantle of darkness, encompassed the camp of the murmurers. The great patriarch had sinned, and the punishment was sure. "And the LORD said unto him, This is the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed: I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither."

As a people we have received some very marked lessons in the school of waiting. We have waited since '43 for God's Son from heaven—waited patiently, prayerfully, [illegible] have delayed their coming. Some have fallen asleep in Jesus, rejoicing in the hope of a speedy and glorious resurrection. Others have become entangled amid the snares and follies of this world, and fallen out by the wayside. A few have kept the faith, and stand to-day with eyes firmly fixed on the unerring beacon of God's prophetic Word, knowing that they are drifting past the last land-marks on the shores of time, into the boundless sea of heaven's eternal ages. The voyage has been long and dreary, but blessed be God! there is a sunlit haven just ahead. With the glittering turrets of Jerusalem the golden just in sight—with the songs of the welcoming angels on the breeze, and the starry crown of life almost in our grasp, shall we waver, shall we falter now? Brethren, let us wait patiently, for He that is to come will come quickly, and none shall prevent Him. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

SEPARATION.

God wants a separate, distinct people—a people apart from the world, i. e., the unsaved men and women around. God's people must be thus distinct in their affinities, their associations; still more so in their marriage relations. The command is, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean; and I will receive you."

This has ever been required in the church, in all ages. Many fearful illustrations of God's condemnation of the sin of wicked association are given in the history of the early church. No sooner is the genealogy of Cain given (the world's representative,) and that of Seth (the head of God's ante-[illegible] (Cain's descendants,) that they were fair, and they took of them wives, of all whom they chose." Then, as a natural result, "God saw that the wickedness of men was great in the earth;" "that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was evil, and only evil continually." Soon there was found Noah, who alone was righteous in all the earth. God could not save them, so they were swept from the earth by the flood.

The greatest, wisest, and most prosperous king of Israel—Solomon—by violating this command of God, and forming alliance with the surrounding nations, was drawn away from the worship of the true God to that of idols, till he filled Jerusalem and Judea with idolatrous worship.

These are a few of the warnings that come from the early church against this destroying sin. Is God less jealous of the present church, which He has called unto holiness? All sinners are temples of Belial; idol worshipers in some form. What does God say to His gospel church in this Holy Ghost dispensation?—"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with [illegible]

the unclean; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Wonderful promise! None can claim it but those who obey. "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy."

If unholy alliances by the antediluvians filled the earth so full of [illegible] and violence that God [illegible] sweeping deluge; and in [illegible] church, if this sin caused the death of so many by the plague; and if in the highest glory of the kingdom it caused the greatest and wisest king to be drawn away from the living God to dumb idolatry, so that his wisdom became folly, and his kingdom tottered to its fall, what will become of us, in this wonderful holiness movement, in this Holy Ghost baptismal power of cleansing and purity, if we disobey God's commands of separation? Certainly nothing less than the loss of the presence of the indwelling Shekinah, and the re-establishment of Belial's presence and government.—Banner of Holiness.

PROVE ALL THINGS.—1 Thess. 5:21.

BY P. [illegible]

The apostle Paul was "a chosen vessel unto God, to bear His name before the Gentiles" (Acts 9:15), and we think the rule God gave him to give to the people, to help them safe through this world of snares, is as essential now as it ever was. The man or woman who feels called of God to preach His Word [illegible] is unto me if I preach not the gospel, and not do it to please men. The apostle could say, "Do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ." Gal. 1:10. "But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts." 1 Thess. 2:4. Remember, brother, when you round the corners of God's blessed Word for the sake of pleasing men, He sees your heart, and perhaps some poor sinner might have been saved through your instrumentality if you had been faithful. "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." 2 Cor. 10:17. "For not he [illegible] Whom the Lord [illegible] another word of command from God's servant—"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth." 2 Tim. 2:15. When any one hears a sermon preached or counsel given, it is his duty for his own good to prove it by the Word of God, and if it does not agree with that, let it go; but if it is in harmony with it, then rejoice in it.

"But," says one, "I am going to hold a union revival meeting, and let doctrine alone. My object is to rescue sinners from the strongholds of Satan and bring them to Christ." If we go to this meeting we shall see some of our children, and some of our neighbors who are Universalists, and some are believing in Spiritualism, and some in progression after death; and we know they are in bondage to these influences. If they could see from the blessed Word of God that they have no life out of Christ, it might be the means of their giving their hearts to the Lord and becoming bright and shining lights in the world. But for fear of hurting the union feeling, truth has to be left out of the meeting, and error rule, and poor sinners are not benefitted. If Jesus were in one of these meetings, He would not cloak the truth for fear of offending those who will not believe God's Word.

If those meetings were conducted by the blessed Saviour, He would try to save all sinners that could be reached by God's blessed truth, and He would not leave out the very truth which, if believed and obeyed, would set all free from the power of Spiritualism, Universalism, Progressionism, and every other heresy. God's truth is a shield and buckler. Ps. 91:4. "I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words . . . from his neighbor." Jer. 23:30. [illegible]

MORAL COURAGE.

BY O. H. WALLACE.

"Moral courage is that firmness of principle which prompts and enables a person to do what he deems his duty, although it may subject him to severe censure; principle is a fundamental truth or ground of action" (Worcester). It requires no moral courage to do wrong. The current of human tendencies sets in that direction. Humanity drifts upon the stream of circumstances, all the while knowing that the seed of wrong-doing will bring forth an unwelcome harvest.

In this fallen condition God has seen and pitied humanity, and for our ground of action, with salvation in view, has laid down fundamental truths that take hold on His own divinity. Here then is the Christian's ground of action; the battle-field of the ages. Every position has been disputed, and every advance step severely contested.

The Church has always been greatly in the minority, as regards members, and most generally it is made up of those from the humbler ranks of life, and that the opposition which [illegible] numbers, wealth [illegible]

confound the wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are [illegible] [illegible] His presence. [illegible] to [illegible] apostasy from God's [illegible] "world's dread frown" by [illegible] the truth of God and [illegible] those to whom [illegible]

"The common people heard Him gladly." Publicans and harlots believed on Him; but what about the influential? Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on Him? is the question asked by another class who have not the moral courage to do their own thinking, and act in harmony with their convictions. Nothing manifests the absence of moral courage more clearly than a compromise of convictions of right for the advantages of popular favor. It has been urged that too bold a confession of faith makes a difference in business interests. We are aware of it. It made a difference with the apostle Paul's prospects for this world, as well as those Hebrew brethren, to whom he wrote in the tenth chapter, who "took joyfully the spoiling of their goods," their reputation and worldly comfort. "If any man suffer as a Christian let him not be ashamed."

It is a fact which cannot be denied that the religious systems of the present time are weak. Instead of boldly battling the influences of the world with the fire of apostolic times, the colors are meekly lowered, churches turned into theatres, and the pulpit dabbles with what apostles would have been ashamed of. But, thank God, He has not left His cause to such support as this. He has those in the field who have no fear of starving, or idea of compromising with His enemies for the sake of social caste. He has men and women who "speak for God and will be heard." Would their numbers were greater, but we feel thankful for so many who have toiled and waited, and are not ashamed to have it known they are still working and waiting for the vision to speak, and God to vindicate the right, and redeem those who have had the moral courage to stand [illegible] that others are [illegible] God will bless you in doing it, if they refuse to do it.

A THOUGHT.

BY J. ALBERT LIBBY.

Practical and continued resistance of evil is of the greatest importance in the Christian experience. If one, in order to become saintly, is required to break away from all sinful habits and forsake wrong ways, it seems to me quite as important that we keep out of these. Now different natures, we allow, are differently involved in sin; so that what some may easily cast aside as sinful, for others it would require all the energy of the soul and much of the help of God besides; and it is a blessed fact that we may have all the help we need, so we have no excuse.

I have sometimes plead for men on the ground of human weakness, and the great tendency some have to sin. I did so a while ago in talking with a Baptist brother, in a town distant from my own. He said to me, "Your people are so low-lived about here, that their influence is not much." I replied, "Well, perhaps they started low down, and their advantages have not been like yours." "I admit it," was his answer, "but grace ought to do something for them." Now there is a store of truth in that remark—"Grace ought to do something." Yes, it will do everything: "Teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world."

It is practical piety that is needed now, and it is this that tells upon the hearts of the people with whom we mingle more than the avowal of our beliefs. A tongue that will lie is not a converted tongue, even though it [illegible] leave us to go in a [illegible] manner, giving the lie continually to our protestations of faith. If we are going to be Christians, we must take the narrow way, leaving the loose-tongued and low-lived in the broad way. St. John rings out the tone of all the New Testament when he says, "I write unto you, little children, that ye sin not." It is to be supposed that those were in Christ Jesus, and above condemnation. Now keep so, is the admonition of the apostle. I suppose no one ever found perfect peace in Christ till all sin and the love of it got thoroughly removed. The reprover never comforts fully while reproof is going on.

PUBLISH THE WARNING.

In a world full of dangers, where precious things and beings are exposed, light to manifest the dangers, and warnings to escape them, become the most essential element and action Infinite Wisdom and Mercy can introduce.

Such is our world, and such is the illuminating message its Creator has sent into it, and such is the action of Jesus, its Saviour, and His Bride—the church. The voice of warning from God, in notes of heavenly sweetness, has uninterruptedly sounded upon the earth for six thousand years. No sad tones have come from [illegible] transpired [illegible] the teachings of His Son, [illegible] Its pleading [illegible]gels, the solemn utterances of prophets, the messages of awful authority in the Book of God, the silent testimony of the Holy Spirit, and the faithful witness of the Church of Christ. The groans of creation have echoed it, and omens in the heavens have added to its awful sublimity. Vast treasures of wealth and blood have been appropriated to extend it, and valuable lives ebbed out in carrying the alarm into the dark regions of an exposed race.

Noah, Lot and Moses were among God's nobility, who in their day stood boldly in the front rank, echoing the voice of God, and warning the people to prepare for approaching danger. Such has been the character and work of God's true servants preceding every calamitous providence through the ages of the curse.

Are there any ensnaring judgments to overtake our race in the future? Will the time come, or has it come, when it will be as important to warn men, not only of common dangers, but of special dangers, as it has been in the past? We fully believe such a time has come, and that events are about to deluge our world, of which those in the past were only types or dim shadows.

Dear brethren, if we are right in believing that the last judgment message is now due this generation, and that God has called His servants now living to proclaim it, let us try to comprehend the extent and responsibility of our duties, and the magnitude and infinite results of the impending judgments about to ensnare the inhabitants of the earth. The voice of warning should be sounded loudly, clearly and definitely. The warning message should be kept distinct, so that all dangers announced, snares to be shunned, and blessings to be gained, by re[illegible] [illegible]fully preached and practiced; but as warning of impending danger is always made the first duty by true love, so God has instructed His servants that their first and great duty is to warn the people of all common and specific dangers to which they are exposed.

Every warning message given by God is exactly fitted, as to importance and extent of publication, to the coming dangers. The purpose of God in giving such warnings, as exhibited in His past dealings with men, are clearly these: (1) to warn all exposed, (2) to notify them of the nature of the danger, (3) the time of its occurrence, (4) instructions as to what to do, (5) and the results of obedience and disobedience to those instructions.

When an individual is exposed, it is sufficient that he be warned; if the inhabitants of a city or nation are in danger, it is necessary that they be warned; but if all the people of a generation are exposed, then the message must be sent to all nations, tribes and classes. If the coming calamities are to result from floods, fires, pestilence, war, or any special cause, the warning will express it. If some special action by those exposed is required for their safety—which is always the case—special instructions are given for that purpose.

Warning messages are never given by divine authority only during the period of the probation of those called to make the special preparation for them. God has in all cases in the past required His servants, in the proclamation of coming judgments, to distinctly notify the people exposed that their salvation from the coming calamities depends upon their acceptance of the warning, and making the special preparation required. This is always absolutely important for the safety of those warned.

A people cannot desire the approach of calamities upon themselves, therefore it is natural for them to resist and despise the proof that such events are approaching. This in every case will produce opposition to the warning as extensive as the class unprepared for the coming events. As God never sends judgments upon a people when the masses are righteous, but invariably when the multitudes are extremely wicked, it follows that a warning message, while being proclaimed, must be unpopular and hated. When a truth is despised, those proclaiming it and professing faith in it must be despised also.

This produces an experience so trying and repulsive to men that they will not accept the position without seeing an absolute necessity for it. No man would consent to suffer a very painful surgical operation unless he realized that his life depended upon it. So in this case, warning truths always produce painful experiences in those advocating them righteously, and will not be advocat[illegible] any who do not see their vital i[illegible] Satan's most fatal snare in such [illegible] idea [illegible] such messages are human productions, or, if taught in the Bible, belong to second or third-rate truths, which are not essential to salvation, and therefore men are just as fully saved who reject and hate them as those who in their hearts embrace and love them. We are forced to believe that men who teach such sentiments are the servants of the enemy, and not of Christ; for they ensnare men instead of saving them. We prove this by the entire Bible history of our race in the past, and the scriptural testimony relating to the events of accepting or rejecting the last prophetic warning.

If a man had taught, in Noah's time, that his teaching was not vitally important, because those who believed it enjoyed no better communion with God than those who rejected and hated it, what would have been the character and result of such teaching? It would have been rebellion to God, and proved a fatal snare to all who accepted it. Just so it would have been with the Sodomites in escaping from the fire, and with the Hebrews in journeying through the wilderness, and also in accepting the Messiah and His gospel at the first advent. So it would have been, yea, was at the destruction of Jerusalem, the preaching of Luther, and all of the reformers down to the present time.

All divine truth designed to warn people of their sins, and of coming judgments as the result of their sins, ever has been and ever must be unpopular with those sinners. Therefore he who seeks to gain the applause and friendship of the world cannot be a faithful witness for God, because His testimony relating to sin and its results, and all who deliver that testimony, must be in the nature of the case rejected and despised. But God has decreed that men shall be warned before [illegible] worldly prosperity too well to give the warning, He will employ other instrumentalities to do it.

The last warning message relating to judgments vastly more important than any in the past, is now due to this generation, and all who consent to give it must expect to be despised and hated, as all who have done the same work have been in the ages past. Somebody must "give the trumpet a certain sound," and be smitten for doing it; but God will defend and honor him when the time of glorification shall come. J. C.

PARDON.

Pardon, forgiveness and remission represent the same general principles. Pardon is the disannulling, cancelling or rendering void the guilt of transgression. It implies the reconciliation of two opposing parties—one injured, the other the injurer. It expresses release from punishment due for transgression. Gospel pardon presents God and man as the two parties,—God the injured, and man the injurer. Pardon always proceeds from the innocent to the guilty, therefore gospel pardon flows from God to man. Pardon is always conditional, otherwise crime could have no continuance. The conditions of pardon must originate with the innocent, and be complied with by the guilty.

Transgression is the violation of some law. All political and moral law relates to social life, and should be designed to so control social acts that one party shall not deprive another party of any of its just and equitable rights and blessings with impunity. Therefore all social law of God and man must be composed of two parts: (1) instructions and prohibitions relating to social acts; and consists in [illegible] punishment [illegible] forbids to be done. The guilt with those in[illegible] in its unlawfulness. The conscious guilt of the transgressor is produced by his knowledge of the unlawfulness of his acts. No act of an infant is sin, because it has no knowledge of the requirements of moral law; but "when the commandment"—requirements of law—comes, sin revives, and we die a moral death. See Rom. 7: 9.

God's pardon of man's sin consists in His cancelling the guilt of acts of transgression, removing from the sinner all responsibility as much as if he had not sinned. Pardon produces in the guilty a sense of innocence, of harmony and communion with God. It removes the fearful expectation of fiery indignation from God, and a dread of the presence and executions of the great Judge. It produces in their stead an earnest prayer for the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ. This gracious pardon can be obtained by a hearty repentance of all sins, with an established purpose to obey God by divine grace in all things. J. C.

PALESTINE RAILROAD.—The world moves. New and great enterprises characterize the days in which we live. Among these is a railroad from Egypt to the river Tigris, with branches to Jerusalem, Jaffa, and other eastern cities. The enterprise is said to be supported by two very large English banking houses, and the work will be pushed rapidly, as soon as permission can be obtained from the Turkish government. M. G.

IN MEMORIAM.

Another veteran of "the faith" has fallen. Another faithful and heroic follower of Christ has sunk to rest on the field of conflict, with his armor on.

Our well known and much beloved brother, CAPT. JOHN HIGGINS, of Portland, Maine, closed his earthly career on the evening of April 12th, aged seventy-four years.

Captain Higgins was no ordinary man. Gifted with marked intellectual powers and indomitable energy, combined with inflexible integrity, he only needed a fair opportunity to ensure a successful career in life.

When only a boy, he chose navigation as his calling, making his first voyage when but fourteen years old. He rapidly rose through all the grades of seamanship, reaching the highest rank while yet a young man. He was master of a vessel more [illegible] years. The Lord was with him on the sea. He never lost a ship nor a cargo. He never sailed without a Bible. In many an hour of imminent peril, above the howlings of the tempest and the moanings of the maddened waters, his manly voice was heard calmly, but fervently, calling on the great God for help. The roughest of the sailors knew and felt that their sometimes imperious Captain bowed in willing homage to the Almighty One, and trusted in an unseen arm for safety.

He commenced a religious life at the age of twenty-three—the year he became master of a ship, and, also, the year of his marriage. For several years he was a member of the Free-will Baptist Church at Cape Elizabeth. In the great Advent awakening he became deeply interested in the doctrine of the personal and near coming of Christ, the literal resurrection of the dead, and the inheritance of the saints in the new earth; and until his last hour he cherished with great tenacity and delight the "blessed hope" of personal immortality through Christ, and died in firm belief that his repose in death would be very brief.

In his Christian character, sterling integrity was strikingly blended with genuine sympathy and strong emotion. His spirituality was earnest, ardent, and sometimes quite demonstrative. His long life at sea had stamped the manner of his devotion with a directness, positiveness and pathos which were often impressive and grand. His public testimonies to the power of Christ to save were vividly suggestive of the sincere and hardy piety of a hundred years ago.

Since his retirement from the sea he has been very active in the work and cause of the Lord. He filled a large place in the Advent Church in Portland, of which he was an official member. He was a liberal contributor to our Mission Society. At many of our great Campmeetings his commanding form, strong and earnest voice in prayer and praise, and his genial affability, made him the centre of much interest. He will be widely and sadly missed. Many an eye will search in vain for his venerable figure in the great assemblies of the saints; and many an ear will listen in vain for his inspiring shout in the circles of devotion.

He has left to his family and friends the imperishable legacy of a spotless character and a consistent Christian life. His funeral services were attended by a large circle of [illegible] silent slumbers until the joyful moment when the trump of God shall bid the sleeping millions rise and join immortal hands in a tearless, deathless land.

E. A. STOCKMAN.

"THE SALVATION ARMY."

"The Salvation Army" of London, which began their work among the lowest classes, and has been remarkably successful, is now advancing upon the higher classes, as shown by the following: M. G.

"The Salvation Army, hitherto confining its onslaughts upon the lower classes of English sinners, is now making an advance on the fashionable 'West-enders' of London. Regular services have been set up at St. James hall, at which Mrs. Booth is the preacher. On the platform with her are clergymen and ministers of various denominations, noble lords and ladies, and one has but to glance his eye over the hall to see that it is filled with a highly intelligent and cultivated class. Her doctrine is wholly evangelical, and her theme, 'Aggressive Christianity,' has been so presented as to awaken Christian zeal and arouse the impenitent. Already inquirers are numerous, and she has announced several meetings to receive them during the week. She is stirring the deep foundations of fashionable society in London's West-end, and verily 'the Salvation army, has entered on a wholly new campaign, which bids fair to result in many conquests to the ranks of the Lord of Hosts.'"

DANGEROUS.

Observing men begin to see the dangers that are now besetting the church of Christ. Those who have been expecting great religious prosperity are compelled to acknowledge that these are times of great peril. H. W. Thomas, an able Methodist minister, in Chicago, preached a sermon Sabbath, April 18th, having for a text,—"Watchman, what of the night?" Isa. 21: 11. [illegible] much more than holding their own in actual numbers. And this, too, with their vast organizations and great wealth with which to work." He says there is an "increased worldliness and desire for wealth everywhere apparent;" also a "general apathy and lack of aggressiveness of which the churches so generally complain."

This harmonizes with the prophetic description of the last days, as contained in the Bible. The great day of the Lord is at hand. M. G.

TURKEY.

"The Eastern Question" is again coming to the front. It is the burdensome stone in the hands of the great powers of Europe. What shall be done with Turkey? Gladstone says, Send the Turks out of Europe. Beaconsfield is in favor of having them remain. The marked change expected in the British Ministry will make a corresponding change in dealing with Turkey. The Turks are alarmed at the prospect, as shown by the following:

London, April 10. The Constantinople correspondent of the Times telegraphs: "The elections in England have produced on all classes here a profound impression and at the palace almost a panic. Wild speculations are afloat regarding the consequences of the coming change in the British Ministry. Greeks, Armenians, Bulgarians and Christians generally have long regarded Beaconsfield as their most powerful opponent, and rejoice at his fall. The more sanguine of them assume that Gladstone will immediately form a cabinet and prepare to carry out his famous 'Bag and Baggage' policy, that is, to turn the Turks out of Europe bag and baggage. The Sultan and his advisers are thoroughly alarmed."

What a strange condition this world is in at the present time. It does not look much as though it was about to be converted to a pure Christianity. Satan is waging a terrible warfare against righteousness. Let us be true to our dear Lord. M. G.

JOHN 16: 13, 14.

John 16: 13, 14, reads as follows: "Howbeit, when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak; and He will show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you."

In the literal translation of the New Testament from the text of the Vatican Manuscript, by Herman Heinfetter, London, he renders John 16: 13, 14, as follows: "Howbeit, when that Comforter, the spirit of the truth concerning me, should have come, it will guide you into all truth relating thereto. For it will not speak to your mind by itself, i. e., its own origination, but whatsoever fact it will receive, i. e., it witnesses, it will speak [illegible], yet the things that do [illegible] you; that Comforter will [illegible] concerning me, it will re[illegible] unto you."

In a note the translator says: "I much question whether, in accordance to the usage of Greek, the phrase 'spirit of truth,' can any more be regarded as the appellation of an individual, than can the phrases, 'spirit of bondage,' 'spirit of fear,' 'spirit of adoption,' 'spirit of deep sleep,' etc., etc., be so regarded; and still less am I aware that 'the spirit of the truth' can be so regarded, as the article before the last word most unquestionably increases the difficulty of so regarding it; at all events, I cannot recall any thing that will justify either phrase being so regarded."

There is nothing in the Greek to determine whether the pronoun shall be in the neuter or masculine gender. M. G.

The following is intended as a reply to the question of Bro. W. J. White, in issue of April 4th.—ED.

PHILIPIANS 1: 23.

BY GEO. W. KENT.

"For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better."

This text is one of those most frequently quoted by persons who hold to the popular theory of soul immortality, to prove that such theory is correct, and that the real man at death goes where Christ is. But by careful reading of the text, I am satisfied that it conveys no proof whatever of such doctrine, but on the contrary explains itself so clearly that the truth it conveys may be seen.

In verse 21 of the same chapter it reads: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." We understand what Paul meant by the expression "For unto me to live is Christ," if we were where we should be, enjoying the reign of grace in our own hearts; for Paul was always rejoicing, even under [illegible] "and to die is gain," if we understand what persecutions he suffered all through his ministerial life. We are frequently told that Paul expected to gain heaven and glory by dying; but this is contrary to all his other teachings, as also to the whole Bible. We are taught that "death is an enemy," and if so, how can it be said that it is only the gate to glory? Paul expected to gain freedom from the unrelenting persecutions which he had to undergo if he died, although he did not shrink from them if through them he might glorify Christ.

In the 22nd verse, the last clause reads—"yet what I shall choose I wot not"; showing that he had no choice between living and dying—willing to experience that which would honor Christ the most. And if he is "in a strait betwixt two" (living or dying), he certainly only testifies that he has no choice between the two.

But he makes mention of a third position, saying, "having a desire to depart and be with Christ [would to God that all were like Paul in this respect, and had such a desire to be with Christ that it would give a new life and vitality in the Master's work!], which is far better." Far better than what? "Far better to die than to live," is the usual answer; but Paul don't say so. He says that to depart and be with Christ is far better than to either live (here) or to die. The plain idea of the whole text is that Paul would rather, if it were possible, be translated where Christ is, than to live here in persecution, or to die and go to corruption. By carefully reading the whole of 2 Cor. 5, the eighth verse may be easily understood.

North Attleboro, Mass.

—ANARCHY [illegible] prevails all through the Ottoman Empire, and constitute the best possible comment upon the pretensions of the Beaconsfield government to have secured a satisfactory settlement of Turkish questions. Turkey is a mere wreck of a government, her most flourishing provinces set off as independent States or divided up between Austria, Russia and England, while the control which she maintains over the remainder is only a shadow of sovereignty. Her finances become daily more hopelessly entangled with a depreciated currency, the price of bread steadily rises, and bread riots follow; her unpaid soldiers are beggars by day and robbers by night, and bands of brigands push their work unmolested up to the very environs of Constantinople. In Roumelia Bulgarians and Mussulmans are cutting each other's throats; in Armenia and Kurdistan famine rages over one hundred thousand square miles of territory; and squalor, wretchedness, murder and pillage, crime and anarchy prevail on both sides of the Bosphorus.

The Greek boundary question, moreover, is no nearer settlement than when the Berlin treaty was signed, and the Porte acknowledges its helplessness in the matter by declining to guarantee the safety of the commission engaged in tracing out the boundary. In the Tory campaign orators, in the [illegible] of American politicians, "point with pride" to the government's Eastern policy and its results, they will be under the necessity of explaining in what way such a condition of affairs as this makes for the good of Europe or the glory of England. The worst of the case is that the end is not yet reached, and the tendency of things is unquestionably toward a general collapse, whose consequences may very likely be fresh complications and a new crisis.—Boston Journal.

BLOCKADES.

BY C. E. COFF.

There are important and crowded centres where the dispatch of business depends upon everybody's moving in their proper sphere. They have a right to their place, and it discommodes no one as long as they keep going; but let them stop, and everybody else stops. We saw a forcible example of this the other day as we were riding along in the horse cars on Washington St., Boston. Arriving opposite Boylston Market, we came to a sudden stop, and waited a proper time to go on, but no movement seemed probable. Stepping out we saw cars in a row as far as the eye could reach. Having traversed the whole distance on foot, we came to the crowded seat of trouble. A man with a two-horse load of beef in a pung-sled had got stuck on the switch at the corner of Temple Place. There were as many horse cars with anxious people on the other side as on our own. Nobody could do anything with any kind of a team. The trouble was, the horses on the load of meat had struck a hard spot, and were discouraged. They could not be made to pull, notwithstanding there were men enough at each side of the sled to almost start the load without them.

We saw in this incident its counterpart in some churches. There is a blockade. There are sinners who could be made to reach the station of conversion in season to be ticketed for glory, but the way is blocked up with backslidden church members, scandals, lies and divisions. Things do not move as they ought and might. The social meeting starts off as though something was going to be done, but a stand still is soon reached. There is somebody with a cart-load of the devil's wares—scandals perhaps—stuck on the crossing. Faithful men enough are at work who could move these things if they who are the most concerned would only pull their share. But they are in no hurry. They never enjoyed so much attention when in their proper sphere of labor, because of its obscurity, but now they are the lions of the hour. They relish this state of things, no matter if perishing men and women are behind them, better than where God would have them be. Like the lawyers of the Lord's time they will not go themselves, and those that would they hinder.

We admonish you as a brother to get out of the way, or go on in it. "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the Word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you: and that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith. But the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command [illegible] the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." 2 Thess. 3: 1–6.

Lawrence, Mass.

HOME OF THE SOUL.

BY O. D. GIBSON.

I listened to a lecture on "the altar of sacrifice," and its significance, a short time since, by a Baptist minister, who said "the blood was all poured beneath the altar, and in the temple a pipe was laid from thence way down into the bowels of the earth, to convey the blood down there; and this blood represented the soul, which at death goes down into hades, called in the American Union translation 'the under world,' to stay till the resurrection morning." Thus a half-way house, or reservoir, is prepared for the soul a home while away from the body. This is a necessity, for if there are two men of every one of us, and these separate at death, there must be some place to go to. We know where the dust man goes, and if there is any other, in order to be consistent they must, if they can, find where it goes to, until their "reunion" takes place at the resurrection.

But how strange are their theories. For example: This same man, in answer to a question as to the "vail in the tabernacle" not being passable by any man save the High Priest only, signifying that no man could, or had gone into heaven, save Christ, answered, "The vail signifies our flesh, or bodies, which stands between us [i. e., our souls] and heaven; but when we die, our souls pass within the vail into heaven." He seemed to forget his half way house down in the bowels of the earth where souls go at death.

Why will men persist in making void God's Word by their traditions? How easy to understand when we read that "the life [illegible] blood," that it represent[illegible] (life) made an offering for sin?? And as the life is in the blood, is it not the blood of Christ that was shed for us? Did He not go to hades when He died? See Matt. 12: 40; Acts 2: 25–31. He was not alive when there (see Rev. 1: 18), but on returning to life again immediately and triumphantly marched away with the key of that subterranean abode of the silent dead, which He now holds ready for use. May He use it soon. Amen.

THE FRENCH CROWN JEWELS.—Some time ago there was some talk about selling the magnificent collection of diamonds forming part of the French crown jewels. The collection is valued at 40,000,000 francs, and among other treasures contains the celebrated Regent diamond, alone worth 8,000,000 francs.

The Empress Eugenie's famous pearl necklace is now the property of one of the richest women in Europe, Countess Henckel. The Empress had the pearls sold in London to the Countess Henckel for 360,000 francs. This lady had some of the pearls less beautiful than the others removed, and added two other rows; one, which came from the jewels sold by the Queen of Naples, the other from the necklace of the Virgin of Atocha, sold by a great Spanish personage. At present the suite of pearls belonging to the Countess, earrings and brooch included, is worth 800,000 or 900,000 francs. It is said to be the finest set of pearls in the world.

BISHOP BEDELL says that if ministers spoke the truth in funeral sermons, the demand for such discourses would rapidly cease.

RESURRECTION DESTINIES.

BY DANIEL D. BUCK, D. D.
PUBLISHED BY I. C. WELLCOME.

A neat pamphlet of fifty-five pages on the resurrection of the dead and the destinies of each class. It is evidently written to show that men must be converted to gain eternal life through Christ, and to refute the notion that all will be saved. It is thoroughly scriptural in statement and argument, and critical and direct in its points. It is doubtful if the subject has ever been handled better since Paul wrote upon the same theme. Price, postpaid, 15 cents.

For sale at the Crisis Office.

THE EGYPTIAN PYRAMIDS AN ANALYSIS OF A GREAT MYSTERY.

This is a new work, and we think one of the best upon this great Mystery. It contains 162 pages, with a large number of cuts representing some portion or parts of this immense structure. This book is very condensed, yet we think it gives very clear and full all of the important points. It is well bound in cloth. Price $1.00 postpaid. AGENT.

The Scriptural Question Book.

This Question Book, written by Eld. H. F. Carpenter, and containing one hundred and twenty-seven pages, is one of the best books for Sabbath Schools. It is just the book for the young scholar to take after getting through with the Catechism. We have sold a large number, and there are many brethren and sisters who can testify to its merits. Price postpaid, single copy, 15 cts. Per dozen, postpaid, $1.45. AGENT.

"BE NOT WEARY IN WELL DOING."

BY M. S. WEBSTER.

These words of inspiration are words of cheer to pilgrims in the narrow way. No doubt the apostle saw the travelers faint and weary, almost ready to give up, and saying, What does it all amount to,—this toilsome journey, this weary road? I am tired of waiting for my reward. But these words—"Be not weary," speak to his fainting heart, and with fresh courage he starts anew to battle with the duties of life. O what precious words, speaking with soothing accents, echoing with blessed assurance way down to the end of time—"Be not weary in well doing."

Dear fainting soul, it speaks to thee on thy thorny path—"Be not weary." To all the afflicted, tried, tempted, and sorrowing ones of earth, the injunction is—"Be not weary." To those who go forth, not knowing whither, buffeting the storms and encountering the ills of life, to win a Bride for the Master, many doubts and fears arise, and the weary, fainting feet almost falter by the way. But God knows how much grace and wisdom is needed. The promises are yea and amen to every one that believes, and the blessed assurance comes "in due time, you shall reap if you faint not." Yes, the reaping time is almost here. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy," in due time. Soon we shall receive the reward for all toil in doing what our Master would have us do. May our work be done, and well done, that we may hear the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Arvonia, Kansas.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

BY H. MUNGER.

Bro. Couch:—I have been at home most of the time the past winter, except Sabbaths (a thing I have not done for twenty-five years). Generally I am away fifty weeks out of the fifty-two. The first of March, like the wild geese, I felt like going north. I went first to Manchester and Concord, N. H., where Advent meetings have been held ever since '42 and '43. Like many other places they have had severe trials in keeping their meetings; but the good ones are determined to stick to the ship while there is a plank left. We had a good meeting there. It cheered our hearts to see some four or five who started to serve the Lord some twenty years ago, under our poor labors, still holding on. This is the best of it. One [illegible] one of my meetings held in a barn fifteen years ago, he being then thirteen years old, is still serving God.

I find many who came out under the Advent preaching have been decoyed away and joined other churches. But such are not at home. They have to keep their faith, or light, under a bushel. I found some of this class at East Canaan. I was invited there by Eld. D. Eastman, through the Crisis, for three evenings. Tuesday evening about fifty were out. The Word took effect with the outsiders, and the two families of Adventists and those also who came from other towns. The next day there was a dancing party gotten up. The brethren said it was a trick of the devil to keep the people away from the meeting, and hoped I would not get discouraged if but a few were out. But their party was a failure, and we had thirty at meeting. The preaching stirred up the elements still more, and the preacher of the Baptist church being present Wednesday evening, spoke against my preaching. That threw kindling wood into the fire already started, and Thursday the whole place was stirred up. In every store, shop and house Bro. Eastman said they were talking about the meeting. Some said one thing and some another; but the outsiders took sides with the meeting against the dancers and church members. One church member said it would take their preachers three years to counteract my preaching. But this made the people more anxious to go, and the house was packed full. I stayed one more evening, and it was put into the papers. God blest me in preaching His truth.

The next day about noon Bro. Eastman came in and said the feeling was up to fever heat because I was going to stay Friday night. He asked me if I ever was afraid of getting mobbed. I saw he was a little alarmed, but told him I was not, for I had been in hotter battles than they could get [illegible] Canaan. That night all [illegible] said I had better leave before night. But I had a good comfortable place to stay, and felt perfectly safe in God's cause and hands.

This put me in mind of some of our battles in '45 to '50, that no doubt Bro. Couch and our old soldiers recollect. Although I am old, it was no time for me to back out and run. I felt like giving them the prophetic signs of the times, and God helped me show that professors were acting out their part of the prophecy by their opposition, scoffing and pride. I told them that many professors knew more of a pack of cards than they did of their Bibles. This shot hit many, as the house was full. A cat was brought into the meeting to disturb it; but it did not have the effect designed, and I had the best of attention for one hour. When the signs of the judgment were brought up, the people felt the force of it.

Thus ended my meeting in Canaan. I was happy in preaching the truth, and got a victory. All left the house quietly. When we got out I asked Bro. Eastman where the mob was? The next morning we had a shout of victory while praying, and I left at 8 o'clock A. M.

Next I went back to Concord. Had a good meeting and good attention. It seemed pleasant to get in with kindred spirits after a hard battle. I went to Manchester by request. Found a full house. Bro. King's labors were blest. Next to Portsmouth.

Here is one of the best churches among us. They have order, and a continual increase. Next to Exeter,—an old fortification, and some salt is there. Next to Haverhill. Here I was taken violently sick with the bilious colic, and could not go to the meeting. But the medicine administered by Dr. Priest, after five hours of great pain, relieved me. Brethren Couch and others were with me. Next to Lawrence. Had a good house and good attention. This is another good, strong church.

Sabbath, at Lowell. I spoke twice, attended prayer-meeting at six o'clock, spoke on temperance at seven o'clock to a full house at the Club Room. I was tired out, but Bro. Bissell's good home gave me rest. Thank the Lord the warfare is most over—with me, at least.

Chicopee, Mass.

THE RESURRECTION.

The resurrection—What is it? Is it at death or at the end of the world? If at death what significance of the great day foretold in the Scriptures, after all have gone to their reward? Will they be called back and judged over again or resentenced? If saints go to their reward at death, what use or force of a resurrection as Paul and Christ teach? In what sense can they be be raised if already up? If any one says the body only is to be raised, I reply, Christ in John 6: 40, 44 and 54 explicitly says, I will raise "him," not his body, soul or spirit, but him, up at the last day. Now which is the "him?" that which is up? or that which is in the grave? Christ and Paul say, that which is in the grave; neither mention body at all. But suppose the "him" refers to the body, which is the man? The him that is up, or the him that is in the grave? Now both hims (if there are two) if anything, must each have a body of some sort—the him that is up as well as the him in the grave, and what will be the practical or possible use of two hims or two bodies, both in the future? Indeed, if death be the gate to endless joys, of what possible good can the resurrection be at all? And why did Paul attach so much importance to it as to preach it even at the cost of persecution? And how can the present common theory of immediate rewards and punishments at death be reconciled with the judgment scenes described in Matthew 25th?

Job and Paul answer the great questions. Job says—"man"—(not a fractional part of him, as body, soul or spirit, but man, the whole man) "lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more: they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." And Paul says: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised." Then, and not till then will Job, Paul and all the saints awake, be raised out of their sleep in Jesus, be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, and "so shall we ever be with Lord."

RING—MULGROVE. In Newbury, N. H., April 25th, by Elder C. H. Fletcher, Mr. Walter Hoffman Ring and Miss Sarah Jane Mulgrove, both of Newbury.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS.

London, April 29. The Viceroy of India telegraphs as follows: A messenger, who arrived at Cabul on the 28th, reports that the people of Wardak and Logar attacked Gen. Ross on Sunday. After a severe engagement the enemy were completely dispersed, leaving 1200 dead on the field. Our loss is not mentioned. The district is much disturbed and the passage of letters is difficult. There is some excitement still in Kohistan.

St. Petersburg, April 27. The Golos is devoting a series of articles to the stragetical condition of Siberia with regard to offensive and defensive operations in case of war with China. Apparently the fears entertained by the Golos are to some extent shared by the Government.

The Gazette says the plague has appeared in the Valsk district in the Government of Saratoff. Famine also prevails, and twenty-seven peasants have died from starvation. The Golos says: Phantoms of death and hunger are passing from village to village in the Don district, where all the granaries are empty, and there is an absolute dearth of money. Other provincial papers report deaths from starvation among the peasantry in various parts of the country.

Out of eight Nihilists recently executed at Kieff, three were Jews, and of three conspirators hanged at St. Petersburg a short time since, one was a Jew. It is also said that Hartmann, whom the French Government refuses to extradite, was of Jewish origin, and people believe the same of Dr. Weimar, whose trial is to take place shortly in St. Petersburg.

It is reported that recent fires in Russia have rendered over two hundred families houseless.

New York, May 2. The fireworks manufactory of M. Honore, at Pantin, near Paris, was blown up Saturday afternoon, and it is believed twenty persons were either killed or dangerously injured.

Crop reports from Ohio, Indiana, Southern Illinois and Kentucky are of the most favorable character. The wheat crop wintered almost without injury and is everywhere far advanced and in splendid condition. The average is from 20 to 30 per cent. greater than last year, which was itself a big year.

Four inches of snow and temperature four degrees below the freezing point signalized the advent of May in some portions of Northern Vermont.

The public debt was decreased over $12,000,000 last month.

Rev. G. F. Pentecost has closed his labors in the West this season. The meetings have been of great interest, attended by crowded audiences.

Notices.

Notice.—Brethren of Vermont, where shall we hold our third A. C. Conference? No one says, Come here, or go there. Now will you please send in your requests, and then we shall know, for I am waiting to send the notice to the Crisis. If there is no place for it in some church, and we have to appoint ourselves, we shall be likely to pitch the tent somewhere, and who will be responsible? Who says "Come over here and help us"? B. B. Chedel, President.

Notice.—The Advent Christian cause in Sanilac County, Michigan, being very suddenly left without a minister, we are in need of ministerial help. There are several points of interest in a circuit of about twelve miles, and the cause is quite low. For any of God's servants who want to labor, here is a door open and a field vacant. A call or visit from any would be appreciated. If more information is wanted, correspond with R. J. Arnot, Lexington, Mich.

Notice.—The third Annual Quarterly Meeting of District No. 2, of the A. C. Conference of South West Iowa and North West Missouri, will meet with the Ringgold church on Friday, May 28th. The brethren in Decatur County are cordially invited to attend and take part in the meeting. Said meeting is to be held in the Holden school-house, eight miles south of Mt. Ayr.
D. O. Hine, President.
L. C. Ray, Secretary.

Notice.—The next Session of the A. C. Conference of Northern Penn. and Southern N. Y. will be held with the church at Shongo, Allegany Co., N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, June 17th, and hold over the following Sunday. It is hoped that a special effort will be made to make this a profitable meeting.
B. Butler, President.
H. Zirgenfuss, Secretary.

Notice.—The church at Damariscotta and New Castle having called me to become their Pastor, I have accepted. My address will be New Castle, Me. Brethren wishing to preach at the above church will please correspond with me before sending appointments. E. M. Andrews.

NOTICE.

The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are hereby notified that the Annual Meeting of said Committee will be holden on the Camp-ground, commencing Tuesday, May 11th, at 12 m.
J. Couch, President.
W. H. Mitchell, Secretary.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the saints scattered abroad, Greeting. Believing that we are in "perilous times," which were to mark the close of this dispensation, and in view of the overwhelming importance of the truths which identify us as a people, the official board of the Northern Illinois A. C. Conference have thought best to call a special meeting, for the purpose of counseling together relative to the peculiar duties of the times in which we live, and the vital interests of the precious truths so graciously committed to our trust. We feel that such a meeting is greatly needed at the present time; and we sincerely desire that not only all the members of this Conference, but also all who are interested in "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," will make special effort to attend this meeting. Various topics suited to the occasion will be presented, on which some of our ministers have consented to prepare papers, which will be subject to brotherly criticism. In view of the foregoing, we do hereby call said meeting to convene at Aurora, Kane Co., Ill., on Wednesday, June 16th, at two p. m., and to continue over the Sabbath, if the Lord will.

By the official Board of the N. Ill. A. C. Conf.
C. W. Smith, President.
J. A. Smith, Vice President.
H. G. McCulloch, Secretary.
L. H. Davis, Treasurer.

Notice.—The next session of the A. C. Quarterly Conference in District No. 1 will be held in Topeka, Kansas, commencing May 27th. We trust each church will be prompt in the preparation for this meeting. We believe the Master has appointed a work for all; then let us share it together. We do not expect every brother and sister can be present, but all can take an interest in the preparation for it, and give their encouragement and prayers for those who do attend. The brethren of the Topeka church are anticipating a good meeting, and will do all they can to make it such. The Lord will always give a blessing when we come expecting it, and praying for it. M. McGuire, Dist. Evangelist.

[Please notice the change of this meeting from the 20th to the 27th of May, as we cannot have the house on the 20th. By order of the church, S. K. Gibson.]

Notice.—To the dear servants of God, whom Christ the great Shepherd of the sheep has called to feed the flock of God: The church in this place (Levant Village, Maine) has decided to hold a series of meetings, to commence Wednesday, May 19th (it being the one hundreth anniversary of the darkening of the sun), and hold over the following Sabbath. We pray the good Shepherd may send us some of the old veterans of the cross to preach the Word of life, and give to the household of faith the meat that is due. A general invitation is extended to all. Homes will be provided. Call on Brethren Dore, Niles and Glidden.
For the church, N. G. Reed.

Notice.—The officers of the North Illinois A. C. Conference purpose calling an extra session of said Conference to convene in Aurora, Ill., on Wednesday, June 16th, at two p. m., and hold through the week. This meeting is greatly needed at the West, and I trust will be largely attended by those who feel desirous of seeing the cause at the West prosper. I have been corresponding with brethren relative to the meeting, and the interest manifested betokens brighter days for the West. Look for the official call soon.
C. W. Smith, President of Conference.

Notice.—The next Session of the Oxford and Androscoggin County Conference will be held at Carthage, Me. (Staples' school-house), commencing Thursday evening, June 10th, and continue over the following Sunday. Let there be a large section of country represented at this meeting.
Jared Whitman, President.
Joshua Howard, Secretary.

Notice.—Having accepted an invitation from the church in Scitico to remain with them as their pastor for another year, I shall be at liberty for outside labor seven Sabbaths during the year. Any church wishing my services for one or more Sabbaths, please address me at Scitico, Ct.
Benj. Finney.

Springfield, Mass.—Meetings at Central Hall Sundays at 10.30 a. m. Sabbath School at 12 m. Preaching at 2.30 and 7.30 p. m. Service of song at 7 p. m. Bible class Saturday evenings. Prayer meetings Tuesday and Thursday evenings.
H. A. King, Pastor.

Notice.—The next Annual Meeting of the Delaware District Advent Christian Conference will be held with the Second Advent Church of Philadelphia, Penn., commencing Friday evening, May 14th. Let there be a good representation of the churches, by delegates or letter.
Frank Burr, President.
Frank Heuelt, Secretary.

Notice.—The Wisconsin Campmeeting will probably be held at Crystal Lake, Columbia Co., near Lodi, June 5th to 12th. Full notice will be given in due time. Meanwhile let plans be made to attend. W. S.

Notice.—The Advent Christian Quarterly Conference of Nova Scotia will be held at Bear River, N. S., commencing June 17th. We cordially invite the brothers and sisters from abroad. J. Moore.

Notice.—The Beebe Plain Camp Meeting will commence Saturday, June 19th. Particulars hereafter. L. C. McKinstry, Sec.

Notice.—The Third Quarterly Meeting of the Northwestern Evangelical District No. 2 of Kansas will be held with the A. C. Church at the Townsend school-house on Coon Creek, Lincoln Township, Washington Co., Kansas (P. O. address Waterville, Marshall Co., Kansas), commencing May 13th. Please all see that they do their duty and make due reports. We all understand our duty without being prompted every quarter. Come all, and let us have a regular old-fashioned Campmeeting, the first one of the season. The District Tent will be pitched for the occasion.
Thos. R. Comstock, Evangelist, Dist. No. 2.

Notice.—There will be a Conference held with the Advent Christian Church at Sweaburg, Oxford Co., Ontario. Friends of like precious faith in Western Ontario are cordially welcomed by the church. Further information will be cheerfully furnished by corresponding with Bro. Daniel McLellan, Sweaburg, Ontario, or the undersigned.
W. C. Hicks, St. Thomas, Ontario, Box 272.

Notice.—The first Quarterly Meeting of the Southern District of Wisconsin for this season will be held at Bellville, Dane Co., beginning on Friday evening, May 21st, and hold over the Sunday following. Let the scattered gather from the regions round about. Wm. Sheldon.

Notice.—The Maine Conference have appointed me as their Tract and Mission Agent. All who want my labors in new places can write to me at Bowdoinham, Maine, Box 103. All who have pledged money will please send it, as soon as convenient, to H. G. Smiley, of Augusta, Me., Treasurer.
H. S. Mitchell, Tract and Mission Agent.

Special Notice.

Any of the Preaching Brethren desiring to send appointments to Lynn, Mass., will please correspond with the following Committee before sending their appointments: Geo. W. Soderquest, H. Q. Staples, J. W. Burnham.

Notice.—The next session of the Maine Second Advent Christian Conference will meet the first Tuesday in May. Place and particulars given hereafter.
S. K. Partridge, President.
J. A. Libby, Secretary.

Special Notice.—All preachers wishing to preach at East Weymouth, Mass., will please correspond with Wm. H. Crockett, North Weymouth, Mass., before sending any appointments for Sundays or evenings.

Notice.—I will preach in Ashland, Michigan, once in four weeks. Also in Banger once in two weeks. This leaves one Sunday in each four weeks for missionary work. Let those wishing help take notice. Address me at Muskegan, Mich., Box 581. M. J. James.

Notice.—Having been chosen Conference Evangelist to hold meetings in new fields within the limits of the Conference of Quebec, Northern Vermont and Northern New Hampshire, I would say that I am ready to do all I can in this new field of labor, and will respond to calls as the way may be opened. Brethren, time is short. Let us do what we can to rescue the perishing.
J. H. F. Varney, South Sutton, N. H.

Notice.—The Iowa Mission Tent is for sale. If wanted, please address P. S. W. Deyo, Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., Iowa.

On account of revival interest at New Bedford, Mass., my appointments for Natick, Springfield, Bristol and Plantsville are withdrawn.
Wm. C. Stewart.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of Two Thousand Dollars for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

C. E. Barnes, Sec. Adv. Chris. Pub. Soc.

☞ Remittances should be sent to the Treasurer, Ozias Goodrich, Boston, Mass., or they may be enclosed with remittances to the "Crisis" Office.

PUBLISH THE WARNING.

In a world full of dangers, where precious things and beings are exposed, light to manifest the dangers, and warnings to escape them, become the most essential element and action Infinite Wisdom and Mercy can introduce.

Such is our world, and such is the illuminating message its Creator has sent into it, and such is the action of Jesus, its Saviour, and His Bride—the church. The voice of warning from God, in notes of heavenly sweetness, has uninterruptedly sounded upon the earth for six thousand years. No sad tones have come from [illegible] has transpired the teachings of His Son, [illegible] Its pleading [illegible]gels, the solemn utterances of prophets, the messages of awful authority in the Book of God, the silent testimony of the Holy Spirit, and the faithful witness of the Church of Christ. The groans of creation have echoed it, and omens in the heavens have added to its awful sublimity. Vast treasures of wealth and blood have been appropriated to extend it, and valuable lives ebbed out in carrying the alarm into the dark regions of an exposed race.

Noah, Lot and Moses were among God's nobility, who in their day stood boldly in the front rank, echoing the voice of God, and warning the people to prepare for approaching danger. Such has been the character and work of God's true servants preceding every calamitous providence through the ages of the curse.

Are there any ensnaring judgments to overtake our race in the future? Will the time come, or has it come, when it will be as important to warn men, not only of common dangers, but of special dangers, as it has been in the past? We fully believe such a time has come, and that events are about to deluge our world, of which those in the past were only types or dim shadows.

Dear brethren, if we are right in believing that the last judgment message is now due this generation, and that God has called His servants now living to proclaim it, let us try to comprehend the extent and responsibility of our duties, and the magnitude and infinite results of the impending judgments about to ensnare the inhabitants of the earth. The voice of warning should be sounded loudly, clearly and definitely. The warning message should be kept distinct, so that all dangers announced, snares to be shunned, and blessings to be gained, by re[illegible] faithfully preached and practiced; but as warning of impending danger is always made the first duty by true love, so God has instructed His servants that their first and great duty is to warn the people of all common and specific dangers to which they are exposed.

Every warning message given by God is exactly fitted, as to importance and extent of publication, to the coming dangers. The purpose of God in giving such warnings, as exhibited in His past dealings with men, are clearly these: (1) to warn all exposed, (2) to notify them of the nature of the danger, (3) the time of its occurrence, (4) instructions as to what to do, (5) and the results of obedience and disobedience to those instructions.

When an individual is exposed, it is sufficient that he be warned; if the inhabitants of a city or nation are in danger, it is necessary that they be warned; but if all the people of a generation are exposed, then the message must be sent to all nations, tribes and classes. If the coming calamities are to result from floods, fires, pestilence, war, or any special cause, the warning will express it. If some special action by those exposed is required for their safety—which is always the case—special instructions are given for that purpose.

Warning messages are never given by divine authority only during the period of the probation of those called to make the special preparation for them. God has in all cases in the past required His servants, in the proclamation of coming judgments, to distinctly notify the people exposed that their salvation from the coming calamities depends upon their acceptance of the warning, and making the special preparation required. This is always absolutely important for the safety of those warned.

A people cannot desire the approach of calamities upon themselves, therefore it is natural for them to resist and despise the proof that such events are approaching. This in every case will produce opposition to the warning as extensive as the class unprepared for the coming events. As God never sends judgments upon a people when the masses are righteous, but invariably when the multitudes are extremely wicked, it follows that a warning message, while being proclaimed, must be unpopular and hated. When a truth is despised, those proclaiming it and professing faith in it must be despised also.

This produces an experience so trying and repulsive to men that they will not accept the position without seeing an absolute necessity for it. No man would consent to suffer a very painful surgical operation unless he realized that his life depended upon it. So in this case, warning truths always produce painful experiences in those advocating them righteously, and will not be advocat[illegible] any who do not see their vital i[illegible] Satan's most fatal snare in such [illegible] idea [illegible] such messages are human productions, or, if taught in the Bible, belong to second or third-rate truths, which are not essential to salvation, and therefore men are just as fully saved who reject and hate them as those who in their hearts embrace and love them. We are forced to believe that men who teach such sentiments are the servants of the enemy, and not of Christ; for they ensnare men instead of saving them. We prove this by the entire Bible history of our race in the past, and the scriptural testimony relating to the events of accepting or rejecting the last prophetic warning.

If a man had taught, in Noah's time, that his teaching was not vitally important, because those who believed it enjoyed no better communion with God than those who rejected and hated it, what would have been the character and result of such teaching? It would have been rebellion to God, and proved a fatal snare to all who accepted it. Just so it would have been with the Sodomites in escaping from the fire, and with the Hebrews in journeying through the wilderness, and also in accepting the Messiah and His gospel at the first advent. So it would have been, yea, was at the destruction of Jerusalem, the preaching of Luther, and all of the reformers down to the present time.

All divine truth designed to warn people of their sins, and of coming judgments as the result of their sins, ever has been and ever must be unpopular with those sinners. Therefore he who seeks to gain the applause and friendship of the world cannot be a faithful witness for God, because His testimony relating to sin and its results, and all who deliver that testimony, must be in the nature of the case rejected and despised. But God has decreed that men shall be warned before [illegible] worldly prosperity too well to give the warning, He will employ other instrumentalities to do it.

The last warning message relating to judgments vastly more important than any in the past, is now due to this generation, and all who consent to give it must expect to be despised and hated, as all who have done the same work have been in the ages past. Somebody must "give the trumpet a certain sound," and be smitten for doing it; but God will defend and honor him when the time of glorification shall come. J. C.

PARDON.

Pardon, forgiveness and remission represent the same general principles. Pardon is the disannulling, cancelling or rendering void the guilt of transgression. It implies the reconciliation of two opposing parties—one injured, the other the injurer. It expresses release from punishment due for transgression. Gospel pardon presents God and man as the two parties,—God the injured, and man the injurer. Pardon always proceeds from the innocent to the guilty, therefore gospel pardon flows from God to man. Pardon is always conditional, otherwise crime could have no continuance. The conditions of pardon must originate with the innocent, and be complied with by the guilty.

Transgression is the violation of some law. All political and moral law relates to social life, and should be designed to so control social acts that one party shall not deprive another party of any of its just and equitable rights and blessings with impunity. Therefore all social law of God and man must be composed of two parts: (1) instructions and prohibitions relating to social acts; and (2) [illegible] punishment forbids to be done. The guilt [illegible] with those in[illegible] in its unlawfulness. The conscious guilt of the transgressor is produced by his knowledge of the unlawfulness of his acts. No act of an infant is sin, because it has no knowledge of the requirements of moral law; but "when the commandment"—requirements of law—comes, sin revives, and we die a moral death. See Rom. 7:9.

God's pardon of man's sin consists in His cancelling the guilt of acts of transgression, removing from the sinner all responsibility as much as if he had not sinned. Pardon produces in the guilty a sense of innocence, of harmony and communion with God. It removes the fearful expectation of fiery indignation from God, and a dread of the presence and executions of the great Judge. It produces in their stead an earnest prayer for the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ. This gracious pardon can be obtained by a hearty repentance of all sins, with an established purpose to obey God by divine grace in all things. J. C.

PALESTINE RAILROAD.—The world moves. New and great enterprises characterize the days in which we live. Among these is a railroad from Egypt to the river Tigris, with branches to Jerusalem, Jaffa, and other eastern cities. The enterprise is said to be supported by two very large English banking houses, and the work will be pushed rapidly, as soon as permission can be obtained from the Turkish government. M. G.

IN MEMORIAM.

Another veteran of "the faith" has fallen. Another faithful and heroic follower of Christ has sunk to rest on the field of conflict, with his armor on.

Our well known and much beloved brother, CAPT. JOHN HIGGINS, of Portland, Maine, closed his earthly career on the evening of April 12th, aged seventy-four years.

Captain Higgins was no ordinary man. Gifted with marked intellectual powers and indomitable energy, combined with inflexible integrity, he only needed a fair opportunity to ensure a successful career in life.

When only a boy he chose navigation as his calling, making his first voyage when but fourteen years old. He rapidly rose through all the grades of seamanship, reaching the highest rank while yet a young man. He was master of a vessel more [illegible] forty years. The Lord was with him [illegible] sea. He never lost a ship nor a cargo. He never sailed without a Bible. In many an hour of imminent peril, above the howlings of the tempest and the moanings of the maddened waters, his manly voice was heard calmly, but fervently, calling on the great God for help. The roughest of the sailors knew and felt that their sometimes imperious Captain bowed in willing homage to the Almighty One, and trusted in an unseen arm for safety.

He commenced a religious life at the age of twenty-three—the year he became master of a ship, and, also, the year of his marriage. For several years he was a member of the Free-will Baptist Church at Cape Elizabeth. In the great Advent awakening he became deeply interested in the doctrine of the personal and near coming of Christ, the literal resurrection of the dead, and the inheritance of the saints in the new earth; and until his last hour he cherished with great tenacity and delight the "blessed hope" of personal immortality through Christ, and died in firm belief that his repose in death would be very brief.

In his Christian character, sterling integrity was strikingly blended with genuine sympathy and strong emotion. His spirituality was earnest, ardent, and sometimes quite demonstrative. His long life at sea had stamped the manner of his devotion with a directness, positiveness and pathos which were often impressive and grand. His public testimonies to the power of Christ to save were vividly suggestive of the sincere and hardy piety of a hundred years ago.

Since his retirement from the sea he has been very active in the work and cause of the Lord. He filled a large place in the Advent Church in Portland, of which he was an official member. He was a liberal contributor to our Mission Society. At many of our great Campmeetings his commanding form, strong and earnest voice in prayer and praise, and his genial affability, made him the centre of much interest. He will be widely and sadly missed. Many an eye will search in vain for his venerable figure in the great assemblies of the saints; and many an ear will listen in vain for his inspiring shout in the circles of devotion.

He has left to his family and friends the imperishable legacy of a spotless character and a consistent Christian life. His funeral services were attended by a large circle of [illegible] silent slumbers until the joyful moment when the trump of God shall bid the sleeping millions rise and join immortal hands in a tearless, deathless land.

"THE SALVATION ARMY."

"The Salvation Army" of London, which began their work among the lowest classes, and has been remarkably successful, is now advancing upon the higher classes, as shown by the following: M. G.

"The Salvation Army, hitherto confining its onslaughts upon the lower classes of English sinners, is now making an advance on the fashionable 'West-enders' of London. Regular services have been set up at St. James hall, at which Mrs. Booth is the preacher. On the platform with her are clergymen and ministers of various denominations, noble lords and ladies, and one has but to glance his eye over the hall to see that it is filled with a highly intelligent and cultivated class. Her doctrine is wholly evangelical, and her theme, 'Aggressive Christianity,' has been so presented as to awaken Christian zeal and arouse the impenitent. Already inquirers are numerous, and she has announced several meetings to receive them during the week. She is stirring the deep foundations of fashionable society in London's West-end, and verily 'the Salvation army, has entered on a wholly new campaign, which bids fair to result in many conquests to the ranks of the Lord of Hosts.'"

DANGEROUS.

Observing men begin to see the dangers that are now besetting the church of Christ. Those who have been expecting great religious prosperity are compelled to acknowledge that these are times of great peril. H. W. Thomas, an able Methodist minister, in Chicago, preached a sermon Sabbath, April 18th, having for a text,—"Watchman, what of the night?" Isa. 21:11. [illegible] much more than holding their own in actual numbers. And this, too, with their vast organizations and great wealth with which to work." He says there is an "increased worldliness and desire for wealth everywhere apparent;" also a "general apathy and lack of aggressiveness of which the churches so generally complain."

This harmonizes with the prophetic description of the last days, as contained in the Bible. The great day of the Lord is at hand. M. G.

TURKEY.

"The Eastern Question" is again coming to the front. It is the burdensome stone in the hands of the great powers of Europe. What shall be done with Turkey? Gladstone says, Send the Turks out of Europe. Beaconsfield is in favor of having them remain. The marked change expected in the British Ministry will make a corresponding change in dealing with Turkey. The Turks are alarmed at the prospect, as shown by the following:

London, April 10. The Constantinople correspondent of the Times telegraphs: "The elections in England have produced on all classes here a profound impression and at the palace almost a panic. Wild speculations are afloat regarding the consequences of the coming change in the British Ministry. Greeks, Armenians, Bulgarians and Christians generally have long regarded Beaconsfield as their most powerful opponent, and rejoice at his fall. The more sanguine of them assume that Gladstone will immediately form a cabinet and prepare to carry out his famous 'Bag and Baggage' policy, that is, to turn the Turks out of Europe bag and baggage. The Sultan and his advisers are thoroughly alarmed."

What a strange condition this world is in at the present time. It does not look much as though it was about to be converted to a pure Christianity. Satan is waging a terrible warfare against righteousness. Let us be true to our dear Lord. M. G.

JOHN 16: 13, 14.

John 16:13, 14, reads as follows: "Howbeit, when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak; and He will show you things to come: He shall glorify me; for He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you."

In the literal translation of the New Testament from the text of the Vatican Manuscript, by Herman Heinfetter, London, he renders John 16:13, 14, as follows: "Howbeit, when that Comforter, the spirit of the truth concerning me, should have come, it will guide you into all truth relating thereto. For it will not speak to your mind by itself, i. e., its own origination, but whatsoever fact it shall receive, i. e., it witnesses, it will speak [illegible], yet the things that do [illegible] you; that Comforter will [illegible] concerning me, it will re[illegible] unto you."

In a [illegible] note the translator says: "I much question whether, in accordance to the usage of Greek, the phrase 'spirit of truth,' can any more be regarded as the appellation of an individual, than can the phrases, 'spirit of bondage,' 'spirit of fear,' 'spirit of adoption,' 'spirit of deep sleep,' etc., etc., be so regarded; and still less am I aware that 'the spirit of the truth' can be so regarded, as the article before the last word most unquestionably increases the difficulty of so regarding it; at all events, I cannot recall any thing that will justify either phrase being so regarded."

There is nothing in the Greek to determine whether the pronoun shall be in the neuter or masculine gender. M. G.

The following is intended as a reply to the question of Bro. W. J. White, in issue of April 4th.—ED.

PHILIPIANS 1: 23.

BY GEO. W. KENT.

"For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better."

This text is one of those most frequently quoted by persons who hold to the popular theory of soul immortality, to prove that such theory is correct, and that the real man at death goes where Christ is. But by careful reading of the text, I am satisfied that it conveys no proof whatever of such doctrine, but on the contrary explains itself so clearly that the truth it conveys may be seen.

In verse 21 of the same chapter it reads: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." We understand what Paul meant by the expression "For unto me to live is Christ," if we are where we should be, enjoying the reign of grace in our own hearts; for Paul was always rejoicing, even under [illegible] afflictions. We may also [illegible] "and to die is gain," if we understand what persecutions he suffered all through his ministerial life. We are frequently told that Paul expected to gain heaven and glory by dying; but this is contrary to all his other teachings, as also to the whole Bible. We are taught that "death is an enemy," and if so, how can it be said that it is only the gate to glory? Paul expected to gain freedom from the unrelenting persecutions which he had to undergo if he died, although he did not shrink from them if through them he might glorify Christ.

In the 22nd verse, the last clause reads—"yet what I shall choose I wot not"; showing that he had no choice between living and dying—willing to experience that which would honor Christ the most. And if he is "in a strait betwixt two" (living or dying), he certainly only testifies that he has no choice between the two.

But he makes mention of a third position, saying, "having a desire to depart and be with Christ [Would to God that all were like Paul in this respect, and had such a desire to be with Christ that it would give a new life and vitality in the Master's work!], which is far better." Far better than what? "Far better to die than to live," is the usual answer; but Paul don't say so. He says that to depart and be with Christ is far better than to either live (here) or to die. The plain idea of the whole text is that Paul would rather, if it were possible, be translated where Christ is, than to live here in persecution, or to die and go to corruption. By carefully reading the whole of 2 Cor. 5, the eighth verse may be easily understood.

North Attleboro, Mass.

ANARCHY [illegible] which prevails all through the Ottoman Empire, and constitute the best possible comment upon the pretensions of the Beaconsfield government to have secured a satisfactory settlement of Turkish questions. Turkey is a mere wreck of a government, her most flourishing provinces set off as independent States or divided up between Austria, Russia and England, while the control which she maintains over the remainder is only a shadow of sovereignty. Her finances become daily more hopelessly entangled with a depreciated currency, the price of bread steadily rises, and bread riots follow; her unpaid soldiers are beggars by day and robbers by night, and bands of brigands pursue their work unmolested up to the very environs of Constantinople. In Roumelia Bulgarians and Mussulmans are cutting each other's throats; in Armenia and Kurdistan famine rages over one hundred thousand square miles of territory; and squalor and wretchedness, murder and pillage, chaos and anarchy prevail on both sides of the Bosphorus.

The Greek boundary question, moreover, is no nearer settlement than when the Berlin treaty was signed, and the Porte acknowledges its helplessness in the matter by declining to guarantee the safety of the commission engaged in tracing out the boundary. Let the Tory campaign orators, in the language of American politicians, "point with pride" to the government's Eastern policy and its results, they will be under the necessity of explaining in what way such a condition of affairs as this makes for the good of Europe or the glory of England. The worst of the case is that the end is not yet reached, and the tendency of things is unquestionably toward a general collapse, whose consequences may very likely be fresh complications and a new crisis.—Boston Journal.

BLOCKADES.

BY C. R. COPP.

There are important and crowded centres where the dispatch of business depends upon everybody's moving in their proper sphere. They have a right to their place, and it discommodes no one as long as they keep going; but let them stop, and everybody else stops. We saw a forcible example of this the other day as we were riding along in the horse cars on Washington St., Boston. Arriving opposite Boylston Market, we came to a sudden stop, and waited a proper time to go on, but no movement seemed probable. Stepping out we saw cars in a row as far as the eye could reach. Having traversed the whole distance on foot, we came to the crowded seat of trouble. A man with a two-horse load of beef in a pung-sled had got stuck on the switch at the corner of Temple Place. There were as many horse cars with anxious people on the other side as on our own. Nobody could do anything with any kind of a team. The trouble was, the horses on the load of meat had struck a hard spot, and were discouraged. They could not be made to pull, notwithstanding there were men enough at each side of the sled to almost start the load without them.

We saw in this incident its counterpart in some churches. There is a blockade. There are sinners who could be made to reach the station of conversion in season to be ticketed for glory, but the way is blocked up with backslidden church members, scandals, lies and divisions. Things do not move as they ought and might. The social meeting starts off as though something was going to be done, but a stand still is soon reached. There is somebody with a cart-load of the devil's wares—scandals perhaps—stuck on the crossing. Faithful men enough are at work who could move these things if they who are the most concerned would only pull their share. But they are in no hurry. They never enjoyed so much attention when in their proper sphere of labor, because of its obscurity, but now they are the lions of the hour. They relish this state of things, no matter if perishing men and women are behind them, better than where God would have them be. Like the lawyers of the Lord's time they will not go themselves, and those that would they hinder.

We admonish you as a brother to get out of the way, or go on in it. "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the Word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you: and that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith. But the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command [illegible] the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." 2 Thess. 3:1-6.

HOME OF THE SOUL.

BY O. D. GIBSON.

I listened to a lecture on "the altar of sacrifice," and its significance, a short time since, by a Baptist minister, who said "the blood was all poured beneath the altar, and in the temple a pipe was laid from thence way down into the bowels of the earth, to convey the blood down there; and this blood represented the soul, which at death goes down into hades, called in the American Union translation 'the under world,' to stay till the resurrection morning." Thus a half-way house, or reservoir, is prepared for the soul a home while away from the body. This is a necessity, for if there are two men of every one of us, and these separate at death, there must be some place to go to. We know where the dust man goes, and if there is any other, in order to be consistent they must, if they can, find where it goes to, until their "reunion" takes place at the resurrection.

But how strange are their theories. For example: This same man, in answer to a question as to the "vail in the tabernacle" not being passable by any man save the High Priest only, signifying that no man could, or had gone into heaven, save Christ, answered, "The vail signifies our flesh, or bodies, which stands between us [i. e., our souls] and heaven; but when we die, our souls pass within the vail into heaven." He seemed to forget his half way house down in the bowels of the earth where souls go at death.

Why will men persist in making void God's Word by their traditions? How easy to understand when we read that "the life soul (life) unto death blood," that it represented the soul (life) made an offering for sin?? And as the life is in the blood, is it not the blood of Christ that was shed for us? Did He not go to hades when He died? See Matt. 12:40; Acts 2:25-31. He was not alive when there (see Rev. 1:18), but on returning to life again immediately and triumphantly marched away with the key of that subterranean abode of the silent dead, which He now holds ready for use. May He use it soon. Amen.

THE FRENCH CROWN JEWELS.—Some time ago there was some talk about selling the magnificent collection of diamonds forming part of the French crown jewels. The collection is valued at 40,000,000 francs, and among other treasures contains the celebrated Regent diamond, alone worth 8,000,000 francs.

The Empress Eugenie's famous pearl necklace is now the property of one of the richest women in Europe, Countess Henckel. The Empress had the pearls sold in London to the Countess Henckel for 360,000 francs. This lady had some of the pearls less beautiful than the others removed, and added two other rows; one, which came from the jewels sold by the Queen of Naples, the other from the necklace of the Virgin of Atocha, sold by a great Spanish personage. At present the suite of pearls belonging to the Countess, earrings and brooch included, is worth 800,000 or 900,000 francs. It is said to be the finest set of pearls in the world.

BISHOP BEDELL says that if ministers spoke the truth in funeral sermons, the demand for such discourses would rapidly cease.

RESURRECTION DESTINIES.

BY DANIEL D. BUCK, D. D.
PUBLISHED BY I. C. WELLCOME.

A neat pamphlet of fifty-five pages on the resurrection of the dead and the destinies of each class. It is evidently written to show that men must be converted to gain eternal life through Christ, and to refute the notion that all will be saved. It is thoroughly scriptural in statement and argument, and critical and direct in its points. It is doubtful if the subject has ever been handled better since Paul wrote upon the same theme. Price, postpaid, 15 cents.

For sale at the Crisis Office.

"BE NOT WEARY IN WELL DOING."

BY H. S. WEBSTER.

These words of inspiration are words of cheer to pilgrims in the narrow way. No doubt the apostle saw the travelers faint and weary, almost ready to give up, and saying, What does it all amount to,—this toilsome journey, this weary road? I am tired of waiting for my reward. But these words—"Be not weary," speak to his fainting heart, and with fresh courage he starts anew to battle with the duties of life. O what precious words, speaking with soothing accents, echoing with blessed assurance way down to the end of time—"Be not weary in well doing."

Dear fainting soul, it speaks to thee on thy thorny path—"Be not weary." To all the afflicted, tried, tempted, and sorrowing ones of earth, the injunction is—"Be not weary." To those who go forth, not knowing whither, buffeting the storms and encountering the ills of life, to win a Bride for the Master, many doubts and fears arise, and the weary, fainting feet almost falter by the way. But God knows how much grace and wisdom is needed. The promises are yea and amen to every one that believes, and the blessed assurance comes "in due time, you shall reap if you faint not." Yes, the reaping time is almost here. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy," in due time. Soon we shall receive the reward for all toil in doing what our Master would have us do. May our work be done, and well done, that we may hear the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Arvonia, Kansas.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

BY H. MUNGER.

Bro. Couch:—I have been at home most of the time the past winter, except Sabbaths (a thing I have not done for twenty-five years). Generally I am away fifty weeks out of the fifty-two. The first of March, like the wild geese, I felt like going north. I went first to Manchester and Concord, N. H., where Advent meetings have been held ever since '42 and '43. Like many other places they have had severe trials in keeping their meetings; but the good ones are determined to stick to the ship while there is a plank left. We had a good meeting there. It cheered our hearts to see some four or five who started to serve the Lord some twenty years ago, under our poor labors, still holding on. This is the best of it. One [illegible] one of my meetings held in a barn fifteen years ago, he being then thirteen years old, is still serving God.

I find many who came out under the Advent preaching have been decoyed away and joined other churches. But such are not at home. They have to keep their faith, or light, under a bushel. I found some of this class at East Canaan. I was invited there by Eld. D. Eastman, through the Crisis, for three evenings. Tuesday evening about fifty were out. The Word took effect with the outsiders, and the two families of Adventists and those also who came from other towns. The next day there was a dancing party gotten up. The brethren said it was a trick of the devil to keep the people away from the meeting, and hoped I would not get discouraged if but a few were out. But their party was a failure, and we had thirty at meeting. The preaching stirred up the elements still more, and the preacher of the Baptist church being present Wednesday evening, spoke against my preaching. That threw kindling wood into the fire already started, and Thursday the whole place was stirred up. In every store, shop and house Bro. Eastman said they were talking about the meeting. Some said one thing and some another; but the outsiders took sides with the meeting against the dancers and church members. One church member said it would take their preachers three years to counteract my preaching. But this made the people more anxious to go, and the house was packed full. I stayed one more evening, and it was put into the papers. God blest me in preaching His truth.

The next day about noon Bro. Eastman came in and said the feeling was up to fever heat because I was going to stay Friday night. He asked me if I ever was afraid of getting mobbed. I saw he was a little alarmed, but told him I was not, for I had been in hotter battles than they could get up in Canaan. That night all [illegible] [illegible] said I had better leave before night. But I had a good comfortable place to stay, and felt perfectly safe in God's cause and hands.

This put me in mind of some of our battles in '45 to '5[illegible], that no doubt Bro. Couch and our old soldiers recollect. Although I am old, it was no time for me to back out and run. I felt like giving them the prophetic signs of the times, and God helped me show that professors were acting out their part of the prophecy by their opposition, scoffing and pride. I told them that many professors knew more of a pack of cards than they did of their Bibles. This shot hit many, as the house was full. A cat was brought into the meeting to disturb it; but it did not have the effect designed, and I had the best of attention for one hour. When the signs of the judgment were brought up, the people felt the force of it.

Thus ended my meeting in Canaan. I was happy in preaching the truth, and got a victory. All left the house quietly. When we got out I asked Bro. Eastman where the mob was? The next morning we had a shout of victory while praying, and I left at 8 o'clock A. M.

Next I went back to Concord. Had a good meeting and good attention. It seemed pleasant to get in with kindred spirits after a hard battle. I went to Manchester by request. Found a full house. Bro. King's labors were blest. Next to Portsmouth.

Here is one of the best churches among us. They have order, and a continual increase. Next to Exeter,—an old fortification, and some salt is there. Next to Haverhill. Here I was taken violently sick with the bilious colic, and could not go to the meeting. But the medicine administered by Dr. Priest, after five hours of great pain, relieved me. Brethren Couch and others were with me. Next to Lawrence. Had a good house and good attention. This is another good, strong church.

Sabbath, at Lowell. I spoke twice, attended prayer-meeting at six o'clock, spoke on temperance at seven o'clock to a full house at the Club Room. I was tired out, but Bro. Bissell's good home gave me rest. Thank the Lord the warfare is most over—with me, at least.

Chicopee, Mass.

THE RESURRECTION.

The resurrection—What is it? Is it at death or at the end of the world? If at death what significance of the great day foretold in the Scriptures, after all have gone to their reward? Will they be called back and judged over again or resentenced? If saints go to their reward at death, what use or force of a resurrection as Paul and Christ teach? In what sense can they be be raised if already up? If any one says the body only is to be raised, I reply, Christ in John 6: 40, 44 and 54 explicitly says, I will raise "him," not his body, soul or spirit, but him, up at the last day. Now which is the "him?" that which is up? or that which is in the grave? Christ and Paul say, that which is in the grave; neither mention body at all. But suppose the "him" refers to the body, which is the man? The him that is up, or the him that is in the grave? Now both hims (if there are two) if anything, must each have a body of some sort—the him that is up as well as the him in the grave, and what will be the practical or possible use of two hims or two bodies, both in the future? Indeed, if death be the gate to endless joys, of what possible good can the resurrection be at all? And why did Paul attach so much importance to it as to preach it even at the cost of persecution? And how can the present common theory of immediate rewards and punishments at death be reconciled with the judgment scenes described in Matthew 25th?

Job and Paul answer the great questions. Job says—"man"—(not a fractional part of him, as body, soul or spirit, but man, the whole man) "lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more; they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." And Paul says: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised." Then, and not till then will Job, Paul and all the saints awake, be raised out of their sleep in Jesus, be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, and "so shall we ever be with Lord."

KING—MULGROVE. In Newbury, N. H., April 25th, by Elder C. H. Fletcher, Mr. WALTER HOFFMAN KING and Miss SARAH JANE MULGROVE, both of Newbury.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS.

London, April 29. The Viceroy of India telegraphs as follows: A messenger, who arrived at Cabul on the 28th, reports that the people of Wardak and Logar attacked Gen. Ross on Sunday. After a severe engagement the enemy were completely dispersed, leaving 1200 dead on the field. Our loss is not mentioned. The district is much disturbed and the passage of letters is difficult. There is some excitement still in Kohistan.

St. Petersburg, April 27. The Golos is devoting a series of articles to the stragetical condition of Siberia with regard to offensive and defensive operations in case of war with China. Apparently the fears entertained by the Golos are to some extent shared by the Government.

The Gazette says the plague has appeared in the Valsk district in the Government of Saratoff. Famine also prevails, and twenty-seven peasants have died from starvation. The Golos says: Phantoms of death and hunger are passing from village to village in the Don district, where all the granaries are empty, and there is an absolute dearth of money. Other provincial papers report deaths from starvation among the peasantry in various parts of the country.

Out of eight Nihilists recently executed at Kieff, three were Jews, and of three conspirators hanged at St. Petersburg a short time since, one was a Jew. It is also said that Hartmann, whom the French Government refuses to extradite, was of Jewish origin, and people believe the same of Dr. Weimar, whose trial is to take place shortly in St. Petersburg.

It is reported that recent fires in Russia have rendered over two hundred families houseless.

New York, May 2. The fireworks manufactory of M. Honore, at Pantin, near Paris, was blown up Saturday afternoon, and it is believed twenty persons were either killed or dangerously injured.

Crop reports from Ohio, Indiana, Southern Illinois and Kentucky are of the most favorable character. The wheat crop wintered almost without injury and is everywhere far advanced and in splendid condition. The average is from 20 to 30 per cent. greater than last year, which was itself a big year.

Four inches of snow and temperature four degrees below the freezing point signalized the advent of May in some portions of Northern Vermont.

The public debt was decreased over $12,000,000 last month.

Rev. G. F. Pentecost has closed his labors in the West this season. The meetings have been of great interest, attended by crowded audiences.

Notices.

NOTICE.—Brethren of Vermont, where shall we hold our third A. C. Conference? No one says, Come here, or go there. Now will you please send in your requests, and then we shall know, for I am waiting to send the notice to the Crisis. If there is no place for it in some church, and we have to appoint ourselves, we shall be likely to pitch the tent somewhere, and who will be responsible? Who says "Come over here and help us"? B. B. CHEDEL, President.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian cause in Sanilac County, Michigan, being very suddenly left without a minister, we are in need of ministerial help. There are several points of interest in a circuit of about twelve miles, and the cause is quite low. For any of God's servants who want to labor, here is a door open and a field vacant. A call or visit from any would be appreciated. If more information is wanted, correspond with R. J. ARMOT, Lexington, Mich.

NOTICE.—The third Annual Quarterly Meeting of District No. 2, of the A. C. Conference of South West Iowa and North West Missouri, will meet with the Ringgold church on Friday, May 28th. The brethren in Decatur County are cordially invited to attend and take part in the meeting. Said meeting is to be held in the Holden school-house, eight miles south of Mt. Ayr.
D. O. HINK, President.
L. C. RAY, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The next Session of the A. C. Conference of Northern Penn. and Southern N. Y. will be held with the church at Shongo, Alleghany Co., N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, June 17th, and hold over the following Sunday. It is hoped that a special effort will be made to make this a profitable meeting.
B. BUTLER, President.
H. ZIEGENFUSS, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The church at Damariscotta and New Castle having called me to become their Pastor, I have accepted. My address will be New Castle, Maine. Brethren wishing to preach at the above church will please correspond with me before sending appointments. E. M. ANDREWS.

NOTICE.

The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are hereby notified that the Annual Meeting of said Committee will be holden on the Camp-ground, commencing Tuesday, May 11th, at 12 M.
J. COUCH, President.
W. H. MITCHELL, Secretary.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the saints scattered abroad, Greeting. Believing that we are in "perilous times," which were to mark the close of this dispensation, and in view of the overwhelming importance of the truths which identify us as a people, the official board of the Northern Illinois A. C. Conference have thought best to call a special meeting, for the purpose of counseling together relative to the peculiar duties of the times in which we live, and the vital interests of the precious truths so graciously committed to our trust. We feel that such a meeting is greatly needed at the present time; and we sincerely desire that not only all the members of this Conference, but also all who are interested in "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," will make special effort to attend this meeting. Various topics suited to the occasion will be presented, on which some of our ministers have consented to prepare papers, which will be subject to brotherly criticism. In view of the foregoing, we do hereby call said meeting to convene at Aurora, Kane Co., Ill., on Wednesday, June 16th, at two P. M., and to continue over the Sabbath, if the Lord will.

By the official Board of the N. Ill. A. C. Conf.
C. W. SMITH, President.
J. A. SMITH, Vice President.
H. G. MCCULLOCH, Secretary.
L. H. DAVIS, Treasurer.

NOTICE.—The next session of the A. C. Quarterly Conference in District No. 1 will be held in Topeka, Kansas, commencing May 27th. We trust each church will be prompt in the preparation for this meeting. We believe the Master has appointed a work for all; then let us share it together. We do not expect every brother and sister can be present, but all can take an interest in the preparation for it, and give their encouragement and prayers for those who do attend. The brethren of the Topeka church are anticipating a good meeting, and will do all they can to make it such. The Lord will always give a blessing when we come expecting it, and praying for it. M. MCGUIRE, Dist. Evangelist.

[Please notice the change of this meeting from the 20th to the 27th of May, as we cannot have the house on the 20th. By order of the church, S. K. GIBSON.]

NOTICE.—To the dear servants of God, whom Christ the great Shepherd of the sheep has called to feed the flock of God: The church in this place (Levant Village, Maine) has decided to hold a series of meetings, to commence Wednesday, May 19th (it being the one hundreth anniversary of the darkening of the sun), and hold over the following Sabbath. We pray the good Shepherd may send us some of the old veterans of the cross to preach the Word of life, and give to the household of faith the meat that is due. A general invitation is extended to all. Homes will be provided. Call on Brethren Dore, Niles and Glidden.
For the church, N. G. REED.

NOTICE.—The officers of the North Illinois A. C. Conference purpose calling an extra session of said Conference to convene in Aurora, Ill., on Wednesday, June 16th, at two P. M., and hold through the week. This meeting is greatly needed at the West, and I trust will be largely attended by those who feel desirous of seeing the cause at the West prosper. I have been corresponding with brethren relative to the meeting, and the interest manifested betokens brighter days for the West. Look for the official call soon.
C. W. SMITH, President of Conference.

NOTICE.—The next Session of the Oxford and Androscoggin County Conference will be held at Carthage, Me. (Staples' school-house), commencing Thursday evening, June 10th, and continue over the following Sunday. Let there be a large section of country represented at this meeting.
JARED WHITMAN, President.
JOSHUA HOWARD, Secretary.

NOTICE.—Having accepted an invitation from the church in Scitico to remain with them as their pastor for another year, I shall be at liberty for outside labor seven Sabbaths during the year. Any church wishing my services for one or more Sabbaths, please address me at Scitico, Ct.
BENJ FINNEY.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—Meetings at Central Hall Sundays at 10.30 A. M. Sabbath School at 12 M. Preaching at 2.30 and 7.30 P. M. Service of song at 7 P. M. Bible class Saturday evenings. Prayer meetings Tuesday and Thursday evenings.
H. A. KING, Pastor.

NOTICE.—The next Annual Meeting of the Delaware District Advent Christian Conference will be held with the Second Advent Church of Philadelphia, Penn., commencing Friday evening, May 14th. Let there be a good representation of the churches, by delegates or letter.
FRANK BURR, President.
FRANK HEDLEY, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Wisconsin Campmeeting will probably be held at Crystal Lake, Columbia Co., near Lodi, June 5th to 12th. Full notice will be given in due time. Meanwhile let plans be made to attend. W. S.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Quarterly Conference of Nova Scotia will be held at Bear River, N. S., commencing June 17th. We cordially invite the brothers and sisters from abroad. J. MOORE.

NOTICE.—The Beebe Plain Camp Meeting will commence Saturday, June 19th. Particulars hereafter. L. C. MCKINSTRY, Sec.

NOTICE.—The Third Quarterly Meeting of the Northwestern Evangelical District No. 2 of Kansas will be held with the A. C. Church at the Townsend school-house on Coon Creek, Lincoln Township, Washington Co., Kansas (P. O. address Waterville, Marshall Co., Kansas), commencing May 13th. Please all see that they do their duty and make due reports. We all understand our duty without being prompted every quarter. Come all, and let us have a regular old-fashioned Campmeeting, the first one of the season. The District Tent will be pitched for the occasion.
THOS. R. COMSTOCK, Evangelist, Dist. No. 2.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference held with the Advent Christian Church at Sweaburg, Oxford Co., Ontario. Friends of like precious faith in Western Ontario are cordially welcomed by the church. Further information will be cheerfully furnished by corresponding with Bro. Daniel McLellan, Sweaburg, Ontario, or the undersigned.
W. C. HICKS, St. Thomas, Ontario, Box 272.

NOTICE.—The first Quarterly Meeting of the Southern District of Wisconsin for this season will be held at Bellville, Dane Co., beginning on Friday evening, May 21st, and hold over the Sunday following. Let the scattered gather from the regions round about. WM. SHELDON.

NOTICE.—The Maine Conference have appointed me as their Tract and Mission Agent. All who want my labors in new places can write to me at Bowdoinham, Maine, Box 103. All who have pledged money will please send it, as soon as convenient, to H. G. Smiley, of Augusta, Me., Treasurer.
H. S. MITCHELL, Tract and Mission Agent.

Special Notice.

Any of the Preaching Brethren desiring to send appointments to Lynn, Mass., will please correspond with the following Committee before sending their appointments: Geo. W. Sederquest, H. Q. Staples, J. W. Burnham.

NOTICE.—The next session of the Maine Second Advent Christian Conference will meet the first Tuesday in May. Place and particulars given hereafter.
S. K. PARTRIDGE, President.
J. A. LIBBY, Secretary.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—All preachers wishing to preach at East Weymouth, Mass., will please correspond with Wm. H. Crockett, North Weymouth, Mass., before sending any appointments for Sundays or evenings.

NOTICE.—I will preach in Ashland, Michigan, once in four weeks. Also in Bangor once in two weeks. This leaves one Sunday in each four weeks for missionary work. Let those wishing help take notice. Address me at Muskegan, Mich., Box 581. M. J. JAMES.

NOTICE.—Having been chosen Conference Evangelist to hold meetings in new fields within the limits of the Conference of Quebec, Northern Vermont and Northern New Hampshire, I would say that I am ready to do all I can in this new field of labor, and will respond to calls as the way may be opened. Brethren, time is short. Let us do what we can to rescue the perishing.
J. H. F. VARNEY, South Sutton, N. H.

NOTICE.—The Iowa Mission Tent is for sale. If wanted, please address P. S. W. Deyo, Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., Iowa.

On account of revival interest at New Bedford, Mass., my appointments for Natick, Springfield, Bristol and Plantsville are withdrawn.
WM. C. STEWART.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon), to insure insertion for the coming week.

Resolved, That no appointments be published in the "Crisis" henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister or ministers of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal.

☞ All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—Ozias Goodrich, Boston, Mass.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

O Lord, we yearn for brighter skies,
We long for fresher air;
The sickening cry of human woe
Is floating everywhere.

The earth is waxing dim and old,
Delusion blinds the eye;
The giddy throng rush blindly on,
Unheeding tear and sigh.

"Thy kingdom come." O hear the prayer!
Thy will on earth be done!
O rise, thou Light that shines for aye—
Thou never-setting Sun!

The world's wild fever rages on,
O whisper, "Peace, be still!"
The soul is urgent in its need,
The void, O what can fill?

Naught, naught but higher, grander life,—
All fresh from living springs;
A freedom from the pain and care
Of earth and earthly things.

"Thy kingdom come," with tears we pray;
With faith we plead with Thee;
O fill the earth with righteousness
As waters fill the sea.

The time will come, the day is near!
Rejoice, ye saints, and sing!
O hear ye not a far-off sound,
Like rush of angel's wing?

The warning now is going forth—
The glory soon will dawn!
"Thy kingdom come!" O blessed day!
Creation's happy morn.

SCIENCE AND THE RESURRECTION OF THE HUMAN BODY.

Editor World's Crisis:—Dear Bro.,—The enclosed slip, cut from the Chicago Daily Tribune, contains some ideas, or a new way of expressing them, that has so much of truth in them, that I send them to you, thinking you may see fit to give them to the readers of the Crisis.

Sparta, Wis. W. H. MOSELY.

A large congregation listened to a sermon of the Rev. Dr. Williamson recently upon "Science and the resurrection of the human body." His text was: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" (Acts 24: 8.)

He was free to acknowledge, he said, that the longer he lived with his body the better he liked it. He knew himself, and was not infrequently most courteously reminded by his friends, that his was far from an ideal body. Its proportions were ungainly, its lack of endurance often embarassed, its not infrequent pains discouraged his desire for long life, and its hereditary tendency to unanticipated mortality sometimes crowded his soul with strangely mysterious dread. Notwithstanding all this, however, he believed in his body, and was delighted to know that he was to live, after the momentary episode of the grave, forever. The life, including the soul, that formed and continued his present body would, in God's good time, reform and recontinue it forever. That was the doctrine of the Resurrection as stated by God's Word in the light of modern biological learning. God made the first body exactly as his would be to-day but for sin. The poor human body was unfortunate, and was suffering for the sins of its master,—the imperial spirit that occupied and ruled it. He could not think, and, of course, could not say, just how beautiful and perfect the mind of man was, but he dared venture the statement that man's mind was not one whit more beautiful and perfect, in no way more fearfully wonderful, than his body. He could agree to eventually part with his soul as readily as with his body. How could we continue to be men and women without both was, to his poor thought, inconceivable. Why create the body but for a mortal life? May be the soul and body died together. If animal organization might utterly and irrevocably perish, what else was sure to endure?

In the extremity of our embarrassment the doctrine of the Resurrection, foreshadowed by reason and plainly disclosed by Revelation, came to our relief. This doctrine meant that every human body, as well as every human soul, was immortal by the power of God; that in the life of the future men were to live as they did now, with this difference; that their bodies would be as though their souls had been sinless. The Resurrection would introduce the redeemed into a second Eden of physical as well as spiritual immortality, from whose perfect security and beautiful repose no man would again wander. Human probation opened in the Eden of Asia; human probation would triumphantly end in the second Eden on life's fair immortal shore. God's original plan of associated physical and spiritual manhood in deathless continuance of being in this world was broken up, as all know, by the sin of the race, and it was to be gloriously and triumphantly retried at the Resurrection. Life existing before organization, as it manifestly must have done, was the instrumentality God employed to build the human body the first time; and why, in the name of science, he insisted, might He not employ it just as easily the second time to do the same work, or in the Resurrection? There were no scientific reasons that could be urged against the resumption of physical living in the Resurrection that could not be just as successfully used against its being in the marvel of generation, and especially against its beginning in the first representation of the human race.

Schopenhauer, looked upon their bodies with a peculiarly unfriendly eye. But whatever the evil we might urge against the body we might still more urge against the soul, for in the soul and not in the body were lodged the evils against which we were called upon to contend. The human soul was not compelled to sin. It might have stood true. The fall originally, and each time it was repeated, was not God's purpose but man's invention. Grace just and good enough to redeem man's sinful soul could not fail to do as much also for his suffering body.

The Doctor then referred to the Bible for evidence of the resurrection of the body, saying that the Old and New Testaments emphasized the doctrine with almost equal distinctness, and that if the Scripture marshaled to support it were insufficient no one need hope to Biblically sustain the doctrines of immortality, atonement, prayer, purity, faith, etc.

He next considered the objections to the doctrine, dwelling particularly upon the one that the resurrection was scientifically—that was, mathematically—impossible. Where a man died, the half-educated instructed us that his body soon passed into irrevocable decay and disintegration. One generation passed away in a benevolent provision known as death, and another immediately followed to subsist upon its ruins. Right here was the insuperable objection. How could it be possible to find any particular body when it should have passed through so many organic forms? In answering this question, he said that what the doctrine claimed was that every person's physical life would resume, after the interruption of the grave, by the power of God. But how could the identical body that died be secured again? Hundreds might have possessed it in part; whose should it turn out to be on the morning of the resurrection? The embarassment arose from an utterly mistaken idea of what the human body really was. He denied that the human body changed every seven years or in any other length of time. No such thing as identity could be affirmed of the human organization. The human body, in all its tissues, was an uninterrupted process,—a ceaseless flow through the channels of organization. Certainly the resurrection did not promise us any particular body, because we never had any particular body. It promised us a resumption of physical life by the power of God in the sense of the instrumentality known as life, which we knew existed entirely independently of our animal organization. The life of the human body was like the waters of a flowing stream,—always filling its banks, and never for a moment standing still. We died and were raised from the dead daily in the ultimate cell-work of which our bodies were composed. If a body died thus, under what physiological condition might it rise again? Manifestly by the same simultaneous application to a mass of cells of the same principle precisely that now affected our individual cellular renewals.

He closed with this illustration: "I have in my mind two small lakes, about a mile apart; one several feet higher than the other, and emptying into it through a small stream. This stream may be closed by a gate situated about a quarter of a mile from the upper lake. One day my companion agreed to take his station at the outlet of the stream at the lower lake to watch the effect upon the flow occasioned by my agency at the gate. I dropped the gate and let it remain down a minute, and then raised it again. This I repeated a dozen times. Afterwards I said to my friend: 'Did the water enter the lake in its usual flow.' He answered me it did; but I knew it did not outflow as usual. I had actually broken the even flow, but so briefly as to be inappreciable to him at his distance from me. At another time I closed the gate for a day, and the bed of the stream below it became quite dry. In the morning I raised it, and the usual flood was resumed. Now the cellular death that is going on within us every moment is a real death, and is followed by a real resumption of life, or a resurrection, but the interval is so short that we cannot detect it. God, whom we call Nature, stands at the gate of our physiology, raising and lowering it at His pleasure. He cuts off our flow of life every moment, but allowing it to resume the next moment, we do not notice the interruption. Can it be less than His power that starts the stream of vitality after it is arrested? Some day God will drop the gate for a decade, a century, an era. This will constitute an appreciable interruption. We are agreed to call such a cessation of the flow of life death. God will let the gate remain down until He is pleased to raise it. One morning in the by-and-by He will choose to raise it, and our long, interrupted physical life will flow on again. This will be the Resurrection. Now God begins to drop this gate just the moment a man passes his prime. Indeed, a man passes his prime, because at a certain age God begins gradually, but appreciably, to cut off his flow of life. In the Resurrection, when the perfect flow returns, each man, therefore, will find himself in the body and bloom of an immortal, sinless, perfect, and mature youth."

We cheerfully publish the above extract from Dr. Williamson's sermon, not because we endorse all the ideas expressed, nor because we comprehend fully the author's meaning in some expressions; but because of its fearless advocacy of the cardinal Bible doctrine of the saints possessing perfected, organic bodies in the glorious future state. We may not agree exactly as to the process by which such bodies will be produced, but the most important idea, i. e., that we are promised glorious physical bodies in the immortal state, we do agree. May God let on the light, that His people may more fully comprehend the wonderful transition of humanity from the mortal to the immortal state is our prayer. ED.

BOUND OR LIBERATED?

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

A brother in Christ asks and wishes a reply to this question through the Crisis: What is the teaching of the Bible in case of divorce for adultery? Has the aggrieved party any right to marry again? F——o."

REPLY.

The God-ordained institution of marriage was given for the universal benefit of mankind. Christ has said—"For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh. Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." They two, or twain, become one. God intended that this union should be preserved inviolate, hence He has pronounced severe judgments upon those who violate their marriage covenant by inconstancy, adultery, fornication.

As the race became more and more corrupted by sin, the marriage tie became of less force, because human affection became perverted and weakened, even in the family of God. They became often alienated from each other, and enamored of others. So "Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so," says Christ. "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery; and whoso marrieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery." Matt. 19: 5, 10. Why? Because this man belongs to this woman, and no other has a right to him; and this woman belongs to this man, and no other has a right to her. Hence it is adultery to exchange companions.

There is a hoard of "adulterers and adulteresses" now in the Christian Church. There is one cause for which one party is justified in obtaining a divorce from the other party, and only one. This is "fornication." This breaks the marriage covenant and such covenant ceases to exist. Hence the aggrieved party is no longer held by the covenant—the law. It is dead; has become void. Two parties can not violate the same contract between them. When one party has violated it, there is no force in it to bind the other party. He or she is dead to the law, that being dead wherein he or she was held. (See Rom. 7: 2, 3.) The aggrieved party in such a case is as free to marry again as though never married.

The Lord has abundantly shown that He does not abide by, or continue bound by, the covenants He has made with the people, when they violate the terms on their part. Neither has He enjoined upon the children of men a marriage law which binds one party to a life of solitude, because the other has so violated it as to destroy its force. Paul speaks for the Lord in another case, where Christianity converts one of a married couple and not the other: "Let not the wife depart from her husband [though a heathen]: and let not the husband put away his wife [though a heathen]. But if she depart [who has an unbelieving husband], let her remain unmarried, or let her be reconciled to her husband." 1 Cor. 7: 10, 11. In such cases of separation they who depart have no right to marry another.

MY PRESENT CONVICTIONS REGARDING OUR PAPERS.

BY O. W. GILLESPIE.

I look upon our papers as the most wonderfully constructed vehicles that can be devised to carry the news of the coming kingdom to all parts of the civilized world. The cheapness, compactness, and durability of paper, are all in favor of the universal dissemination of knowledge; and when it is put into the form of a sacred volume, dedicated to the service of God, and accompanied by His Holy Spirit, it becomes a potent power in the diffusion of gospel news, and a means by which "knowledge shall increase."

Our papers should be entirely free from the spirit of strife, jealousy, envy and the like, all of which is carnal, and detracts from their spirituality and power. Editors, see to it that your papers come from the press freighted with messages of love and truth, giving to the world the warning due them, and to the church of God "meat in due season." May the Spirit of Him whose heart yearned for the welfare of mankind, and whose soul cries out with affectionate pathos—"O Jerusalem! Jerusalem!" and again, "Father, forgive them!" so permeate every article and issue of the paper, as to carry conviction to sinners' hearts and win them to Christ.

O that our brethren fully realized the extent of the usefulness and power of our papers, and the necessity of being co-workers together, and help-meets to each other, in the great work of proclaiming the gospel news of redemption and immortality. God bless our papers, and help them to be lights in the world, and a power for good, heralding the glorious news of restitution, redemption, and the soon coming kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

THE EXODUS.

BY H. L. STEVENS.

Dear Bro. Couch:—Please allow space in your paper for a few remarks respecting the "exodus," about which so much has been written and spoken. Your article in the Crisis of April 7th, headed—"The oppressor and the oppressed"—gives a correct statement of the condition of my people, their mean treatment, etc. We are not anxious to leave our homes (climate—we have few homes), and seek homes in a colder climate, but we must live somewhere. The Constitution recognizes us as citizens, and I guess all the readers of the Crisis have read therein the Bill of Rights. We want life, liberty and happiness, so far as it is necessary to pursue it on earth; but we are not safe from danger, where no danger should be. I could tell of circumstances that would shock the reader. We have borne grievances of the deepest hue, without murmuring. We see matters getting much worse, and we do not feel like standing the fire any longer.

Here is the secret of our poverty. We have to do well nigh all the work, while our neighbors sit about and talk politics, and abuse certain people. Of course if we do not make enough to feed ourselves and our neighbors, some must lack, and you need not wonder which party it will be. The laws do but little good except in one direction. Virtue is not protected, so you need not look for anything becoming godliness. I can only hope that Christ will come soon and save His own. I am sorry to say that Satan will get a large per cent. of the people this way. Merchandise may continue to go up, but wages go down. Men get $50 to $80 per year. Our church needs a cover. I have taken the responsibility on myself. I am asking God to help me. I guess it can be done for about $60. Pray to the Lord to open the way for me. I trust in His Word.

NOT ALL BRIGHTNESS.

At the great meeting of the Evangelical Alliance held at Basle, Switzerland, many blessed and encouraging truths were spoken concerning Christian unity and the progress of the Lord's work in our world; yet looking over reports of the meeting it is manifest that some of the speakers had their doubts, to say the least, respecting the millennium being introduced by the means now in operation.

Dr. Philip Schaff, in the course of an address on "Christianity in the United States," remarked: "Civilization and religion follow the course of the sun from east to west, encircling the globe until they shall reach again the lands of their birth. Asia is the cradle of the human race. Europe is an advance upon Asia. America ought to be, and will be in due time, an advance upon Europe, unless the world should come to a sudden end."

This was well said, whether the Doctor realized it or not, for the long absent Nobleman has commanded: 'Watch, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." The gospel day—"the day of salvation"—is fast drawing to a close, and with its "sudden end" will terminate many a human scheme and glittering hope.

Another speaker, the Rev. E. V. Bligh, rector of Birling, England, though reporting a great and good work being carried on successfully in Great Britain, had to admit: "The present day is one of marvelous light with ever increasing darkness—of work without end, and energy and self-denial, and yet a day of pride and fulness of bread and abundance of idleness, which Ezekiel described as the sin of Sodom. Assuredly the strong wine, and the beds of ivory, and the love of luxury of the times of Amos have their counterpart in the fashionable Christianity of the present day. And nowhere more than in Great Britain, a country which God has so signally blessed and prospered."—Messiah's Herald.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Bro. O. Beckwith.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I have long desired to address a few words to you through the Crisis, but thus far circumstances and want of time have been permitted to hinder. But now, as I am confined to the house, though am able to sit up, I feel impressed to present my case to the children of God scattered abroad, and ask an interest in their prayers.

About two weeks ago, while returning from my work, my horse took fright, throwing me from my carriage, and quite severely injuring my right ankle, which had before been lame many years. I feel to thank God it is as well as it is, and that I am getting along better than was at first expected; although it may be some time before I can walk and resume the duties of life.

Many of you know of our little girl, eleven years old, who has been blind now nearly a year and a half, and is otherwise almost helpless. She is no better, but has seemed to be failing of late. Dear brethren and sisters, pray especially for her. I know that the great Physician is alone able to heal her. We have long since committed her case to Him, knowing that if it is His will He will heal; but if not, I feel to say, "Thy will, O God, be done."

Pray also for the cause in this place. Many and rich have been the blessings we have received since dear Bro. H. F. Carpenter first lifted the standard of present truth here years ago, and since Bro. Couch, our dear Editor, was here. Although many who first embraced the truth here have moved to other places and been scattered abroad, and although the enemy has tried hard to distract and destroy, yet a goodly number, with those who have been added from time to time, are still standing fast in the faith, and looking for "that blessed hope." I praise God for the truth. The solemn charge, received at Woodstock, by Bro. Couch, years ago, still rests upon me; and although trials have been severe, and afflictions now seem many and sore, yet to-day I rejoice in God, who seems nearer, and His cause dearer than ever. I praise God for the promise that all things work for good to those who love Him, and I feel to renew my covenant with Him, and be faithful to the end.

May God bless all the waiting and tried ones, and at last grant that both writer and reader may, with all the redeemed, inherit that blessed land where no inhabitant will ever say, "I am sick"; and to God be all the praise. Amen.

West Fairlee, Vt.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

Dear Ones in Jesus:—My heart is full of thankfulness to the great God, whose I am and whom I serve, for His merciful kindness to me in my life of suffering and distress. O how weary and tired I am of this world of sorrow and tears. I want Jesus to come. I want to see Him whom my soul loveth. I do sigh for home, sweet home. I want to see His dear face, and gaze into His loving eyes, and praise Him for all He has done for me. I get so tired, so sick of everything that is earthly; and from the depths of my heart I pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." I am lonely, and suffering so all the while; and it is so seldom that I see only one who loves the appearing of our blessed Lord and Master. But I thank God for the kindness of this one, who often pleads the blessing of God to rest upon me.

During the winter my niece and nephew have been stopping with me; my nephew spending Saturday night and Sunday with us, then away to work. We have had such sweet little meetings every Sabbath, pleading God's promises. They are to leave me, perhaps never to meet me again till we meet at the great tribunal; but the blessing of God has been upon us during the months we have enjoyed their society. O, I long for the time when partings shall be over.

Now, dear ones, you who have any faith in God's healing power, will you plead my case before the throne? I feel as if I could not bear this terrible suffering longer. Do plead for me that I may be more comfortable, if it is God's will. I can say, "Thy will be done," but O do for me just as you would if it were some of your own kindred who were suffering even as I am now, while I write these imperfect lines. Pray earnestly. Plead my case before the Lord. He will hear the united cries of His dear ones. I believe it. Ask Him to help me out of this deep trial, this extreme suffering, and to grant me the desires of my heart, if it can please Him.

North Dana, Mass.

From Bro. E. G. Whitney.

Dear Brn. and Srs.—I attempt for the first time to write a few lines to the Crisis. Through the labors of P. W. Hough we organized a small band of Adventist Christians in July, 1879. We were only ten in number when we organized, but we trust in Him who cares for His children. Though we had much opposition to meet with, Bro. Hough preached to us until September, and then we got Bro. E. A. Marsh. His object is to preach the gospel and bring souls to Christ.

In March we commenced a series of meetings. Bro. P. S. W. Deyo has been laboring with us about two weeks, assisted by our preacher. His object is to save the perishing. We have worked hard, and can see the fruit of our labor. Some twelve were brought out to take a stand for Christ, and twenty more renewed their covenant with God. Five more were added to our little band, and six were buried with Christ in baptism. Much credit is due to the Methodist brethren for the interest they manifested in seeing souls brought to Christ. Although the roads have been very bad, yet we have had a glorious time together. We have been encouraged to stand firm for Christ and His Word.

I would say to all Christians, Stand firm on the foundation of faith. We must separate ourselves from the world, so that when Christ shall come we may be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless.

Hawkeye, Iowa.

From Sr. H. Warren.

Dear Bro. Couch:—Perhaps you would like to know how I became acquainted with the Crisis, not having my name among your subscribers. Well, I will tell you, and I shall be a subscriber soon. A sister who has left Salinas and gone to England, directed our post-man to leave the paper with me. She obtained it though our dear Sr. Reed's agency. God bless her, and all the great family of the Crisis. May we soon meet to enjoy each other's society forever. We remember all in our prayers at our meetings and Bible class. We meet twice each week. May the Lord increase our number, so that we may be able to have a Pastor or leader. Pray for us, dear ones, that we may get stronger with every new trial; for a trial it is indeed when we offer the Crisis to a soul-sick brother or sister, and have it laid aside with words of warning against the truths it contains. It hurts our feelings, but what matter is it? Do we not know it must be so to fulfill the prophecies?

The First Presbyterian Church is closed, having been without a minister for nine months, and we were refused its use by the Trustees, on account of our soul-sleeping doctrine. I was baptized by Bro. Carey. Bro. and Sr. Reed have been with me at my humble cottage, which I consider the Lord's, and where all God's servants will find a welcome if they come this way.

Salinas, Cal.

From Sr. L. T. Waldron.

Bro. Couch:—I wish to write a few lines to the Crisis, and tell you what the Lord has done for us here. We have a few who love the Lord and His appearing, and who take the Bible for their guide. It has guided us safely. We organized a class here two years ago, and by the help of God we have kept it up till now. The Lord has graciously blest us, and added to our numbers. We have met with considerable opposition, but we are not discouraged.

I was a member of the Free-Will Baptist Church for nearly ten years, and it took me a long time to get rid of the "immortality of the soul" doctrine. I truly believe that we shall have immortality only through Christ. There are a few copies of the Crisis taken here, and each copy is read by several families. I love to read it, and prize it very highly. I think it has been a great help to me. There is no one here that takes the Crisis that would be without it if they could possibly get it. Brethren and sisters, pray for us.

Mapleton, Me.

From A. L. Carman.

Dear Brothers and Sisters of like precious faith:—I take this opportunity to drop you a few lines to let you know how things are here. I am alone with the exception of my family. There are some Seventh Day brethren here, but they only advocate the Sabbath question. I have lived here little more than a year. I have advocated the truth at all times when opportunity was offered, and lately have publicly advocated it. I desire an interest in the prayers of all God's children. There are some good people scattered over northwest Missouri. Pray for us, that we may be faithful till the Master comes.

TO THE UNCONVERTED.

BY R. A. FISHER.

Dear Readers of the Crisis:—Are there any among you who know not Jesus? any who are resisting the gentle influences, the kind and loving appeals of that tireless Watcher, that Stranger, who, at the door of your heart, has been gently knocking, who has waited long and is waiting still to gain admittance? Do you realize your situation? Do you know your danger? You are like a ship upon the ocean, without helm or rudder, driven hither and thither by the winds and waves, with certain destruction in your pathway. Why longer delay? Jesus loves you. He invites you. He waits for you. How can you resist the proffered salvation? Remember God has not promised to save you to-morrow, but He will save you to-day. Come, "now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation."

Are you afraid you cannot hold out? You will not if you rely upon your own strength; but if you will yield to Christ and let Him lead you, all will be well. He says: "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Do you think you could not give up the pleasures of the world? The happiness that the Lord gives to those that serve Him, will so far exceed the pleasures of this world that you will find no enjoyment in them. All earthly joys are transient, but this is a foretaste of eternal bliss. And if the foretaste is so sweet, what will be the reality. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

The Lord says His Spirit shall not always strive with man. Will you not listen to that still, small voice? Has it not spoken to you in gentle whisperings in the silent watches of the night, telling you of some wrong you had done, or some duty you had left undone? Perhaps in some hour of danger, or upon a bed of sickness, it has whispered to you, reminding you of some neglected promise or opportunity to give your heart to Jesus. Continual neglect of those silent warnings will grieve the Spirit, and it will leave you.

Dear reader, come, and accept salvation now. You can have pardon, for our God is ready to pardon. He is gracious and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness. You are not too great a sinner, for "though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow. Then come, do not delay, for there is a bound beyond which pardons will not be granted. The time hastens; man's probation is nearly ended; the door of mercy will soon be closed forever. Then the Lord Jesus will come and find you unsaved.

Let me entreat you in the name of Christ, if you are without the blessed hope, delay no longer, but give your heart to Jesus now, before your opportunity is lost. Life is uncertain. Although you are in health to-day, yet death may claim you ere another day. Then all hope is lost, for as death leaves you, so will the judgment find you. Jesus is coming, and I thank God the time is not far distant when we shall behold Him coming in the clouds of heaven, "with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." Then will the blessed dead come forth, clothed in immortality, and the crown of righteousness be given, and the eternal inheritance enjoyed. O the unutterable despair (in that hour of gladness to the saints) of those who are without God. They will "call for the rocks and mountains to fall on them, and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

A WORD FOR TOBACCO-USING CHRISTIANS.

BY C. H. SHEPHERD.

"Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. 10: 31). Can a Christian smoke or chew tobacco to the glory of God?

We are living in an age of wickedness perhaps unparalleled in the history of our world. A large amount of crime is due to intemperance. How many drunkards are made so by tobacco-using the day of judgment alone will reveal. Boys smoke sometimes because of having the appetite transmitted to them by their parents, and others by having the example set them. This leads into vile company, where they are induced to take a social glass, and thus they are fairly on the road to crime and prison.

That tobacco creates an appetite for strong drink there is no doubt. Hundreds of children are ruined physically, morally, intellectually and everlastingly, we have no doubt, by the example of the tobacco-using father. Think of a child of three years of age having a transmitted appetite for the weed so strong that be would chew a rag saturated with tobacco spittle! Such a boy lived not a day's journey from me.

Christian men, stop for a moment, and consider the many evils introduced to the civilized world by the American savages through this weed. It is a startling truth that a person who is drugged, narcotized or drunken, is in a condition of carelessness concerning his present and future welfare; and millions are drugged to a greater or less degree by tobacco. Think of its filthiness. Think of its expense. Add up the many dollars you have expended for the use of this poison to gratify an appetite that God never gave you, when it was needed to pay for food, clothes for your children, or some useful article for your self-denying wife, or to furnish good reading matter for the family. Think also that your habit is paving a way for your children to walk in, from innocence, to profanity, intemperance, crime, prison, gallows, and the lake of fire.

We plead with every minister of the gospel and every Christian, for the welfare of mankind, for the love of the children, for the cause of temperance, for Christ and Christianity, do not use, sell or manufacture this soul and body-destroying poison. How can you excuse yourselves before the eternal Judge?

JESUS—PRECIOUS NAME.

BY M. E. ORR.

There are many names, such as father, mother, brother, sister, husband, wife, son, and daughter, which we love and fondly cherish; but above all these endearing names stands the precious name of Jesus. Why? Because (1) "That while we were yet sinners Christ died for us, thereby exemplifying His love for a perishing world. (2) It is precious because He is our Mediator, and able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for us." (3) He is the "chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." One who has promised never to leave or forsake us. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (4) His name is precious, because He can be touched with the feelings of our infirmities as no other earthly friend can. He was tried and tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin, and He will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear, but will, with the temptation, make a way for our escape.

Again, the apostle in addressing his Philipian brethren on the subject of the Saviour's humble obedience to the death of the cross, says, "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess to the glory of God the Father." And last, though not least, the name of Jesus is precious because "There is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we can be saved."

"Jesus, the name that charms our fears,
That bids our sorrows cease;
'Tis music to the sinner's ears,
'Tis life, and health, and peace."

A CONSECRATED LIFE.

Oh, there is a wonderful charm about a really consecrated life. The most indifferent and irreligious within the circle of its influence are obliged to confess that religion when thus practised and enjoyed is a blessing not to be contemned or spoken lightly of. An instance of this is given in the biography of the sainted Murray McCheyne, of Scotland. A letter was addressed to him by a working man, in which he stated that he felt he owed a debt of gratitude to Mr. McCheyne, as being the means of his conversion, and it was in this way. "When I saw you pass up the aisle to go to your vestry, I at once felt you were a holy man. I felt as though you had very intimate dealings with God, and when you proceeded with your service, it was not so much the words you said as the holy influence which surrounded you which made me feel so condemned, for if you were so holy, how could I bear to appear in the presence of a holy God?" This is the "power" that is everywhere so needed, this sweet attractiveness which comes of close and hallowed fellowship with Jesus. This is being as "living epistles, read and known of all men." This is the life Christ wills his followers to live.

A beloved clergyman once said that the only rich people in the world who were afraid of living up to their income were the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty, and this utterance drew from a Christian sister the remark, "then by all means let us live more extravagantly." Oh may the Holy Spirit lead us into a fuller enjoyment and possession of "power" to live a wholly consecrated life, and be thus the means under God of winning souls to Christ, attracted to Him by the "beauty of holiness."—Sel.

Christ's Word forbids many ways in which wealth is gained, therefore many men desire not to hear His words.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

(Selected.)

WHAT a sad, dark, cheerless life is that which has not the joy and light and comfort of fellowship with Jesus Christ. What a beautiful contrast to such a life is that of the trusting child of God. "I feel as if the winding-up were coming soon," wrote Norman McLeod to a friend, when approaching his sixtieth year, he felt he could no longer endure the toils to which he had been used. He wrote in his journal: "My life has been to me a mystery of love; I know that God's education of each man is in perfect righteousness. I know that the best on earth have been the greatest sufferers, because they were the best, and like gold could stand the fire and be purified by it. I know this, and a great deal more, and yet the mercy of God to me is such a mystery that I have been tempted to think I was utterly unworthy of suffering. I do not know. But I lay myself at Thy feet and say, 'Not that I am prepared, but that Thou art good and wise, and wilt prepare me.'"

Blessed are the kind and peaceful,
Scattering smiles where'er they go,
Saying, "Let us love each other,
Christ himself hath loved us so."
Blessed still if Jesus loves us,
Though despised on earth we dwell,
We may trust Him still with gladness,
For He doeth all things well.

"BY GRACE are ye saved." Here is the Gospel in one short sentence, but how often its meaning has been perverted and lost by giving to the word grace a rigid and technical meaning! Suppose we understand it to mean simply help, and see if the theological snarls that have gathered around it are not in a great measure disentangled by the definition. The grace of God is the help of God. We are saved by His help. That implies that we could not be saved without it. It means that we are in danger of being lost, and that we cannot save ourselves, and that it is by the divine interposition that we are saved. But it implies also that the work is not all done for us; that we ourselves have something to do. We are saved by help; we are not saved by main strength. God's power does not supplant our activity; it re-enforces it.

How many take a wrong view of life, and waste their energies and destroy their nervous system, in endeavoring to accumulate wealth, without thinking of the present happiness they are throwing away. It is not wealth or high station which makes a man happy. Many of the most wretched beings on earth have both; but it is a radiant, sunny spirit, which knows how to bear trials and enjoy comforts, and thus extract happiness from every incident in life.

LET God exert Himself in us; abandon ourselves to Him; we shall suffer, but we shall suffer with love and inward tranquility; we shall needs fight, but we shall gain the victory; we shall weep, but our tears shall be pleasing, and God Himself shall wipe them from our eyes; we shall be restrained from following our passions, but after a free sacrifice of our liberty, we shall find another kind of liberty, unknown to the world, and more valuable than universal empire.

THE last best fruit which comes to late perfection, even in the kindliest soul, is tenderness toward the hard, forbearance toward the unforbearing, warmth of heart toward the cold, philanthropy toward the misanthropic.

TRUTH.

BY MRS. J. C. WELLMAN.

[Translated from the French of Masillon.]

Truth, this light of heaven, is the only thing here below worthy of the care and research of man. Truth alone is the light of our mind, the rule of our heart, the source of true pleasure, the foundation of our hopes, the consolation of our fears, the ameliorator of our evils, the remedy of our pains. Truth alone is the source of a good conscience, the terror of a bad, the secret pain of vice, the internal recompense of virtue. Truth alone immortalizes those who have loved it, renders illustrious the chains of those who suffer for it, draws public honors upon the ashes of the martyrs and its defenders, and renders respectable the abjection and poverty of those who have left all to follow it.

Finally, truth alone inspires magnanimous thoughts, forms heroic souls—souls, of which the world is not worthy, sages alone worthy of that name. The extent of our care should be to know it; of our talents to manifest it; of our zeal to defend it. We ought to seek it in our fellow men, and cherish only the desire that they would wish to please us by it. In a word, it should suffice that it be manifested to be loved, that it be known to be appreciated.

"TARRY THOU THE LORD'S LEISURE."

Hast thou, dear soul, an ardent wish,
A longing, still unsatisfied?
Dost thou besiege the throne of grace,
And feel thou canst not be denied?
In patience rest upon His word—
"Tarry the leisure of the Lord"!

And thou, poor soul, by foes beset!
Do cares and burdens sorely press?
In sickness, solitude and pain,
Is naught thy portion but distress?
In faith still wait upon His word—
"Tarry the leisure of the Lord"!

And thou, sad soul, aweary quite
Of all this conflict we call life?
And dost thou long for friendly death
To put an end to all thy strife?
Patient and faithful, trust His word—
"Tarry the leisure of the Lord"!

ABOUT THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH.

BY C. E. BARNES.

I have had sent to me recently a copy of the Advent Review, which contains an article by a late convert to the Seventh-day Sabbath relating thereto, and having given it a thoughtful reading, I present the following considerations which the article has suggested to my mind.

The proposition which is the pivot on which the whole argument of the writer turns is this: "The moral law of God, that written upon tables of stone by the finger of God, is primary in its nature,—primary in the sense that it is of first rank, and that it never can be done away so long as God and intelligent moral beings exist, and have relations to each other." Then further on he says, "Let us try each one of these precepts of the Supreme Ruler, and see if they can be done away with. Suppose the written command, 'Thou shalt not kill,' were lost from the decalogue, and from all written books and records, and no one believed that God had ever given any such command. Would it be less a duty to refrain from injury to our neighbor, and from taking his life?" This reasoning is for the purpose of proving that the duty of keeping the Seventh-day Sabbath, which is enjoined in the fourth commandment, is as binding and lasting as the duty to refrain from killing, stealing, lying, etc.

Underlying this reasoning is a fallacy and an assumption to be met with frequently in arguments from the S. D. side, and too often allowed to pass unexposed. The assump[illegible] commandments in their [illegible] laws; that the Sabbath [illegible] a moral law as really as [illegible]ent against killing; that as to the[illegible]re, all the commandments are precisely alike. Now, if this assumption is false, it at once takes the force out of many columns and pages of reasoning in behalf of S. D. observance. Let us see if the vital difference between the Sabbath command and the others is not plainly apparent; and to show the fact, I would refer my readers to the preceding quotation with reference to the command, "Thou shalt not kill," and then apply it to the Sabbath command. "Suppose the written command"—Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy—"were lost from the decalogue, and from all written books and records, and no one believed that God had ever given any such command. Would it be less a duty" to keep the Sabbath day? Every one would answer at once that then there would be no Sabbath duty. Even our S. D. friends will admit that if they did not believe God had ever given any such command, they would not observe the day. But they would not say the same of the duty of truthfulness and chastity. And herein is seen on what a different basis the Sabbath duty rests. Apart from the explicit command, the duty to keep the Sabbath does not exist. But with the command or without, before the annunciation of the law or after, the duty of truthfulness, of chastity, and refraining from murder exists. This is because these latter are moral duties while the observance of a Sabbath is not moral, but belongs to the list of positive duties.

Here let me call attention to the recog[illegible] distinction between moral law and [illegible] laws are those require[illegible] nature and constitu[illegible] necessary, the reason [illegible]dent of any revealed [illegible]erning them, and which [illegible] of the case demand obe[illegible] moral creatures while such [illegible] things endures. Positive laws, on the other hand, are those requirements which grow out of an expressly revealed command from adequate authority, which find their occasion for existence, not in the nature of things, but primarily in the good pleasure of the Lawgiver, and which never would have called for obedience had not a special law to that effect been given. I do not deem it necessary to cite authorities to support the foregoing statement, for, as far as I know, no one would think of disputing it. These definitions may be more briefly expressed thus: A moral duty is an act [illegible] of us by the very relation we sustain to the world about us, whether an express command concerning it has been announced or not; while a positive duty is an act not required until a special and peremptory command enjoining it has been announced.

The wrongfulness of murder, of lying, of stealing, etc., is plainly revealed in the relation of man to [illegible] before any formal command concerning [illegible] issued forth, their sinfulness [illegible] afterwards. On the other hand, such observances as circumcision, offering sacrifices of certain kinds at particular times, baptism, etc., do not find the reason of their existence in the constitution of nature, but solely in the fact that for wise purposes the Everlasting Father saw fit to cause them to be instituted, and commanded them to be regarded. In the former case the duties exist even in the absence of a specific command. The latter become duties only by virtue of such specific command.

The important question now is, under which kind of law is the Sabbath obligation to be ranked? Now, I submit that in regarding the Sabbath command to be a moral law, our S. D. friends are greatly in error; yet on that erroneous classification they base much of their most confident reasoning. The Sabbath command belongs to positive law, not moral. Nature points to no sacredness of the seventh day above the others; it teaches no more concerning a seventh-day rest, or seventh-day worship than it does about baptism, or the Lord's supper. Had not the will of the Creator found expression in a definite command regarding the day, the special observance of it never would have been a duty; and when the command concerning it has been given, thus creating the duty, the extent of the duty, and the duration of the obligation are to be understood by the words of the command, and the accompanying regulations.

The advocates of the Seventh-day Sabbath have much to say that is true concerning moral law, as to its universality, perpetuity, and unchangeableness, and then seek to carry their point by assuming, (in the face of the well-settled, and generally recognized distinction between moral and positive laws) that the observance of the Sabbath is a part of those moral laws which are founded in the very constitution of nature, and having shown that a moral law is of perpetual obligation, they then unwarrantably assume that such is the fact concerning the Sabbath law. I trust my readers will pardon me, if I ask them to give careful attention to my statement of the distinction between moral and positive laws, for by clearly recognizing that distinction, the fallacy that pervades much of the S. D. literature will be readily perceived.

I stated at the outset that in the article to which I am in a manner replying there was a fallacy and an assumption. The assumption I have pointed out, and shown its falsity. The fallacy, like the assumption, pervades many of the S. D. arguments, and is this, failing to distinguish between the abolition of a duty, and the abolition of a code of law. This article in the Advent Review confounds the two completely, yet on this failure to distinguish, the writer bases a large part of his reasoning. He argues as though the abrogation of the ten commandment code would absolutely annul all the duties therein enjoined; and also argues that as all recognize some of the duties which are commanded therein as binding, therefore every duty enjoined thereby is now binding.

The following considerations will, I think, cause the fallacy of such reasoning to appear. A code of law may or may not create the duties it enjoins, and hence those duties may or may not continue after the code is abrogated. Whether they cease or not depends upon the nature of the duty, and whether it was and is a duty prior to and independent of any particular enactment of law. This code of law in question, the ten commandments, did not create any of the moral duties it enjoined, neither would the cessation of the code, as such, cause those duties to expire. The only obligations which would be affected by the abolition of the code would be those duties which [illegible] duration of which was expressly limited by some provision connected with that code; such duties, having their origin in that special enactment of law, would naturally expire with that code and cease to be duties, except some succeeding enactment should re-establish the obligations; but even then, the subsequent duty would not exist by reason of the command in the original code, but by virtue of its re-enactment in the succeeding dispensation.

This point may be clearly apprehended by means of a simple illustration. A century ago this country was governed by English law, but when the independence of the colonies was established, and the new government inaugurated, that law was abolished so far as its jurisdiction over American citizens was concerned, they being under no obligation to obey any of its requirements. If an objector were to ask, "Can an American citizen kill, and steal, and commit perjury, now that the English law, which forbids those acts, is abolished?" I would answer, "Of course not. The government under which he lives prohibits those and other wrong deeds, and he is equally restrained from committing them. If he commits crime, he will be tried, not by English law, but by American." When told that the code of law written upon the two tables of stone is abolished, the startled and fallacious objector says, "Are men at liberty, then, to worship idols, and covet, and steal, and kill?" The question almost prompts a smile by reason of its sophistry, while the answer is made, "Such acts are as wrong now as ever, and are forbidden under the Christian dispensation, not, however, by the Sinaitic code, which has no jurisdiction in the matter, but by the law of nature, and by the law of Christ, and by the words which He hath spoken shall men be judged in the last day." (John 12: 48.)

These moral duties existed during the ages before the law of the ten commandments was announced, and characters of righteousness were built up in obeying them. The law from Sinai was a proclamation which announced certain fundamental moral duties, always requiring observance, but it did not cover the whole ground of moral duty, because with two exceptions its commands were all negative, telling what should not be done, rather than giving affirmative instruction in holiness. It was a law given to a nation, given for a specified time, and its abrogation, as a code, while causing the obligation to observe those commands to cease, so far as that special enactment is concerned, would not affect the existence of the moral duties themselves, which would require observance after the annulling of that code even as they required observance before it was announced. The fallacy of the argument is in not distinguishing the essential difference between the Sabbath command and the moral law; then, in stating the perpetual obligation of the moral law, even apart from the commandments, and then claiming the Sabbath law as a part of the perpetual moral law, and therefore perpetually binding even independent of the writing upon the table of stone. All who are familiar with S. D. writers know that the perpetual obligation of moral law is one of the principal propositions on which they seek to support the present and perpetual duty of S. D. worship. I trust the foregoing review is clear enough to show that what is true of moral duties as to their perpetual obligation is not true of positive duties, and that the Sabbath-keeping duty belongs to the latter class, and not to the former; and therefore that all the wise and true things which may be said about the obligatoriness of moral laws have no weight or force when applied to the Sabbath command.

The Seventh-day theory rests upon a frame-work of unwarranted assumptions. It assumes there was a duty to observe the Sabbath ages before the law relating to it was announced. It assumes an unscriptural and fictitious division of the Mosaic law into moral and ceremonial, and then assumes as a part of the moral law a command which plainly is essentially distinct in nature from the moral law. It assumes that to abolish a code of law which embodies certain prior existing duties would result in the abolition of those duties, whose existence is altogether independent of that code. It assumes that the observance of the first day of the week as a day of worship and rest instead of the seventh, is "the mark of the beast," when "the beast" did not exist until centuries after the apostolic church, with whom the observance of "the Lord's day" (as the first day of the week was called,) began, and assumes that those who turn to Jesus Christ for a knowledge of duty, in accordance with the prediction of Moses of the Prophet to be raised up in after time, and in obedience to the command of God, "Hear ye him," shall fail of salvation unless they also obey the law of a superceded dispensation, and yield obedience to a covenant, good in its day, but which now "gendereth to bondage."

To all such assumptions, I dare reply, "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own Master he standeth or falleth. . . . He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. . . . So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

CRIME IN GERM.

BY M. MARSHALL.

Thou shalt not kill.—Ex. 20: 13.
Out of the heart proceedeth murders.—Matt. 15: 19.
Thou shalt not steal.—Ex. 20: 15.
Out of the heart proceedeth thefts.—Matt. 15: 19.
Thou shalt not bear false witness.—Ex. 20: 16.
Out of the heart proceedeth false witness.—Matt. 15: 19.

As addressed to a Christian people these commands would seem to be out of place. They would form excellent texts for a prison Chaplain, who has around him the very outcasts of society, but surely not for distinct religious profession. What if, after all, we be convicted of the very crimes which we shudder to mention? What if there be a murder which belongs strictly to a region which lies beyond the clutches of the law? What if there be a theft of the tongue, as well as of the hand? What if in daily talk we commit perjury in the court of God?

It is only possible, to some people, to get a clear idea of the spirituality of God's law by moving backward, step by step, from broad, vulgar, detectable crimes to the passion which inspired them, and from the passion to the secret, outspoken motive, which is, in the sight of God, the crime itself. "Thou shalt not steal." When is a man a thief? when he is in the act of picking your lock, or not until he has quite got into your house? Or was he a thief even at a point before he came to the lock; say, for example, when he took up his tools in his own house? or even at a point before that, when, in the secrecy of his own heart, he resolved to rob you? Not until he took your property was he a social thief; but he was a spiritual thief the moment he resolved to take it.

Human law takes notice of acts, not of dispositions; God's law determines everything by the motive or purpose which leads to action.

1. "Thou shalt not kill." Killing is not mere blood-shedding. Anger without cause is murder. Oppression of the weak is murder. Depriving a man of the means of getting a livelihood, to gratify revenge, is murder. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer."

2. "Thou shalt not steal." A man may rob God, as well as his neighbor. He who withholds just praise is a thief. He who detracts from the just honor of his fellow-man is a thief. ("He who filches from me my good name, robs me of that which not enriches him, but makes me poor indeed.") He who vows and does not pay is a thief.

3. "Thou shalt not bear false witness." False witness is lying. [illegible] what is lying? You may repeat the very [illegible] of a speaker, and yet misreport him [illegible]. By putting upon his words an em[illegible] his own. You infuse into the emph[illegible] own passion or purpose. Again, [illegible] sister is not enjoying [illegible] Christian feeling towards anoth[illegible] sister, a supposition or inference [illegible] often circulated as a fact, and the re[illegible] is just as disastrous as if they had to[illegible] a direct falsehood. This commandment applies to that manner of lying, as well as to the direct falsehood; for this example only bears the form of an apology for one. Remember, when a person speaks, the words are his, the tone is yours. He who tells an incomplete tale, involving the reputation of another, bears false witness. So does he (negatively) who lacks courage to defend an injured man, for whom he could say a word of explanation.

Now, strange as it may seem, the three crimes of which we have been speaking are spiritually similar, and almost identical. He who kills steals life; he who steals life is prepared to bear false witness; he who bears false witness both steals and kills. As therefore sin is, in the sight of God, a question of the heart, and not merely a question of the hands, there arises an inquiry of the keenest practical interest—How are we to reach the disease which is consuming our spiritual life? We cannot reach it. Is it, then, never to be reached? When we put this question in earnest, we are prepared to hear the glorious gospel. We have only to see ourselves as we really are, to see our need of the sacrifice, and our dependence upon the Spirit.

[We consider the above worthy of special notice, and its sentiments of prayerful consideration.—Ed.]

HAVE SAINTS ANY GOSPEL?

BY FRANK BURR.

Not long since I heard Rev. Geo. D. Boardman, of Philadelphia, say in public that saints have no gospel. "The gospel is for sinners; there is none for saints," said he. And I concluded also from the tenor of his further remarks that he would teach the thought that the only reason Christians might have hope is because they are yet sinners. But not to argue the question of saints being sinners or not, I thought of the other question, "Have the saints no gospel?"

There were saints in the days of the apostle Paul (See Col. 1: 2) and there are some living now, but are such without any gospel? Gospel signifies "good news," or "God's speech." Is there no good news for saints? Have they no promises from God to cheer them onward? Or have they entered into all the felicity of heaven, and have nothing to anticipate or hope for?

The gospel for sinners is the glad tidings of a sacrifice made for their sins, and the atonement through the Lord Jesus, whereby they may have their hearts purged from sin, and be cleansed from guilt by "the blood of the Lamb." Sinners can be justified through faith. That is the glad tidings, the good news for them. Jesus has come to suffer for sinners, "the just for the unjust," and this is the gospel for sinners.

But this is not all the good news contained in the "gospel of God." There is to be a second advent of "the same Jesus," and the part of the gospel which declares this "good news" is for the saints. Jesus came once into the world to save sinners; He is coming again to save the saints. Dr. Boardman professes to believe this. How can he then preach no gospel for saints? The people of God, sanctified through the Holy Spirit and the truth of God, have a glorious gospel in which [illegible] may continually rejoice. It is the [illegible] advent of Jesus Christ. Without [illegible] saints would have no gospel, no[illegible] Without the second coming of [illegible] would [illegible]tion, and the apostle de[illegible] case "They also which [illegible] Christ are perished." [illegible]

Thus the gospel has t[illegible] penitent sinners and the [illegible] saints. This is the way [illegible] records it. And the glorious [illegible] arrangement to sanctified believers is [illegible] in the future things which eye hath [illegible] seen nor ear heard, things of life, joy and glory, are prepared for those who love God. The eye of the penitent sinner amid the darkness of his sinful heart is turned to the cross of Jesus. The eye of the saint whose heart is illumined (2 Cor. 4: 6) is directed to the glory, the crown and the kingdom. The saint has entered the strait gate, passed the hill Calvary, and before him is the Celestial City. The gospel is good news to him of a heavenly home, the company of all the saints, and the welcome of the Redeemer.

Yes, there is a gospel for saints. For us awaits the glory and crown of an eternal home in the kingdom of God. In the "full assurance of hope we may press our wearied feet outward, knowing that soon we shall shake off the dust of earth, and enter upon the glad fruition of our glorious home.

Portland, Me.

THE shortest and surest way to live with honor to the world is to be in reality what we would appear to be; and, if we observe, we shall find that all human virtues increase and strengthen themselves by the practice and experience of them.

LOVE.

BY A. G. GORDON.

"Love is the fulfilling of the law." "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And now, as in Christ's day, some will say, "And who is my neighbor?" Some have undertaken to prove by the incident that Christ related, of the man who fell among thieves and was befriended by the Samaritans, that we are not commanded to love as ourselves, or regard as neighbors, only such as show a neighborly spirit. This is inferred because the Samaritan is called the neighbor, therefore love as thyself men like him; but those unlike, him love less [illegible]

Christ said, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." "For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?"

It is no great evidence of piety to see any one do good to them that are friendly. It would not have taken a great amount of grace to have caused that man who fell among thieves to have been willing to do a similar favor to the Samaritan, under like circumstances. That is the principle the world adopts as right: Do good to those who do good to us, and evil to those who do us evil. Of course there are those who do not come up to even this. "But who is my neighbor?" Did not the Samaritan answer that question? He showed that he was a neighbor to the man in trouble, and also that the man in trouble he regarded as his neighbor by showing kindness in accordance with the command, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Did not the Samaritan show this love as plainly as could be shown?

But, according to the theory of some, he was under no obligation to do so, because the man among thieves probably was a stranger to him, and never did him any kindness. Jesus says, "Go and do thou likewise." Do how? Some say, Go and love as thyself them that have done you a favor. I think He meant, go and show mercy to the suffering, whether friends or foes; and so obey the injunction, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

The love of God through Jesus Christ our Lord is too high and broad and deep to be embraced in any such narrow bounds as those set by the human understanding. I thank God that there is a love set forth in the gospel which is broad enough to embrace every creature,—a love that is not circumscribed by creeds or sectarian walls, [illegible] or color; but it is good will to all mankind.

"Do good unto all as ye have opportunity," is the great command. To be sure there are those we love as brethren; but all with whom we come in contact I think are embraced in the list of neighbors. When we attempt to say that we have a right to love any one less than ourselves, we are showing that old spirit of selfishness which amounts to almost positive hatred of the human family, and which certainly is not the spirit of Christ. While we were even sinners, He commended His love toward us by dying for us.

EXTREMES.—No. 2.

BY SOPHIA CLEMONS.

People find it easier to go to extremes than to take a medium course. A well balanced mind is one of the rarities of humanity. To what extremes will not the mind of people attain in this age of reckless daring. Extremes among the learned and unlearned are seen. Scientific men are not content to investigate what is spread out before them, but they seem to have gone crazy to peer into the mysteries of the past, and seek to analyze the elements that hung around the earth in the morn of creation. They are not content to study into the scientific structure and nature of earth's surface, but must needs dig deeper, and learn if possible what is in the very heart of earth. They go to earth's extreme limits, and there make scientific investigations until their mind penetrates the inner world, and brings its hidden mysteries to light.

They tell us we walk earth's surface with molten rocks rolling just under our feet, and with lightning's blaze above our heads; and there are gases enough in our bodies, and phosphorus enough in our brain and bones [illegible] poison; taking in at every breath [illegible] with a slight change of form, [illegible] our instant destruction; and under [illegible] and strong sunbeams, which in themselves have strength to kill. We walk amid these tremendous physical forces in safety, because they are in balance one against another; because a greater than they—one whom science calls law and whom faith calls God—holds them under perfect control, and they do His bidding. What a wonderful change have a few years seen! How many questions which have been regarded by scientific men as forever beyond the scope of knowledge, are now their cherished subjects of investigation.

Men and earth are rapidly ripening toward a final climax. The geologist is no longer satisfied to know what forces are at work on earth's crust, but demands the knowledge of the beginning of earth itself. The physiologist cannot accept the living frame and its laws of vital forces for his study, but he asks how life begun, and why? Politicians are not satisfied short of extreme radicalism, and they carry a point so far that each opponent becomes disgusted with the other in proportion as the one is the exact counterpart of the other's folly. Everything mystical, unnatural, and of obscure meaning, is received with unwonted zest, and everything profound is acknowledged as truth. Simplicity does not seem compatible with truth. Scarcely any are exempt from going into extremes, either in thinking or acting. Some of us talk too much; some too little. Some lack caution, and run into foolish errors; some are so cautious they fall into the other extreme. Misers go to one extreme, and prodigals to the other. Some have a religious zeal that borders on fanaticism; while some have only the name to live, and in fact are more dead than alive in the work of salvation. Some run into the extreme of eating and drinking to excess, and kindred indulgences; while others are radically the reverse. Let us, as Christians, try to draw a medium line, and walk by it. Let us hold every element of our being in check that tends to extreme results. And we cannot do it of ourselves. It is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

THE SIXTH SEAL.—Rev. 6: 12—17.

BY V. P. SIMMONS.

1. "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake."

Nov. 1, A. D. 1755, the earth was visited by an earthquake that belted the world, its dire effects being felt in every grand division of our planet. Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, and even Oceanica felt its shock. History records no such terrible earthquake before or since in the carefully prepared list of such convulsions of nature; no other so general in extent, destructive in effect, so awful in waste of human life.

In about eight minutes sixty thousand persons perished in Lisbon, Portugal, a tidal wave of fifty feet or upwards having rolled in from the sea. The largest mountain in Portugal rocked and split asunder, the shock extending to even the north and west parts of Europe, thence southward along the coast of Spain and Northern Africa, the tidal wave increasing in size for hundreds of miles as it extended southward. St. Ubes was swallowed up in the sea. Ten thousand persons perished in the thinly settled portion of Morocco. Twelve cities of northern Africa more or less felt the dreadful effects of this great earthquake.

Concerning its effects upon Asia, one historian mentions five hundred and twelve cities that sadly suffered from the stroke. Says another historian, "This remarkable earthquake was felt in the north of Europe and the northern United States (then colonies), and even the western great lakes of North America were agitated by it." The West India islands, a part of South America, [illegible] sea, felt its vibrations.

2. "And the sun became black as a sackcloth of hair."

A. D. 1780, May 19th, from 10 A. M. through the remainder of the day, occurred the greatest dark day on record, and that, too, in the absence of any eclipse. Farmers left the fields, and retired to their homes; fowls went to roost; many people thought that the day of judgment was at hand. History abounds with conversations and incidents connected with "the dark day." The sun before disappearing had a dark and smoky appearance. For particulars, read "Life of Edward Lee," "Gage's History of Rowley," "History of Connecticut," etc.

3. "And the moon became as blood."

The night succeeding the dark day, towards morning the moon looked like clotted blood.

A. D. 1822, this sign in the heavens was seen in the old world. Mr. Beadle, missionary at Alepppo, says of this event, "On the night of the earthquake there was something peculiar in the atmosphere. The moon appeared as red as blood. This g[illegible] alarmed the inhabitants who were [illegible]ally crying out, 'Now we shall hear [illegible] pet sound, and the dead will rise [illegible] of judgment has arrived!'"—"Litch[illegible]sition," vol. 1, page 153; also the "[illegible]ary Herald" of June 1842.

4. "And the stars of heaven fell [illegible] earth, even as a fig tree cast[illegible] her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."

Evening of November 13, 1833, for five and a half hours appeared "the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."—Prof. Olmsted.

Said an eye-witness of this scene: "The [illegible] tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one. Those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell towards the north; those which appeared in the west fell towards the west; and those which appeared in the south (for I went out of my residence into the park), fell towards the south. And they fell not as the ripe fruit falls—far from it! but they flew; they were cast like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when under a violent pressure it does break its hold, it flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force, but each one falls on its own side of the tree. Such was the appearance of the above phenomena to the inmates of my house." (Henry Dana Ward, of New York, in the "Journal of Commerce," November 15, 1833, two days after the event.)

These astronomical signs were predicted by Joel, Jesus and John. By each they are represented as appearing "before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." Joel 2: 31.

Says Jesus, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24: 29. The great tribulation had ended before the darkening of the sun; and the second and shorter tribulation came just before the falling of the stars.

John Wesley published his Notes on the New Testament A. D. 1754, only one year before the "great earthquake" which opened the sixth seal. In his comments upon Rev. 6: 13, he says, "'And the stars fell to, or towards the earth.' Yea, and so they surely will, let astronomers fix their magnitude as they please." The spirit of prophecy seemed to rest upon Mr. Wesley, for the facts are significant that astronomers had no knowledge in advance of either of these phenomena. The signs in the sun, the moon and the stars were above human wisdom. Bible believers might look for them in advance, but scientific men had no data by which they could predict what only "the (spiritually) wise shall understand."

I am well aware that even now some good men question this application of prophecy, but I cannot, coming as these events do at the close of the centuries of tribulation of the church, and quickly following the great earthquake, and so literally fulfilling in every part the predictions concerning them, they commend themselves to our candor and credence. Yea, more, upon these clear evidences of their fulfillment, rests the faith and confidence of thousands of sober-minded Christian men and women who love and look for the second coming of Christ in the [illegible] heaven.

N[illegible] walk by the [illegible] history. [illegible] uninspired [illegible] the word of [illegible] lowed is the gr[illegible]ecy. If we have [illegible] conclusions of fulfil[illegible] rashness accompany u[illegible] main of the weeping Seer, [illegible] who prayed and sighed and fasted and waited, but rashly guessed at nothing.

With the commencement of Rev. 6: 14, all is future; but may we not follow the same rule of interpretation? Where symbols are given, if explained, the explanations are literal. Where no symbols are given, all is literal, but even still, for fear we shall misapply or misplace a literal prophecy, the language of inspiration should chiefly be used in [illegible] a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places." How suggestive is the language of David in connection with this verse: "Of old hast Thou laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but Thou shalt endure, yea all of them shall wax old like a garment; and as a vesture shalt Thou change them, and [illegible] shall be changed." Psa. 102: 25 [illegible] tion is repeated by Pa[illegible] Is it possible that [illegible] seal is this mighty [illegible] the hea[illegible] rows fr[illegible] some [illegible] Isaiah [illegible] be di[illegible] tog[illegible] moved [illegible] was no ma[illegible] heavens were fled. [illegible] place was a wilderness, and [illegible] thereof were broken down at the [illegible] of the Lord, and by His fierce anger." Jer. 4: 23–26.

Another, the prophet Haggai, who above all others could combine blunt fearless[illegible] and grandeur of diction with terseness, declared, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." Haggai 2: 6, 7.

The sixth seal is pre-eminently [illegible] from its commencement [illegible] ical convulsions. It is the seal [illegible] the death throes of a groaning creation, [illegible] "the whole creation groaneth and [illegible] in pain," just previous to deliverance, [illegible] a superlative degree. Then comes [illegible] sire of all nations," a personal Christ in the clouds of heaven, while earthly potentates, great men, rich men, as well as bond men, "hide themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;" but, alas! they prove the sad prophecy of Jeremiah, "Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of the mountains." Fleeing hills and tumbling mountains shield them not, "for the great day of His wrath is come." If our line of argument does [illegible] prove the judgment nea[illegible] greatly mistaken this whe[illegible] but if it does, then wo[illegible] voice from Patmos, "Wh[illegible] stand?"—Bible Banner.

ALL professing Christians [illegible] ber that the foundations of all [illegible] are laid in righteousness, hone[illegible] and holy living, and that no degr[illegible] ity in church work, or of liberality [illegible] to Christian enterprises, however [illegible] can exempt them from the obligation to [illegible] integrity in every relation of life. [illegible] accepts no bribes or substitutions in duty. The only religion valuable in His sight is that practical kind which obeys the golden rule, is proof against all temptations to business "crookedness," gives full weight and measures, is as scrupulous "on change" as in church, and involves thorough soundness of heart and life.—Sel.

[illegible]LNESS.

[illegible] the signs which would [illegible] coming, said, "And [illegible] in the sun, and in the [illegible] stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's heart's failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke 21: 25, 26.

Prominent among this cluster of signs is men's fearfulness, produced by their anticipations of coming disastrous events. This fearfulness is evidently not so much among the ignorant and superstitious as among the learned, who have studied into [illegible] the fact that [illegible] fears are well grounded, being caused by expectation of events which "are coming." From this fact we should suppose that the leading class, expressing this alarm, will be the learned scientists or savants, whose great study is to learn what may be expected by what has taken place and by what is transpiring.

That just such fears as expressed by the Saviour are now filling the hearts of many, [illegible] learned, is a known fact. That [illegible] caused by looking after [illegible] expect will come on the [illegible] expected things are, [illegible] said will [illegible] also a fact. [illegible] will connect [illegible] of the [illegible] and plan[illegible] will in[illegible] calam[illegible] pro[illegible] [illegible], "Men's hea[rts failing them for fear, an]d for looking [after those] things which are coming on th[e earth]: [because; on account of] the [powers of] heaven shall be shaken." Luke [illegible] The language certainly expresses the [illegible] that the fears will be caused by the heavenly disturbances.

Another noteworthy fact connected with these sublime predictions is, that Inspiration has given the events in this grand cluster of signs in their consecutive order, each of the prophets having presented them in the same order. The sign in the moon is never placed before that in the sun, nor after that in the stars, but invariably between them, thus showing that their order of occurrence was expressed as well as their character. By this rule the sign of fearfulness will be the last to be manifested, and this is confirmed by the Saviour's next expression—"And then [at that time] shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." v. 27. This proves that in connection with the past sign, or fearfulness, the glorious appearing will take place.

That this last sign is now being remarkably developed, is to us clearly and surely manifest. There is with all men an indefinable impression that some grand and revolutionary events are impending. Some men are looking with an anxious gaze at one [illegible] while others, like sleeping sen[tinels] [illegible] to other quarters from their [illegible] reporting storm-clouds and [illegible] tempests. These uninspired [illegible] report many very vague and [illegible]ings, but in the main prophetic [illegible] some unprecedented fearful events [illegible] they all agree.

[illegible] below extracts from the pe[n of Pr]of. A. C. Grimmer, published in a [illegible] paper, and sent us by Bro. Leslie, [illegible] the subject of the coming perihelia [illegible] of the four great planets, and his opinion as to its results upon the earth. We do not publish this because we endorse all he has said as true, but to show that learned men are fearfully anticipating coming events just as Jesus foretold. The article is headed, "TIMES OF TROUBLE COMING SUCH AS THE WORLD NEVER SAW." Daniel says, "There shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to the same time." Chap. 12: 1. Professor Grimmer says:

"It is well understood that the perihelia for the four great planets—Jupiter, Uranus, Neptune and Saturn—will be coincident in 1880. . . . The effects which this conjunction will produce are momentous. From 1880 to 1887 will be one universal carnival of death. No place on earth will be entirely free from the plague. The Pacific coast will not suffer anything in comparison to other portions of the globe. The coincidence of these planets in perihelion will always produce epidemics and destructive diseases. Three of these planets are malifics, and Jupiter, although a benefic, produces evil through association; or technically by conjunction with the others.

Every drop of water in the earth will be more or less poisonous. The atmosphere will be foul with noisome odors. . . . From the far East the pestilential storm will sweep, and its last struggle will end in the far Western countries. In 543 and 1665 three of the planets, two of which were malifics (Mars and Saturn) were in perihelion, and Jupiter, though a benefic, brought evil through association. Now 542 and 1665 were the worst plague eras of which the world has any record. From 542 to 546 it has been estimated that from 75,000,000 to 120,000,000 victims suffered death by the plague. ('Gibbons' History,' vol. 3, chap. 14; also 'Cousins' History Rome,' vol. 2, p. 178.)

In 1720 Mars and Saturn were in perihelion and in the sign Virgo, and 52,000 thousand inhabitants died in the city of Marseilles in less than five weeks. In 544, ten thousand died each day in Constantinople. Alexandria (Egypt) lost in 542 50,000, and in 543 80,000 of her inhabitants by the plague. But as bad as were those times, they will only approximate the horrors of seven years many of us are doomed never to witness."

"Asia will be nearly depopulated, and the islands that border Asia will suffer frightfully from the scourge. The countries that join the North-eastern portion of Asia will first suffer the ravages of the plague. Russia will be the first European nation that will suffer." * * *

"There will come storms and tidal waves that will swamp whole cities; earthquakes that will swallow mountains and towns; and tornadoes that will sweep hundreds of villages from the face of the earth; mountains will tremble, totter and fall into sulphurous chasms; the geography of the earth will be changed by volcanic action; mountains will toss their rocky heads up through the choicest valleys; valleys will appear where mountains formerly stood; skillful marines will be lost in the ocean, owing to the extraordinary variations of the compass; navigators will grow pale with alarm at the capricious deflexture of the needle; volcanoes that have been dormant for centuries will awaken to belch forth their lava with more violence than when in their pristine vigor, rain-falls will deluge valleys, and mountain streams will enlarge their beds and become mighty torrents; fires will start spontaneously and devastate whole forests; great fires will occur in many cities, and some will be totally destroyed; there will be remarkable displays of electricity, frightful to witness."

"Islands will appear and disappear without any apparent cause; the navigator's charts will prove almost a detriment instead of an aid, owing to the sudden changes of ocean currents, temperature, and surroundings."

"Every mountain and island were moved out of their places." Rev. 6: 14.

"The bird of the air, the beast of the field, and even the fish in the sea. will be [illegible] will die."

"The beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven; yea, the fishes of the sea also shall be taken away." Hosea 4: 3.

"I will consume man and beast; I will consume the fowls of heaven, and the fishes of the sea." Zeph. 1: 3.

"I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form, and void; and the heavens, and they had no light. I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of heaven were fled. Jer. 4: 23 to 25.

"After the black death there will be two years of fire which will rage with fury in all parts of the world from 1885 to 1887. These fires will be the means of annihilating every germ of disease. In fact every city or portion of city in which the plague appears should be burned to the ground. This will destroy the scourge. Nothing but fire can do it." "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." 2 Peter 3: 7.

From 1880 to 1886 the electricity of this earth will be deadly, owing to the malific influence of Saturn and Uranus upon our [atm]osphere. During the black death the [illegible] wonderful celestial phenomena will be [seen]. For weeks the sun will appear as [illegible] blood, and terrible convulsions will [illegible] in that great body. The sun will dis[charge] oceans of flaming hydrogen gases, [which] will roll in tumultuous billows hundreds of thousands of miles from its centre. [Tre]mendous showers of meteors will fall to the earth and remain in an incandescent state for hours. Dense black clouds will veil the sun for days, and the moon will not shed as bright or steady light as before those dreadful days. 'That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness.' Zeph. 1: 15. The whole heavens and earth will tremble at the awful, continuous reports of thunder—lasting frequently for hours; blinding flashes of lightning will illume the black sky; people will scream with horror at the fantastic shapes the lightning will assume."

"There were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and a great hail." Rev. 11: 19. "The plague is not only what the perihelia brings us, but it will be accompanied by war, discord, civil strife, floods, inundations; and, in seven-tenths of the world, drouth; and unless extraordinary provision is made to quell great uprisings, anarchy, with all its horrors, will reign." "There will be a war of classes—the rich will array themselves against the poor, and vice versa everywhere." "In the same day also will I punish all those that leap on the threshold, which fill their masters' houses with violence and deceit." Zeph. 1: 9. "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you." * * * "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." James 5: 1 and 4.

There is certainly one very remarkable fact connected with this article, written by Prof. Grimmer, who makes no allusion to the Bible, and perhaps does not believe in it, and that is, he does fearfully look for many of the identical events which God has taught us will come in the great day of His wrath. This is exactly in harmony with Christ's prediction when He says, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." They will look for the things which will come.

OUR CAMPMEETINGS.

Some of our campmeetings and the record of them is written and sealed to be opened and read very soon. Many of them are coming, and their record will soon be written, either to the joy or sorrow of all who attend them. These meetings will certainly serve to increase or diminish piety in each individual who attends them. They are large meetings, and bring together and concentrate strong influences, which must operate powerfully for good or for evil on those present. Therefore it is very important to learn how to obtain and use the saving influences, and how to reject those of evil tendencies.

Whatever principles prevail and control men at any period, always concentrate and act powerfully at all great gatherings of people; so that the forces for good are multiplied and also those for evil. When the forces tending to produce good preponderate, then the meeting is profitable; but if the superior force tends to evil, then large meetings are much more dangerous than smaller ones.

Satan's first effort at these meetings is to divide those who labor for good, thus lessening their power, and he also seeks to unite Pilate and Herod, so as to increase their power, thus throwing the balance of power on the side of evil.

A prevailing sentiment of this age is Liberalism, making the conditions of salvation so liberal that men can be saved with any kind of faith, or without any faith in half that God has revealed in His Word. It teaches that they can be saved by obedience or without obedience; by holiness or without it. This influence marches on to our camp-grounds in various uniforms, but each company wheels its guns upon straight, pointed, testing truth. Every gun in that division has some deadly missile to hurl at "present truth."

Another marked characteristic of our time is the prevalence of sensationalism, or the habit of impressing the mind by external objects, through the organs of sense more than through a knowledge of the invisible and unheard. People are influenced more by the preacher than by the knowledge of what is preached;—more by the tone of voice, eloquence of speech and exhibitions of sympathy, than by clear views of the Christ and kingdom presented.

People who have trained themselves in sensational enjoyment, and have such a morbid, carnal relish for it (and large meetings generally produce such volume and variety of this that great numbers of that class throng those places), care nothing about hearing a man preach unless he can in some way produce a sensation outside of clear gospel truth. Such persons become exceedingly happy if a man utters a jingle of words, expressing few ideas, and those disconnected, if he is sarcastic, denunciatory, jesting more than enlightening, dealing largely in affectation, and rehearsing fictitious stories instead of plain gospel truth. These persons are sensationalists, but do not know it. They will walk around the grounds, not knowing where to go, but if they hear a wild and unusual sound, they hasten to the place; and if there is anything novel or boisterous—anything to produce nervous excitement, they remain to enjoy it. Such people are liable to mistake sound for spirit, and emotion for gospel power.

Sensation may be distinguished from true gospel experience by the fact that the Spirit of God always acts in connection with intelligent contemplations of God and the objects of His revelations; while that which produces sensation always darkens such intelligence and presents lower objects for contemplation.

True gospel experience is as vivid and sweet, as purifying and happifying in the closet, where no charms meet the eye or greet the ear, and all earthly scenes and things are excluded, as in any other place on the earth. But the sensationalist never seeks the solitude of retirement from men and the world to get his peculiar enjoyment; but seeks it invariably in something he can see and hear.

It is true the Christian enjoys social life, but it is found on a different plane and sought by different rules. It is also quite true that the Spirit of the gospel often inspires earnest words, with full tone; but these always tend to increase intelligent thoughts of heavenly things, bringing our Lord Jesus Christ nearer and more vividly to view.

We do most earnestly desire that our Christian friends will contemplate these principles, and lay them to heart; and when you go to the coming campmeetings, flee from the sensational, and cling to the spiritual and holy, which alone will prepare us for the kingdom of God.

PROPHETIC TIME.

The reckless and rash dogmatism of speculating interpreters, who have evinced more zeal than wisdom, in computing the 2300 days, should not lead any to repudiate this mis-interpreted measurement of Heaven, nor to [illegible] church, only fit to be shunned [illegible] urement is just as good now as [illegible] mistakes had ever been made conce[rning it]. No truth should be abandoned, even if its mistaken friends may have abused it. Then why treat this God-given theme differently?

It has been foolishly argued that if this measurement was ever to be of service to the church, the inspired apostles would certainly have commented upon it. But this would militate against the revealed fact that this theme belongs to the "sealed" instruction given to the church, to be opened only in a specified chronological attitude, not reached in the apostles' days. Besides, it is not true that inspired men are inspired to understand all themes, instead of special themes, else one vision would be enough for one prophet for a life-time. Daniel was inspired on many themes, but not concerning the time of the captivity, for he "understood by books the number of years whereof the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the prophet that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 1, 2. Different inspired men do not necessarily receive light on the same topic.

"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick"; but let all be careful about throwing away or perverting Heaven's reckoning. Light now begins to shine more clearly.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS.

BY R. W. TURNER.

To the Editor of the Crisis and your many Readers:—For several months I have been receiving the Crisis, which found its way to me through the agency of my esteemed Bro. Joseph Prichard, of Crockett, Texas, and I have been reading this paper with an increasing interest; and though a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, I am constrained to say that I find there are many new ideas which have presented themselves to my mind, and I have not only referred them to my own court of reason, but have compared them with God's own teachings, and I find the key fits the lock. I am constrained to believe th[at] though this key has been covered long [in the] sand, yet it bears unquestionable [evidence] of having come from the same S[ource] which has emanated all truth. [illegible] living really in a progressive age, i[n whic]h new and astonishing facts are being [deve]loped; and though these developm[ents are ex]citing controversy, the most [illegible] broad contradiction, seasoned w[ith der]ision (which is the natural argument of those who would oppose the truth), old and long-established titles, the lawful possession of which has not been questioned for generations, are being dislodged, and truth is rearing her massive walls upon that ground upon which error has long and uninterruptedly flourished. Yes, mountains are falling, rivers are being turned, the great have suddenly become small, and the small have become great; and that power which the giant has failed to exert has been made manifest in the form of a child. The Lord is in it. The Lord hath wrought it.

The wheels of progress, which have hitherto been rolling in the long-established groove of popular sentiment, are now being transferred to the smelting furnace, to meet the demands of progress. Old implements, which, though they once bore the brands of X. L. C. R., are being put up at the world's sale, and sold at a nominal price; and it is only those who have no equipage that are the purchasers.

In conclusion I will add, that I consider that we have reached the sunset period of this world's history; the clock strikes five, and the last vessel of wrath is soon to be poured out upon the prosperity of this world; and though there may ring out voices of merriment, and peace and happiness may seem to have taken up their abode with the kings and princes of this world, yet soon, very soon, there will be heard the sad wails and lamentations—"Woe, woe is me, the day of my glory has departed."

A DARK OUTLOOK IN THE EAST.

The aspect of affairs in the East grows daily more troubled. The Albanian "insurrection" which has been fomented by the Turks, and strengthened both with men and arms by the connivance of the Constantinople authorities, has attained such proportions that Montenegro can secure no part of the territory allotted to her except by fighting for it as if for a fresh conquest. The Bulgarians are conspiring for the longed-for union with Eastern Roumelia, and the Bulgarian Assembly at a recent sitting voted a sum of money for Eastern Roumelia, which will be used for agitation and equipment. The Christian population of Armenia are regularly preyed upon by Kurdish brigands, for whose suppression no forces are available, and large sections of Asiatic Turkey are swept by famine, the disastrous results of which are concealed, as far as possible, by the Turkish authorities. The finances of the Empire are wrecked beyond recovery; its army is a mass of unpaid soldiery, many of whom have kept themselves alive only by beggary and plunder; and everywhere, on both sides of the Bosphorus, there is the same dreary spectacle of misgovernment and confusion, obstinacy and impotence. To these elements of disintegration there is now added the imminent probability of a war between Greece and Turkey. The boundary line suggested by the Berlin Supplementary Conference has been contemptuously rejected by the Turks, and the apathy long prevailing at Constantinople is broken by unmistakable preparations for war. Soldiers are being recruited, equipped and sent forward to the Greek frontier with all the rapidity consistent with the shattered finances and demoralized adminstration of the Empire, for the famous non possumus policy [illegible]te, which has been pretty persi[stently main]tained since the first Berlin [illegible] there is to be substituted a [illegible] and forcible resistance [illegible] contest, but if they are left [illegible] will make little headway [illegible], who even in their present dec[illegible] more than a match for them.

There [are tw]o alternatives open, in this emergency, [to the] great Powers of Europe. They can w[ait] and let things take their course, and [wai]t a while, when there have been mutual butcheries between the Greeks and Turks, the Montenegrins and Albanians, the Mussulmans and Christians, they can interfere to put a stop to them. Or by prompt, decisive and harmonious action they can avert the threatened strife and bloodshed and take the affairs of Turkey under their own administration. There are difficulties which are formidable enough, in either case, but the policy of immediate intervention is not worth [illegible] intervention [illegible] probably less costly than the other. It is not a question of intervention or no intervention, but of intervention now to avert the catastrophe, or by-and-by after the catastrophe has occurred. Granted that the dissolution of Turkey, and any scheme that can be suggested for its partition or administration, [illegible] Europe face to face with dangerous problems arising from the conflicting aspirations of the Powers; these problems will not become less dangerous but more so by delay. All parties are agreed that Turkey will accept no advice, and will act on no suggestion that is not backed by a display of force. Mr. Goschen, the new British Ambassador at Constantinople, expresses the same opinion as Sir Henry Layard, his predecessor, that nothing whatever can be looked for from Turkey in obedience to the wishes of Europe, unless Europe is prepared to enforce its demands by arms. The whole course of Turkey since the Berlin Treaty, her shiftings and evasions, and her failure to surrender any territory or make any reforms, supports this view, and all European statesmen are agreed in holding it. If fresh scenes of massacre and bloodshed and outrage in Turkey and the adjacent countries are to be averted, it will be necessary for the Powers to make an immediate demonstration of force. The present indications are that nothing short of this can prevent a bloody and distressful war, the issues and extent of which are shrouded in doubt.—Boston Journal.
